COOL HEAD SAVES LIFE

Presence of mind and a knowledge of what to do in an emergency often avert disaster, as was illustrated by the wife of a British official in India not long ago.

Seated at the table with her family, she felt a snake coil about her ankle. Instead of shrieking with terror and attempting to flee, she quietly told those seated at the table not to move, and directed a servant to place a bowl of milk on the floor.

Presently a large cobra glided out from under the table and approached the milk which is said to be for the reptile an irresistible bait and it was then killed by one of the men of the party.

The cobra is one of the deadliest snakes in the world, and while it does not attack people unless irritated, it is responsible for about 10,000 deaths each year in India alone. No antidote for cobra poison is known and death usually results in a few minutes after the victim is bitten.

The lady in question knew the danger and the self-control to do just as was necessary to save herself from certain death. Whether she would have exhibited the same composure had the intruder been a mouse is another question.

LOOKING AT WASHINGTON

BACK TO BARTER? MAY HELP COMMERCE GET A PHAMFLET OIL CHARGES AGAIN INVESTIGATION CERTAIN MORE ABOUT NORRIS

It is very interesting to learn that informal discussions have been taking place in regard to the possibility of international bartering of products of which there are embarrassing surpluses in many countries. Officials readily admit that the suggestion has been made. A proposal from British private sources to trade rubber for cotton, one from Japan to exchange silk for cotton and similar suggestions from Brazil and Cuba offer coffee and sugar respectively.

This would be quite an innovation in world trade but nothing other than getting down to fundamentals as far as commerce is concerned. There are difficulties in connection with the proposals, chiefly involving interference with normal trade, the question of storage and the problem of the ultimate disposition of the commodity obtained. Any supplies accumulated in large quantities through barter would have to be sold and there might be danger to existing business machinery, but at the same time such bartering to exchange large surpluses might start gain.

Both the Republican and Democratic National Committees have issued pamphlets dealing with the current issues of the Congressional campaign. We suggest that readers of this column write to Washington and secure copies of each party's utterances. Reading them will do no harm and, if one is somewhat of a philosopher, the political berrages may furnish some amusement.

A new oil land investigation is certain in view of the charges by Ralph S. Kelly, who has resigned as Chief of the field division of the General Land Office at Denver. He contends that the Department of Interior has failed to protect vast oil shale reserves in Western Colorado from exploitations by private oil interests who he says, have been granted "concession after concession" to the shale oil lands, whose value is in excess of $40,000,000,000.

Secretary Wilbur promptly ordered an investigation, after refusing to accept Kelly's resignation and suspending him from office. Mr. Wilbur denied that any leases for oil shale lands had been issued during the Hoover administration and stated that his department was making every effort to carry out a policy of oil conservation. It is a certainty that the charges of Mr. Kelly will bring on a thorough investigation by Congress.

Without regard to our domestic attitude toward the recent tariff bill it is quite apparent that the nations of the world intend to use retaliatory duties against the United States. A number of countries have made extensive tariff changes and others threaten to do so and it is quite plain that exports from the United States will feel the effect of this retaliation. Just to what extent our industries will be affected however, cannot be foretold at this time.

The nation was "somewhat interested" in the strange situation which arose in Nebraska when a relatively unknown grocer by the name of George W. Norris filed his candidacy for the United States Senate against Senator George W. Norris of the State. The plain intention being to prevent either from running on the ticket. Recently the senatorial committee, conducting an investigation into the matter under the leadership of Senator Nye, secured evidence tending to implicate Victor Seymour, who was working for the Republican National Senatorial Cam-

THAT progressive merchants persistently advertise their wares and, by so doing, have no "just collectors" to offer you.

Their stores are attractive and their goods conveniently displayed. It is a pleasure to buy from them. Their merchandise is made for dependable service. It is the kind they are proud to sell.

It is decidedly more convenient and economical to buy from the home merchants who advertise than it is from a peddler or a catalogue.

You can depend upon facts advertised by local merchants. Their quality and service never vary.

The real way to build a more prosperous city is to develop among the people a friendly feeling towards the local merchants who serve them—a real feeling of friendliness, a spirit of co-operation towards better business for the home city so every dollar earned there will stay in the community and work for all.

Local merchants will serve you the way you want to be served by giving you the best in quality and service.

palza committee, Denver, Colorado. Promptly upon reading press reports Seymour telegraphed his resignation.

COTTON AFFECTS ALL

Considered offhand, it might appear that the present plight of the cotton farmers affects only themselves, or at most only those portions of the country where cotton is the principal crop.

It requires but a little reflection, however, to understand that when the buying power of the cotton farmer is reduced, his ability to absorb the products of industry is likewise curtailed, and the manufacturers of all commodities, wherever located, are correspondingly affected.

The movement to find new uses for cotton, therefore, deserves the support of manufacturers of the North and East, and of the producers of any commodity whatsoever which finds a market in the cotton belt.

It is believed that cotton could be largely used instead of jute, of which we import 700,000,000 pounds a year, in the manufacture of cord, twine, hurlap, burlap and the like. Many articles of wearing apparel now made of other material might be satisfactorily fabricated from cotton. Government economists assert that use for an additional 2,000,000 bales of cotton a year might be found if the public generally would cooperate in the movement.

A greater consumption of cotton will benefit the whole country.

SEES BRIGHTER PROSPECTS

So many optimistic prophecies of improved business conditions have been made and failed that the public is naturally skeptical, and we do not blame it. However, here's another one, for what it is worth, from Secretary of Commerce Lamont.

"It is perfectly clear," the commerce secretary said in a statement, "that business on the whole has ceased a marked decline which was characteristic of a number of earlier months and there are some distinctly encouraging features." Lamont added that the most encouraging signs were the growth of export trade as revealed by August statistics and the distinct increase in retail trade in the country.

"The increase of exports during August," he said, "was more than customary this season. The growth already manifested in retail trade more than usually occurs at this season. Moreover the stocks of stores are exceptionally low and their purchasers from manufacturers and wholesalers will increase materially."

Lamont added that business is already buying raw materials ahead of the current consumption and that this was a natural reaction to the present low level of commodity prices. The government, the secretary said, is not responsible for the extra buying. "Every good business," he explained, "knows more about his business than any one possible can know and sound business men do not have to be told a low peak in commodity prices presents a signal for intelligent buying."

ENCOURAGING SIGNS

There is one bright ray of light that has been generally overlooked in all the pessimistic discussion of the business depression. The cost of living is now six per cent lower than it was last year at this time and at the lowest point since 1918. In other words, general wages of have been dropped more than a per cent without affecting the living power of the worker.

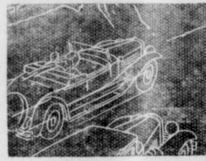

Also, it has been brought out by a number of experts that the employment trend, which was downward for close to a year, has taken upward turn. The coming winter very probably see industrial activity improving.

How to Raise Poultry

By Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S., St. Louis, Mo.

EGGS IS EGGS" BUT NOT FOR HATCHING

Great Care Cannot Be Observed in Selecting Eggs For Hatching—The Purpose Lies Much Of The Secret Of Successful Incubation.

Editor's Note—This is another of a series of 52 stories on poultry raised by the well known national authority, Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S., of St. Louis. The enclosures will appear in this paper, and readers are urged to read them daily and clip them out for reference.

"Eggs is pigs", according to the story by Ellis Parker Butler, is to a great many people eggs, regardless of the way in which they are to be used. In terms of eggs for any purpose but hatching, that view may be as good as any other, but eggs for hatching should certainly be selected with extreme care if best results are to be obtained. There is no great mystery about the process of making proper selection. On the contrary, it is a very simple matter. I have seen so much of random selection, however, that I am sure a few points on the subject will not be amiss. First of all, let me say what kind eggs not to use. Discard all eggs that are small, abnormally large, dirty, irregularly formed and cracked, rough, thin or double shells. I would especially warn everyone against accepting the common belief that large eggs are best for hatching. Years of careful experimentation and close observation of the work of others has led me to the average size egg of regular form and color is the best for hatching. The exact size will vary, of course, with different breeds. The same is true of the shape of the egg. I would judge the size of the eggs to use according to this advice and detailed instructions are not necessary.

The hatching egg should be sound and clean. It should be smooth, free from uneven or rough spots, should not be mottled or uneven of color; should not be thinner in one part than in another; should not have bumps, humps, or bulges; and should be as near the true egg shape as possible. A slight unevenness or variation from the ideal shape does not necessarily mean bad hatches, but if the unevenness is of such a kind you may use it, if noticeable, better put such eggs on the market or table use.

Many people it will come as a surprise when they learn that dirt on eggs should not be used. I speak from experience, however, when I say that such is the case. Slightly soiled eggs may be used if they are carefully cleaned by rubbing gently with a damp cloth or sponge.

That will not clean them, they should be put aside for other uses. Under no circumstances should eggs be washed thoroughly. The thorough wetting and hard rubbing will destroy nature's protective surface film, thus hastening evaporation of contents and allowing harmful bacteria to penetrate the porous shell. All eggs in any one hatch should be as near uniform as possible in weight and thickness, and should also be of approximately the same age and from the same type of fowl. Thin shelled eggs hatch more easily, as a rule, than thick shelled ones. White shelled eggs hatch more quickly than yellow ones. Leghorn eggs will hatch 24 hours sooner than those from Plymouth Rocks. It will, therefore, be easy to see why uniformity in all the ways just mentioned is desirable whenever practicable. If this rule is followed, practically all eggs will hatch at or very near the same time, thus far greater chance for complete success than would be possible where eggs of widely varying characteristics are mixed together.

I do not recommend the use of pullet eggs for hatching. All breeding hens should be of good size for the breed and from 1 to 2 years of age. If pullets are used at all for breeders, they should be well matured, lay good sized eggs and be mated to older roosters.

Another important factor that greatly influences the chances for successful incubation is the relative freshness of eggs. Those from 1 to 4 or 6 days old show little difference as to hatching quality, but after that they deteriorate rapidly. This is easily explained. A fresh egg contains just enough water to develop the embryo while it is gradually developing into a chick. As an egg shell is porous, the water will evaporate more or less rapidly, the exact degree depending on the temperature and relative humidity of the place in which the eggs are kept. After the natural internal moisture has passed out of the shell, there is no way on earth of restoring it in such a way that it can contribute to the building up of bone, muscle or nerve tissue in the baby chick. Exactly how long eggs may be safely held before their hatching qualities are seriously affected cannot be arbitrarily stated. It is worthy of note, however, that eggs commonly sold in the market invariably show a very high percentage of eggs successfully hatched in each setting, and they are often set when from 10 to 12 days old.

TO DEVELOPE POTASH IN LYNN COUNTY IS CURRENT RUMOR

Scouts Are Investigating The Potash Deposits In Lynn County Lakes

It is possible that development of potash deposits that underlie some of the lakes in Lynn county will begin at an early date, if current reports are to be given credit. It is said that a potash "scout" has been here recently and that negotiations are pending with a development company whereby operation is to begin soon if the deal goes through.

Tests made in some of the lakes of this county by competent geologists several years ago revealed the fact that huge quantities of potash underlie some of the lakes, according to official reports published at the time.

If these reports prove to be true and development is undertaken, it is probable that a large number of men will be employed in the work, which should bring a large payroll to Lynn County monthly.—Lynn County News.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

THE PURE IN HEART

International Sunday School Lesson for October 19 1930

GOLDEN TEXT: — "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." Matt. 5:8.

(Lesson Text: Luke 2: 25-39)

When the infant Jesus was forty days old his parents went up to Jerusalem to redeem him under the custom of the Jewish law. The ceremony of redemption was necessary because every first born son was supposed to be for the priest. To acknowledge this claim of God, and, where it was not to be literally carried out, parents presented the child to the priest and, after benedictions for the law of redemption and for the gift of the son, offered the redemption money.

Living in Jerusalem at this time was a man named Simon, described as righteous and devout. Some have identified him with a Rabbin but there is no certainty. Simon was "looking for the consolation of Israel," the coming of the promised Messiah. His life had been upon so high a spiritual plane that he expected to see the Savior before he died.

"It is striking to observe how the description of Simon's character expresses the aim of the whole Old Testament revelation," says Alexander Maclaren. "All that was meant by the preceding long manifestations through all these years was accomplished in the man. For hearken how he is described, "just and devout" that is the perfection of normal character, stated in the terms of the Old Testament "waiting for the Consolation of Israel," that is the ideal attitude which the whole of the gradual manifestation of God's increasing purpose realizes through the ages was intended to make the attitude of every true Israelite."

When he saw Jesus Simon recognized who he was and uttered the hymn known as "Nunc Dimittis," the first words of the Latin translation. Simon's spiritual faith was powerful enough to picture the consequences of this life. The revelation which came to Simon was possible because he had cultivated spiritual power. People cannot expect to understand great spiritual truth or live great spiritual lives if they make no effort to cultivate spiritual powers. Just as a trained athlete has to practice, so has one who would be strong spiritually.

Simon's faith saw in Jesus the redeemer of the world. "I cover the gifts of a sanctified imagination, which can look down long highways into distant futurity," writes J. H. Jowett. "For instance, when an apostle like Paul walks into imperial Rome, utterly unheeded and ignored, I would like the power of being able to foresee some of the amazing possibilities of that lonely entrance. When James Gilmour crosses the frontier into Mongolia, and sets his single plow to the upturning of the soil in that mighty land, I would have the eye that can see coming harvest, vast reaches of waving corn, shining ripe before the face of the Lord."

Simon blessed Joseph and Mary and in speaking to the latter said that "a sword shall pierce through thine own soul." Later on in life, as Mary stood at the foot of the cross upon which her son was dying and looked back over the tempestuous years of his ministry, she probably realized the truthfulness of Simon's prophecy. Strange as it may seem the coming of Jesus often-times means a struggle. As Samuel Cox says:

"The advent of Christ in the heart must resemble his advent in the world, must create a strife between the good and the evil in your nature; must disclose so much that is evil in you as to make you fear goodness to be beyond your reach. And the oftener Christ comes, the nearer he draws you, the more fully he enters into your life—the deeper will be your conviction of sin; of a trained and imperfect nature; till, at times, you feel as if a sword had been thrust into your very soul. This indeed is what he comes to you for; to separate between the evil and the good, to make you conscious of evils you did not suspect so conscious that you hate them and long to be delivered from them."

Another devout person who saw and recognized Jesus for what he was to be was Anna, a prophetess, who meeting the holy family in the temple gave thanks and testified concerning him to all who were looking for the redemption of Israel. Anna's example commends itself to Christians today. Surely, those of us who acknowledge Him, who have been reformed in faith by knowing what He has accomplished for the world during the centuries since His birth should greatly acknowledge Him and testify about Him to the world around us. This testimony should be not only in word but more primarily in deed. The example of an unselfish and righteous life is the highest tribute which anyone can give in honor of Jesus.

HOGS AND SOY BEANS

Feed soy beans wisely to fattening hogs, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Twenty-five per cent of soy beans fed with corn to fattening hogs will produce soft pork, and even considerably smaller proportions may cause lack of firmness. Recent tests by the Department of Agriculture and cooperating State experiment stations showed that 1 part of soy beans fed with as much as 12 parts of corn (or 7.7 per cent of soy beans in a corn-soybean ration supplemented by minerals) fed to fattening hogs tended to produce soft carcasses. This was when the initial weights of the pigs were 100 pounds or less and the daily gain did not exceed 1 pound. Initial weight and rate of gain, as well as feed, influence the softness of the pork. When the pigs weighed more than 100 pounds at the beginning and gained 1.3 pounds or more a day on this ration, most of the carcasses were firm. This suggests the use of the heavier and more thrifty pigs when this ration is to be fed on the farm.

LEGION FAVORS STATE INDUSTRIAL SURVEY

A good suggestion was made by the State convention of the American Legion recently at Austin. The Legion went on record as favoring a statewide industrial survey and a determined attempt to build industry within the State. A comment on this which is just now going the rounds of the weekly press, says: "The Legion's action is in line with the editorial position of a great majority of Texas' newspapers. More important even, it is in line with the economic requirements of the times. Texas will never achieve her highest destiny until industries are brought into the State to make proper use of the vast resources with which she has been endowed. At this time she stands in an especially good position to achieve this end. She has nominated a Governor in whom out-of-State industrialists impose confidence. Her Legislature evidences a disposition to tread industrially fairly. The determination to gouge, or to penalize prosperity is no more." All of which is well taken. An economic survey of the State, if made properly, would supply us with the precise economic facts about ourselves. And any economist who is well-informed about Texas already knows that such a survey would show abundantly that the economic activities of our people are not yielding the return which they should yield, judged by the situation in other States, and that we have not begun to make adequate use of our resources in the production of wealth. This is only another way of saying that it would show that the interests of all of the people of the State demand industrial development. The American Legion in taking such a stand expresses the sentiments of men who are among our very best citizens, for we have no better citizens, than the ex-service men. And the suggestion is in keeping with the need of the times.

MADE-TO-ORDER WEATHER

It is expected that in the near future we will be able to have "made-to-order weather" in our homes. For several years the gas industry has been developing small units which can be installed in homes at a moderate cost to control humidity and temperature, heating in winter and cooling in summer. Already many office buildings, theatres and the like have been fitted with automatic cooling apparatus. Experiments are now underway to combine the principles of gas heating with gas refrigeration. If successful, the weather will be of small importance to the modern home owner who will be able to live in perfect comfort at all seasons of the year.

Adelaide Lambert, Olympic and national swimming champion, won the 100-yard free-style event for women at the Riverside Cascades pool in New York.

Mrs. Mamie Jones, 48, of Richmond, Ind., who is the mother of 20 children, is said to be the youngest great-grandmother in the United States.

Boys' SOCIETY

MRS J. W. CAMPBELL, Reporter

JUNIOR CLASS STAGES HAY RIDE SATURDAY

One of the most amusing social events of the school year was the hay ride staged last Saturday evening by members of the Junior Class and their sponsor, Mrs. Nina V. Berry. According to the class reporter, the only hay present was in the Juniors' vocabulary as they rolled at onlookers on the streets.

After driving up and down the streets, the driver was directed to a street-lamp and there two families were organized. Wallace Ross and Alvis Tredway selected the members of their families, from the "preachy" grandmothers and obedient grandfathers to the twin babies who demanded all the attention of their devoted mamas and papas.

The two families then drove to the football field where the old maid aunts and the grandmothers spread a lunch of sandwiches, fruit, cookies, potato chips, and hot chocolate. The other members of the families played games until summoned to the table, and everyone "et hearty," according to Grandpa Hunt.

MRS. BEAN'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED WITH DINNER

Mrs. E. J. Bean's fiftieth birthday was celebrated last Sunday with a family dinner at the home of Mrs. Lula Campbell.

Misses Ruby Bradford and Geneva Bean baked and decorated an elaborate birthday cake topped with fifty small candies, which closed a delicious dinner.

YOUNG PEOPLES' SOCIETY ORGANIZED FRIDAY

A Cumberland Young Peoples' society was organized last Friday evening at a pleasant social hour held in the home of Rev. and Mrs. W. O. Parr.

Several hours were spent in old-fashioned games which were much enjoyed. The small children were given a room to themselves, and were allowed to amuse themselves in their own way.

Among other projects sponsored by the society will be the Father and Son banquet on November 11. After business matters were all discussed, delicious refreshments of cake and hot chocolate were served to the following: Messrs. J. and Mmes. Hal Singleton Jr., W. E. Singleton, Homer Rice, Sid Cather; Mmes. John Stokes and Ethel Singleton; Williams; Misses Leona Stokes, Edna Land, Florence, Jessie, and June Gary; Messrs. Wiley and Edgar and Melvin Moore.

Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Hood had as their guests over the week-end Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Collins of Carlsbad, N. M.

Messrs. and Mmes. Naymon Everett and W. H. Ritzenthaler were Tahoka visitors Sunday afternoon.

HUBBARDS ENTERTAIN WITH FORTY-TWO FRIDAY

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil B. Hubbard were hosts last Friday evening to a number of friends when they entertained with six tables of forty-two.

Attractive tallies directed the guests to their places and they were soon in the interesting game.

At a late hour dainty refreshments of pimento cheese sandwiches, olives and coffee were served to Messrs. and Mmes. Naymon Everett, Guy McGill, Paul Welch, Roy Wilkes, M. B. Hood; Mmes. Roy Gibson, Frank Shumake, Grady Gantt, Q. D. Hicks, C. A. Rayburn, Miss Pauline Wheeler; Messrs. A. C. Lambert, Morris Mellroy, Red Debusk and J. D. Fairley.

WITH THE CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS

Methodist

Sunday school attendance, 61. Due to the inclement weather, the Missionary Society did not meet at the church Monday afternoon, but at the home of Mrs. B. M. Haymes. Nine members were present for a very interesting Bible study led by Mrs. M. D. Estes.

Presbyterian

Sunday school attendance, 54. The Missionary Society met with Mrs. A. W. Gibbs Monday afternoon with eleven members present. Mrs. A. H. Koeninger led the devotional and those present entered into an interesting discussion of Child Life and Training. Additional plans for the bazaar were discussed, as well as methods of encouraging and aiding the newly organized young peoples' society.

The Children's Band meets each Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. All the children are cordially invited to be present. A Thanksgiving program is being planned, and they are especially urged to be on time next Sunday, as the parts for the program will be given.

The pastor will not be here Sunday, but Rev. Henschel will fill the pulpit at the morning hour and the young people will have charge of the evening services.

A message from the pastor follows:

"Last Sunday was another great day for us, with the largest Sunday school attendance we have ever had and one of the best morning services. It was just like a revival especially at the morning hour, and all our services spiritual. I never could understand why we have to wait for a revival to get souls saved and to have a spiritual awakening in our churches.

If you want to be where you know you are among friends, come to the Cumberland church. We try to prove to you that you are welcome.

We plan to have an anniversary service soon to celebrate the re-organization of the church and Sunday school and are planning to make that a Rally Day also.

On Armistice Day our young people will have a Father and Son banquet. Their organization was completed Sunday evening, with eighteen or twenty to start with. We feel that we have made wonderful progress this year, and just as soon as we get our new church so that we will be more fitted to care for the needs of our congregation, we feel that we will grow more rapidly.

Our Wednesday evening lectures on baptism are being well attended. We have already had splendid results and would have more if others would come to hear them. A lot of people don't believe that sprinkling is taught in the Bible, but if you will come on Wednesday evening we believe that you will see there is at least some room for it. Bring your Bibles and you may do all the reading.

We have a place for each of you who is not already in some church, and we cordially invite you to come and be one of us. Our church has a welcome for both rich and poor and any that comes."

Baptist

Sunday school attendance, 180. The Y. W. A. met Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Elvis Gilbreath with five members present. An interesting program was given and the remainder of the afternoon spent in making things for the Christmas Bazaar which will be held on Friday and Saturday before the holidays.

The T. E. L. Class will meet Friday with Mrs. Cecil Nelson. All members are urged to be present.

B. Y. P. U. was well attended Sunday evening, ninety members being present. This is an unusually good record, and the directors are indeed proud of it.

Church of Christ

Sunday school attendance, 81.

BETHEL NEWS

Well, we had a real nice rain Sunday night, and was still misting Monday morning. So guess there will not be much cotton picking for several days.

Vancouver, Victoria and Wonderful Vancouver Island Popular Resorts Where Chill Winter Is Dethroned

NEW PRINCESS ELIZABETH

VANCOUVER FROM VANCOUVER HOTEL

TOTEM POLE, VICTORIA

Vancouver and Victoria, British Columbia, are rapidly increasing their popularity as winter playgrounds. Their mild, equable climate and the fact that the golfer can enjoy his game the year round make these two interesting places ideal spots to visit during the late fall and winter, when cold and sometimes snow and ice elsewhere preclude the outdoor-maker from enjoying the great outdoors to the utmost. Vancouver is the gateway to miles and miles of unspoiled almost primeval territory including Stanley Park, in Vancouver itself, with its huge Douglas firs and interesting Indian totem poles, relics of a famous race. Fine beaches and golf clubs are readily accessible to visitors. Victoria, charmingly situated on the southern end of Vancouver Island, is the capital of British Columbia and is essentially a "home city" despite its fine shops and hotels. Including the beautiful Empress Hotel, recently enlarged. Victoria is easy to reach via the Canadian Pacific "Princess" steamers—miniature ocean liners—to which fleet has recently been added the new "Princess Elizabeth" and "Princess John," vessels of 8,500 tons, which crossed the Atlantic and steamed through the Panama Canal to the Pacific under their own power. The celebrated "triangle route," Vancouver, Victoria, Seattle, is served by equally fine vessels equipped with all modern conveniences and cozy staterooms. From Victoria delightful excursions may be made into the interior of Vancouver Island, either by the Squamish and Nanaimo Railway or by automobile. Excellent hotels are located at Cameron Lake and elsewhere. Fine fishing for salmon and trout is available at numerous places. The immense Douglas fir forests of the interior make a trip there well worth while.

Police-man's Benefit, the Dorcas Society, the Y. M. C. A., the Boy Scout, the Jewish Relief, the Near East, the Gold Diggers' Home, also every hospital and every charitable institution in town. The Red Cross, the White Cross, the Double Cross and the Purple Cross.

The Government has so governed my business that I do not know who owns it. I am suspected, expected, inspected, disrespected, examined, reexamined, informed, commanded, and compelled until all I know is that I am supposed to provide an inexhaustible supply of money for every human need, desire or hope of the human race, and because I refuse to donate to all and go out and beg borrow and steal money to give away I am cussed, discussed, boycotted.

POTS AND PANS

"I think I am to be congratulated more than any of you," said the egg beater in the kitchen.
"And why?" asked all the pots and pans as they creaked a little.
"Because," said the egg beater, "the reason is so simple. You can see for yourselves." And it turned around a little.
"Do tell us, we don't see," said the crying pan.
"Very well," said the egg beater, "I will tell you. In the first place—think of my name."
And the tins and pans thought, but they came to no decision as to why the egg beater's name should make them understand why it was so fine. They had always been so used to seeing the egg beater that they really had not thought much about it.
"We give up," they said. "You will have to tell us."
"Very well," said the egg beater. "I

"My Disposition is Quite Perfect"

will tell you. You see, my name means that I beat eggs.
"But not only do I beat eggs, I beat cream and all other things they wish to whip into a fine, fluffy state."
"True enough," agreed the other pots and pans.
"But you see," continued the egg beater, "the wonderful part is that I am not cross."
"Imagine being used only as a beater. Imagine forever whipping everything that comes near you."
"Isn't that enough to make an egg beater cross? But am I cross?"
"And all the pots and pans creaked and said:
"No, you are not cross."
"Then," said the egg beater, "it only goes to show that my disposition is quite perfect."
"Eyes whipping and beating everything that comes my way does not make me cross."
"You have a fine disposition," they all agreed. "And you don't let yourself be ruled by what you have to do."
"You might be cross and horrid and always blame it on the fact that you whip everything."
"Yes; you should be congratulated."
The egg beater felt very happy, but the cheese grater was speaking now.
"Listen to me," said the cheese grater, "and think of what my name means."
"What?" asked the others.
"It means I am greater than anything else. No other pot or tin pan is named by my name."
"Oh," chuckled the gravy spoon, a big, good-natured, easy-going spoon, "you don't understand at all."
"What don't I understand?" asked the cheese grater.
"You don't understand that your kind of a grater does not mean the same as a greater person or a greater object."
"Oh, no; none of us should become conceited. Let's all just be friendly, nice pots and pans and kitchen things?"

And all the others creaked in agreement and thought this was a very good idea.

When the Fish Hawk Fishes

Nature has specially designed the feet of the osprey—or fish hawk—for the purpose of catching and holding large fish. In the case of the other hawks the talons vary considerably, the inner ones being by far the more powerful, and although they enable the bird to overcome such large quarry as pheasant, mallard, and even heron, they could hardly hold a fish.
The talons are extremely formidable. Then the outside toe is reversible, that is to say, can either work together with the hind claw, as in an owl's foot, or with those in front, as in the case of a falcon hawk.

Also the outsides of the feet are provided with curious hard, sharp-pointed excrescences which may be seen on each "ball" of the foot, and which must be very effective in preventing a large fish from making its escape.

ARTICLE XVII WHEN THE CALF BECOMES A "VEALER"

Many Classifications Are Now Used In Judging the Meat of Young Calves.

Editor's Note — This is another story in a series of articles on dairying written by the well known national dairy and poultry authority, Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S., of St. Louis, Mo. The entire series will appear in this paper. Our readers are urged to read them carefully and clip them out for future reference.

To sell or not to sell, that is the question. If Shakespeare had been a dairyman he might have soliloquized in some such fashion when the question of what to do with his new born calves came up.

The owner of pure-bred stock has the problem pretty well solved. He has a market for all the calves he does not want to keep. But the owner of the average dairy herd must dispose of his excess stock. The market for veal is a big one in this country. Nearly one billion pounds of dressed veal are produced every year, which is quite an industry in itself.

To the average customer of a butcher shop veal is calf meat. But when you get into the subject you find out differently. There are different grades of calves and many classifications of calf meat. Government officials found that out a few years ago when they attempted to call the offspring of a cow under one year of age a calf. Technically they were correct, of course. Even today in some sections of the country animals under one year are sold as calves at so much a head.

Go into stockyards and you will hear buyers discussing vealers, veal calves, range calves, dairy calves, etc. In the dressed meat coolers of the packing plants you will again find many different names for the carcasses hanging there, although to the inexperienced one they may all appear to be just veal. There is a split veal, grass veal, calf carcasses and others.

First, let us define our terms and then we will discuss the business side of calf raising. The Department of Agriculture has set up two classifications. The "wealer" is a young calf which in most instances has been fed on whole milk and may be anywhere from three weeks old to three months. The carcass of such a calf is very light, almost white, in fact. The bones are soft and red. There is very little fat and the lean meat is fine and smooth grained. It is called "veal" by the government. The term "calf" is applied to animals around six months of age which have run on pasture and which show the effects of age and exercise. The meat from a "calf" is darker, more like the red of beef, the bones are hard and white and the fat more abundant. It is called "calf carcass." In other words a "wealer" is a young milked calf and a "calf" is a slightly older animal that has been to pasture and has been raised on other foods in combination with milk.

Now the question of whether you should sell your surplus calves at an early age is an economic one and depends entirely upon the conditions, the season of the year, the markets, and other factors. There is one simple rule you can always depend upon. When the cost of milk is low and the price of veal is high, raise veal. When the conditions are reversed, that is when milk is valuable and the market is off on veal, better keep the calves for beef or milk.

In raising calves for veal on a whole-milk diet it takes about 10 pounds of milk for each one pound of veal. Calves weigh around 90 to 100 pounds at birth. The market has the best demand for vealers that weigh from 150 to 175 pounds. It is very easy to figure then about what it will cost to get the calf ready for market. A 100-pound calf that is sold as a wealer when it reaches 150 pounds, will require 500 pounds of milk. It may take as much as 750 to 1,000 pounds of milk before the vealer is sold. These are things to be taken into consideration when the calf is born.

I might add that 100 pounds is a pretty good weight at birth. Brown Swiss and Holsteins are the largest at birth and will average from 90 to 100 pounds. The Jerseys are the smallest and will average 55 to 60 pounds for both sexes. Male calves will average heavier than the females, and the first and second calves are lighter than those which follow when the mother is in the prime of life.

I would also like to make it clear that the figures I have given both as to the age and weight of vealers and calves are not fixed. The things that will determine whether you are selling veal or calf carcasses is the condition of the meat itself.

CHEESE PLANT AT ABERNATHY KEEPING BUSY

Struve Project Is Only One Of Type West of Fort Worth and Wichita Falls; Method of Operation

Abernathy holds a unique place in the industrial life of West Texas in that there is located in that town of about 1,000 population, the only cheese factory west of Fort Worth and Wichita Falls.

The factory, known as the Struve Cheese factory, is owned by F. W. Struve, mayor and pioneer merchant. Mr. Struve pioneered the move to establish the factory there and handled the details of the financing of the project.

Capacity of the plant is 8,000 pounds of milk per day. This amount makes a thousand pounds of cheese. It takes 24 hours for the batch of milk to go through the process that converts it from a liquid into a solid.

The plant is operated seven days a week because milk for cheese making has to be fresh. The average operation is 2,000 to 3,000 or more pounds of milk per day, running between 300 and 400 pounds of cheese. Eight hours after the process is begun the cheese is in solid form.

After the cheese has been made it is placed in moulds and left for the remainder of the 24 hours to harden. Then it is taken out, coated with paraffin and cheese cloth to age. The vault is kept at an even temperature and the usual time a cheese is left in the refrigerator is 90 days. Some customers prefer cheese aged less than that time, others longer.

Cheese is sold to customer's order. Both the "Longhorn" and "Prince" types of cheese are made. The factory makes its own Bulgarian buttermilk as a foundation for the cheese. Also some buttermilk is sold privately. Cheese comes in two sizes; the regular store size, weighing ten or twelve pounds, and a three or four pound "family size."

Area of the sale of the company's product extends from Big Spring and Hobbs north to Amarillo.—Avalanche-Journal.

While the big adventurer, David, was talking to New York as he sat upon her skyscraper couch she told him of some of her sister cities.

"There are my sisters in Canada, Toronto, taking such an interest in farming, and Ottawa the capital sister of Canada—and Montreal a little further east is quite a business lady. My sister Winnipeg in Canada's Middle West is a lover of prairies, and the grain that they produce, and of the forests and of the lumber to send to her mills. Vancouver is way, way, out West, in British Columbia and goes in for trading, much as San Francisco does."

"You see, just as people are known as being witty or clever or beautiful or wise, or good or kind to their neighbors, or brilliant or dull and quiet and of little account, so are cities known by their different ways and habits and for what they have made themselves famous.

"I hope I don't talk too much? I'm so sociable," she smiled. David shook his head. Never had he sat before upon a skyscraper couch and talked to a beautiful young woman who was nothing more nor less than one of the greatest cities, and she was giving him her entire attention and telling him, all by himself, her story.

"Queens, canals, ships and trains help us in our trading," New York continued.

"But David, this isn't all. We have more than just our business heads. We have hearts!"

"Oh, you don't think perhaps that cities have hearts. I know, we've been called cruel and heartless and big and overpowering and rude and inconsiderate and everything else, but we have hearts in spite of what has been said. Ever and ever so many of our friends do realize this.

"There is Paris—my sister who lives over in France. She is loved not only because of what she can do alone, but because of the laughter in her heart which makes others laugh, too, and feel young and gay.

"London, my sister, who lives over in England, is loved because of the beautiful home-like feeling she always gives everyone. There is something so genuine about her that they just can't help loving her.

"She never met anyone tell you David, that New York hasn't a heart. From all over I welcome people—" "Just as you welcomed me," David said.

New York smiled. "In much the same way," she answered. "I don't speak to them in words, but I try to speak to their hearts, to give them ambition and cheer and encouragement. And how I smile as they succeed. I know I'm young. I know my voice is too loud at times, and that I am often ill-mannered and rude and heedless and thoughtless, but it is all because I am so young."

most an under-sized child to a splendid size are so proud of her. Boston, San Francisco, all of my sisters—they have so many friends!

"And I will tell you a secret, David. Before I dress for the evening, for you know we sisters always dress in our best and most glittering frocks at night so that we sparkle and gleam and look our most lovely best—before I dress for the evening I whisper a twilight good-night to my people. And as I do this I feel their affection. "I feel that in spite of my faults they think I'm a pretty nice city which somehow has suggested just a little in the heart of each, and a little pink glow of happiness comes over me."

Girl Scout Rules KNIFE, PLIERS AND GIN USED IN AN OPERATION

Clever Work of a Los Angeles Surgeon That Saved Sailor on Shipboard

A cook's carving knife, a pair of pliers borrowed from the carpenter, a bottle of Holland gin and a needle and linen thread saved the life of a seaman stricken with appendicitis, as a result, Dr. David R. Robbins, Los Angeles surgeon, recently was presented with a huge silver loving cup by the Planet Steamship company.

A little more than a year ago Dr. Robbins and his wife left Los Angeles on the steamship Noorderdyk for Germany, where the doctor was going to study for a year. He left all his surgical instruments at home, intending to buy new ones in Germany.

Three days out of Panama the Noorderdyk received an S O S from the steamship Corvus, saying that Henry Lohse, a twenty-one-year-old sailor, was stricken with appendicitis. The Noorderdyk steamed to the Corvus, and when they met, Lohse was transferred to the Noorderdyk. Doctor Robbins was asked to save the man's life.

Doctor Robbins borrowed a carving knife from the cook, made the incision and with the pliers removed the appendix. He then sewed up the incision with a needle and thread borrowed from his wife and disinfecting the wound with Holland gin. A piece of rubber tubing for a shower bath was used for drainage. As a result of the operation, Lohse is hale and hearty, hauls on the main brace and with full lungs sings, "Blow the Man Down."

Because he used such strange instruments, Doctor Robbins refused to accept any pay for the operation, stating that the operation under such strange conditions might not prove successful.

However, the steamship company did not forget Doctor Robbins' deed on the high sea, and when he returned to Los Angeles from his year of study in Germany he was presented with the silver loving cup.

PLAN FOR NEW OIL TEST IN LYNN COUNTY

Rumors are now afloat in Tahoka that one of the big oil companies is preparing to drill another test oil well some time soon a few miles south of town.

While the News has been unable to get any confirmation of these rumors from any authoritative sources, yet there seems to be some foundation for the reports. We have been unable to ascertain, however, just when drilling will begin, if at all.

It is known that one of the big oil companies owns a controlling interest in the original Hart block of leases out in the T-Bar pasture, and it is believed that this company is contemplating the drilling of a well some time soon.—Lynn County News.

No Insurance for Your Sake

A fire insurance rate can only measure the danger of fire damage to a building in which people are seriously interested in preventing fire.

No rate can measure gross carelessness or negligence! Knowing this, sound stock fire insurance companies after an inspection will not insure the "questionable" property for your sake! This inspection encourages fire safety, discourages carelessness and keeps the rate on your property the true measure of your own fire risk.

"I'm sure we'll get them. It's only a question of time."

"He was off," and soon Sir George sent the lights on the little plane to the island. Glad to see them, in spite of the fact that he would have to face Roberta MacBeth's hostile eyes across the dining table. "What did the girl want anyway? He had done his best for her and for her, and if she thought I'd told about her friend of the other night, she was mistaken, though she ought to have heard some ugly tales about that lad soon. If his recognition this afternoon should prove that Jack Navarro was mixed up in the attempt to pay off the girl, that would be his undoing. He had probably given the girl some highly romantic reason. What drove a girl like Roberta to a fellow like that, she'd-he had to do it, there were men like Ray and Dunham about? It did not occur to him, Roberta being a girl, that it was the same thing that had brought him here to MacBeth's island; that had made him risk his skin today—adventure, and the desire for things new and strange.

After dinner he would go down to Green Bend and see Alice or Nell, and read his third brain. Nice girls, yet nearly so disturbing as Roberta. He reached the bridge, clattered across it and up to the terrace. Roberta and Ray were already there. They had passed him with the policeman halted him, they told him, without his observing them. Lady Sandison came running down the terrace steps and grasped him. It was the first time Agay had hugged him since he was seven, but she had lost nothing by want of practices.

"Oh, my laddie! Did they touch you?"

"Not a touch," Sir George said in a thoughtful way. "Sir George said in plain manner, 'Now hands off, I must report to the chief.'"

MacBeth sat in his library, telephone near at hand. He was drawing in a piece of paper and trying to look businesslike, but the hand that held the pencil shook a little, as he saw Sir George in the doorway. Just by so little had this shining young lord missed death in this wonderful day in this peaceful countryside and it was he, Robert MacBeth, who had set him on his dangerous way—to save a few miserable thousands.

"But that was not the way Sir George looked at it."

"Well, we pulled it off, sir. Chicago wasn't in it," as you say over here. I've had a great day," he concluded, and then hesitated as he saw the face of Robert MacBeth's face. "I did hope you'd be pleased."

"I'm just terribly pleased, but I'm glad it's over. Agay was in such a stew."

"Oh, you've got to make allowance for Agay," her stepson said. "She thinks that without her supervision and superintendence the Sandisons would have perished. Maybe she's right, at that," he added, remembering the debt of gratitude the family really owed Agay. "But she has an awfully aggravating way of acting as though she were still my nurse."

Robert MacBeth laughed.

"But leaving Agay out of it entirely, sir, as we must, I'll ask you to think of this and discuss it after dinner. Why did the beggars attack the bank today and why did they come up the topwash? Was it because the bank robbers in New York got word through that I was there after the money? Or, is this I think the more likely, was it because there was a leak somewhere—here?"

Roberta called cheerfully: "Sir George, Aunt Agay says not to dress, but come as you are. None of us are dressing tonight."

It would please your father something awful if you would put yourself out a bit for these young men. He takes pride in his daughter, you know. She looked at the girl a little wistfully. "He sets a great store on you, my lass."

Roberta turned abruptly away. Somehow she could not face her aunt, but she said pleasantly enough, "Why, of course, Aunt Agay, I'll do what I can. But after tea on Sunday," she hesitated and then went on, "I have an engagement, and you'll have to manage the rest by yourself."

"You couldn't break it, I suppose? It may be fanciful of me, but I have a kind of feeling that he—Rob I mean—will be disappointed if you are not there. You see the young men will be going Sunday night."

"Oh!" exclaimed Roberta. "They generally stay until Monday morning."

"This time they are all going Sunday night and on Monday there's a jaunt to the construction works, with Sir George driving your father. It'll be your father's first try at going out in a car."

Roberta faced about and looked at her aunt. "Do you—Does Sir George really see any danger for father?"

"Well," admitted her aunt, "they say not. I can see, however, that having dilled the robbers so cleverly, it'll maybe make those black-hearted rascals a bit so angry that they're like to get into any mischief they can. At least that's what I think Sir George is anxious about. For the lad's anxious, no matter what they say before me, and he was awful particular that I should tell you."

Roberta's heart contracted with fear and anger combined. Though Aunt Agay gave her the message in all innocence, Roberta was sure Sir George driving her father, it'll be her father's first try at going out in a car. He was somewhat, without any justification as far as she could see, except his fear of what Jack might say against him, determined to throw some sort of slur or suspicion on Jack, if he possibly could. Probably wanted to influence Dad against him, and so prevent his believing anything Jack said.

Then, quite suddenly she thought of her father's danger. It was a new sensation for Roberta to be afraid for anyone, yet she could not dismiss her fears lightly this time. There had been danger to Sir George, the other day, though she laughed at the idea. She could not bear to think of her father being in any danger when she— "Oh, Aunt Agay, can't you persuade Dad not to go?"

Aunt Agay's sharp blue eyes softened. This girl did have some feeling, after all. She did care about her father. "Well, I don't know, my dear, but I really think I ought to do anything for me just now, but," and she eyed the girl eagerly and shrewdly, "there's no telling what he might not do for you, or if not he, there's Sir George."

"Sir George will do nothing for me."

"Well, I'd not be quite so positive of that as you are. You forget, my dear, that you always approach him with a that poker, as you might say. Now, if you were to drop the poker and, remembering that he's a poor young man and that you're a rich young woman to whom he cannot refuse anything, would he not do anything for me? If you are you may save yourself the pains. He's not only looked things, but he's said things."

"Did he say?" her aunt questioned, her eyes screwing up with mirth. "Well, that's hopeful. There's never a lad would go to the trouble of insulting a good looking lass, unless he wanted to attract her attention." She rose briskly. "I must be off to my ordering. Thank you, my dear."

It was not until her aunt's footsteps were far distant down the stairs that Roberta understood. Then she put her modern head down on her desk and cried in a good old-fashioned way.

Lady Sandison passed her stepson coming in with the evening papers.

"I say, Agay, when you've done there's no end of a treat in store for you. You should read the different accounts of our little excitement in these odd American papers, especially the country ones. I mean to clip some of them and send them to Haviland and Uncle Charles."

But in the library he forgot to read or clip, for on turning over the pages he saw the picture of his eye caught a name he knew. He stared, unable to believe his eyes. There it was, however, under marriage licenses: "Roberta Jean MacBeth, MacBeth's Island, Pa., and John V. Navarro, Philadelphia, Pa."

It was just one of Roberta's Jack's tricks, or did Roberta know and consent? He had been unable to trace any connection between Nicaragua Jack and the hand that captured or at large, and that fact had kept him silent. But now—what was he to do? Hastily he tore the list from the paper and thrust it in his pocket.

CHAPTER XI

The weekend party was in full swing. Roberta moved among a group of men, some of them new, some of them old acquaintances, but all likable. Her father, for the first time since her illness—indeed for the first time since Roberta had flouted his island—was really enjoying himself. Sir George, Roberta told herself jealously, was treated like a favored son. He was gay and charming, and as her Aunt Agay took care to let her know "looked like one of those old gods."

"My dear aunt," Roberta protested, "you talk of nothing else but Sir George from morning until night."

"It can't be had as all that!" her aunt exclaimed, evidently alarmed. "This is the first time I have spoken about Sir George this day. There's something about the way you listen."

"There must be!" declared the madened Roberta. "I'll take care to change that something, for you may be well know, now as later, that I'm sick of the sound of Sir George's name on your lips."

"Dear, dear! I have done that for the lad!" Her terrible story, Roberta, I wouldn't have had that happen for a great deal. You see, it's only the last few days that I've known how he feels about you, and maybe that's why

"Why, He Hates Me!" The Amazed Girl Almost Shouted It.

I have, without meaning to, you might say, been having him on my mind when I look at you."

"How he feels about me? Why, he hates me!" The amazed girl almost shouted it.

"Shish!" He says so with his lips maybe. There's an old Gaelic saying that the lips must defend the heart though it is breaking."

"Will say, Aunt Agay, that a man who can defend his heart as well as Sir George does his will never be in danger of losing or breaking it."

"So you say," returned her aunt shrewdly. "Hearts aren't made of glass, it's true, my lass, but they do break. Not right away, maybe, but dropping down dead as they do in the stories, but nevertheless, they do go off, and for nothing but dead love."

Roberta, who seemed exasperated beyond all need at this conversation, surveyed her aunt with unblinking eyes. "Well, next time you see one dying that way, call me, so that I can come and watch his death struggle."

"I have," said her aunt, "and you'll no believe of me."

She left before Roberta could reply. What would you do with a woman like Aunt Agay? The idea of trying to make her pity Sir George? Or was a scheme of Sir George's very own, to keep her from telling her father what she knew? Did he suspect Jack of giving her his true history?

What was she to do? What could she do? She had promised Jack to meet him, and yet as the hour drew near when she must fulfill that promise she grew more and more reluctant.

It must be this afternoon or never. That was her feeling as she crossed the terrace to where her father, with Ray Brovne, Sir George and the rest of the young men, waited still in the least a moment for Sir Roger Dunham, filled with girls, coming over the bridge.

Roberta gave Sir George a quick, keen look that might mean almost anything. Involuntarily he followed her down the steps. Since he had read that marriage license announcement he had followed her like a hound on the trail. He could not bring himself to tell MacBeth and expose the girl to minor and ridicule. He meant to wait her a moment for Jack Navarro and then he would take matters in his own hand and spare both the girl and her father. They were not married yet, and that announcement might be only one of Jack's tricks to catch the girl. Sir George meant to see that the marriage did not take place. It would be a difficult job, but he would do more than that for good old Robert MacBeth.

Roberta went down the steps slowly. In an agony of indecision, quite unaware that she was being followed. Jack had told her to say nothing to her father about his secretary's past record as he had given it to her, yet curiously enough, she doubted Jack sometimes and was not sure that she doubted her father's secretary.

Ray Brovne looked after the girl and Sir George. "I wish he wasn't so good looking," he declared earnestly. "Even Roberta—" and then his jaw dropped, and he stared speechless, as did her father. Sir George, having approached Roberta, had held her hand lightly on her arm to detain her and she had jerked away from him.

"The lad shows very little tact," said Roberta's father. "It seems to me that Sir George has lost his sense of humor."

He had, for he had had a flash of something he always alluded to as "that d-d queer inheritance from my mother's side of the family." It made him sure that Roberta must not be allowed to leave her father's side today alone. Then he had seen the blue car and known that it was Jack. He knew he must follow if he could not stop her now, and yet everything she could do to do. A cold sweat broke out on his forehead as he followed the girl down the path. He dared not leave her, but he cursed the pride and caution that had kept him from talking her father into his confidence.

"The moment he had read the printed name, he had known that Jack Navarro was determined to get the girl and her money, but her attitude toward Sir George was so antagonistic that he had not quite known how to proceed. He knew he should force Roberta either to bring Jack to her father's attention, or to listen while he told her what he knew of Jack Navarro. But how?"

"Is your friend coming to join the party?" he asked.

"No," Roberta said defiantly. "I'm going to join him."

Sir George frowned. "I wouldn't do that. Your father will miss you—and—and—it will look rather odd, don't you think, for a girl to be constantly in the company of a man who never comes to the house?"

Roberta swung around on him. She was furious, and she did not hesitate to show it. "So," she began in a low, deadly sweet voice, "after all, my father's secretary is his spy."

"Don't! It has an ugly sound and it isn't true. Your father's laid up and I'm trying to keep him from being worried. I'm—I'm trying to look after you—for him."

"How nice of you," Roberta mocked softly. "But you are in my way, Sir George Sandison, and I am waiting for you to move."

He paid no attention. How lovely the little devil was, and what a voice! A man might listen to its music indefinitely. "If you would only listen I think you would see what I am driving at. My dear girl, I would do a lot to save Robert MacBeth a single anxiety."

"And you think?"

"And I think you are causing him some," he said slowly. "In fact, I'm sure."

Roberta stopped and stood still for a moment. Her impulse was to cry out: "Oh, you don't really mean that father is worrying about me now?"

But her pride would not allow her to do it. She would go on with what she had started out to do. She knew now that she was wrong to go. Indeed, she had all along been forcing herself to believe that it meant little to her father, in order to keep her uneasy conscience from troubling her. Almost she was on the point of turning back. She would tell Jack he must come in and face father, even if it meant a quarrel.

Even as she hesitated, Sir George unwittingly spoke the word too much. "Your father may not know the man you are motoring with, but I do, and what little I know is not to his credit." It was too much, and he looked too handsome and too confident. Roberta swung back to her former state of indignation with this man.

"I think you're mistaken," "It was too much, and he looked too handsome and too confident. Roberta swung back to her former state of indignation with this man.

"I think you're mistaken." "It was too much, and he looked too handsome and too confident. Roberta swung back to her former state of indignation with this man.

road above him and was waiting to the him car which was coming rapidly down the road.

It was useless to go after her, and he might be mistaken in thinking this meeting between the girl and Jack of so much significance, but even as he thought this he caught sight of a bag set down in the shade of the sycamore. Why a bag, unless it meant she was going to leave the island and her father once and for all?

AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE GREATEST MURDERER

She's a slayer!

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.—The gentle hands of the American housewife are charged by Dr. John Harvey Kellogg with being the country's greatest death agency. She destroys several times more lives than murderers, automobilists and a dozen other of the great killing agencies, the health authority asserts.

Research in the nutrition laboratories of the Battle Creek Sanitarium was described by its head as revealing that the most dominant features of today's mortality tables are due to dietary errors. "Experience has shown now our patients are much improved with the addition to their diet of the so-called protective foods, which contain an abundance of vitamins, minerals and residues," he said. "Cases of chronic circulatory disease, chronic arthritis, chronic gastro-intestinal disease and migraines have been cured by a change to this diet, giving up one consisting chiefly of bread, butter, meats, potatoes and sweet desserts, all but butter being vitamin-poor."

"We have reproduced degenerative disorders, affecting especially the heart, blood vessels and kidneys, in studies of times in our laboratory animals by changes of diets. Then we have restored them to health by making the same nutritional changes that we bring about in the case of human sufferers."

WITHOUT A PRESIDENT

It may not be generally known that every four years the United States is without a President for several hours, but such is the fact. The term of the outgoing President expires at midnight on March 3 and the new President is usually sworn in about noon on the following day. During the intervening hours the country is without a chief executive. The question of whether a vacancy existed during this interval was discussed early in the history of the country. In response to any inquiry Chief Justice John Marshall wrote on February 21, 1821:

"There has been uniformly and voluntarily an interval of 12 hours during which the executive power could not be exercised." If an emergency demanded, the new President could be sworn in immediately after his predecessor's term expired at midnight on March 3, but no situation has ever existed to make this necessary.

EMPLOY OWN CITIZENS

At the present time a number of states are carrying on extensive road-building programs. One of the justifications for this is that it will offer employment to many people out of work. Yet, some of the states are complaining that the contractors employ help from other states.

Within the past week action has been taken by at least two states to force contractors to hire their own citizens first. In South Carolina the Roosevelt warned all contractors that they must employ New York citizens first. In South Carolina the Highway Department has instituted an investigation to ascertain exactly how many of its own citizens are being employed by road contractors.

This is quite proper. While it is very good to be sympathetic about unemployment conditions everywhere, each state owes its own citizens the primary duty. As far as possible, when state funds are being expended, the citizens of that particular state should be the ones to reap the benefit of the employment provided.

IF ICHABOD CRANE HAD A FLASHLIGHT

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers
Association

WE ALL remember the story of Ichabod Crane and the headless horseman. There was the dark form by the side of the road—thundering hoofs on the Sleepy Hollow highway—and Ichabod fleeing in confused terror before this terrible monster. If Ichabod had only known that his hobgoblin was an inventive rival disguised with a pumpkin head, he would have had a good laugh and gone on with the business of vanquishing his competitor.

What Ichabod really needed was a modern flashlight. Then he would have discovered the trickery at once. Many business men need the flashlight of analysis to uncover the hobgoblins in their business and then they might sit back and laugh at their rivals who hesitate to investigate and learn the truth.

At this time, when business and banking are making strenuous efforts to have a clear vision ahead, it is especially important that the power of research and analysis be employed to their fullest extent. When these twin brothers of good management have been pressed into service in all fields, I am confident we shall see a further lessening of periods of stress. However, I believe business in general has learned the valuable lesson that any prosperity that is not lauded with a little advertising would not seem basically safe or sound.
