THE MAN FROM YONDER

Harold Titus

himself, and grinned. "A lot of Duval. But remember this: if you ever set one of your feet in this camp again, or on any operation where I'm in charge, I'll give you a licking you'll remember!"

The Bull whimpered.

"I know when I got enough," he said and his one servicable yet blood-shot eye searched Elliott's countenance. "I . . . I didn't mean no harm." He whined. "I was drunk."

"No, you weren't drunk. If you'd been drunk I wouldn't have hit you. You knew what you were doing. Now, Duval, why'd you come out here this morning? Who sent you?"

Duval looked away.

"Nobody," he said weakly. "I got drunk. But . . . but if you're needin' a man, I can work for a better man than I am."

Ben shook his head.

"No use, chuz. You're going to tell me why you came and who sent you. Was it Brandon?"

"No"—evasively.

"Sure? How much did he give you to come here? Or are you one of 'em roll to do such chores?"

"He—, he didn't."

"You're a worse liar than you are a fighter by a mile or two, Duval. Mine was a good guess, wasn't it? What were his orders?"

"Well, he said if I didn't that he'd—"

"Good! That's all I want to know. There's the road. And you can take this little message with you to Brandon: Tell him that he needs to send more and better men here the next time. And as for you: I hire no men who can be hired to fight another man's battles. Make tracks, Duval!"

It was a week later.

Old Don Stuart, propped on pillows in the narrow, seclusive room of Joe Piette's hotel, listened to the colorful account that Bird-Eye Blaine, with many oaths and considerable profanity, rendered for him of what had transpired at Hot Owl since Ben Elliott had taken charge of the operation.

" . . . and so he got 'em all crew a-woridin' their blessed heads off for him 'nd 'er got that ragged-pants gang at best-weeders 'nd hay pitchers that passes for a loggin' crew down' more'n they've ever done in their hay loaves before!"

"Good," gasped Stuart feebly and tried to smile. "Good boy. But . . . he's young and . . . alone against Brandon. I'll be . . . that hard nut he . . . was lookin' for."

"Hard? Bird-Eye glared at him. "Hard! Th' harder they come, th' better pleased he is! Sure 'nd he's a glutton for work, Donny! 'Nd th' saints, they have a finger into it, too, him a-comin' just when they'd got pore o'ld Able licked. It'll be a tough fight or I'm a bad guesser, but I—me eyes, what a fighter th' lad is!"

A restless light appeared in Don's eyes and his thin old hands fidgeted nervously with the blankets.

"A tough fight . . . Oh, he don't know . . . Bird-Eye, what he's up against." He struggled to sit erect and his eyes shone brightly with an odd sort of desperation. "If Brandon can't . . . drive him out . . . one way or another . . . he'll kill him." He gasped and swallowed, evidently making a great effort to talk rapidly. "I'm a coward, Bird-Eye. . . . Been a—down—down . . . for years. I've been . . . afraid to tell . . . while I lived. Now . . . I'm afraid to die with it . . . on my soul!"

He pointed and Elaine looked in alarm at his friend as these last words took on significance for him.

"Lay back, Donny. Dawn't get yourself excited by . . . Coward? Naw, ye're no coward!"

He grasped the sick man by the shoulders and tried gently to force him back on the pillows but the old fellow resisted.

"Can't die . . . Can't . . . with it on . . . my soul!" he gasped and

Mr. and Mrs. Watts Honorees At Shower

The hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Phillips was the scene of a social occasion Tuesday evening of last week when some 75 of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey gathered to surprise them with a shower of miscellaneous wedding presents.

Mr. and Mrs. Watts were married October 3, but various things had prevented a shower until last week because of this delay, the affair a great surprise to them. Mrs. Watts, as scores of friends know, was the guest of honor.

After the guests had enjoyed an evening of games and music, Mrs. Phillips called them to come into the dining room, and asked Mr. and Mrs. Watts to lead the way. When they seated the table, they found it piled high with lovely gifts, while others were ranged around the room. Some made candy and popcorn were served to those present.

DIABETES ON INCREASE IN STATE OF TEXAS

Austin, Feb. 26.—"The general increase in diabetes throughout the United States during the past few years is eloquently reflected in the Texas figures. In 1929 only 367 persons were recorded as having died of this malady, while last year about 700 succumbed. Even making allowances for undiagnosed cases in earlier days, the increasing deadly power of this malady thus becomes apparent. And while perhaps it is the least publicized of the major killers, it nevertheless deserves an appreciation of some of the predisposing causes as well as the methods to combat them," states Dr. John W. Brown, State Health officer.

It can be said that, whatever the exciting cause of its development may be, diabetes is definitely associated with the soft living now so general among the so-called white collar workers. And it is here that diabetes is potent and increasingly flourishing.

"Thus it is noted that professional men and women, educators, bankers, business executives, servers of food and drink, laboratory and desk and bench people in general—in short the sedentary workers are more likely to become victims of this disease than those who labor manually. And to this list must be added the house wife to whom electricity and leisure in this connection have in numerous instances proved to be doubtful blessings.

"Therefore, it is plain that adults whose living habits involve a minimum of physical exertion and a maximum of food, including sweets, could profitably determine to 'about face' and gear themselves to a more normal living regimen. The rules involved in this suggestion are: Under the doctor's direction, avoid overweight; eat proper foods in proper amounts; shun excesses of sugar and sweets; have a physical examination at least once a year; regularly exercise the large muscles of the body either in work or play."

1,610 SCHOOLS ENROLLED IN STATE BASKETBALL

Austin, Feb. 26.—A total of 1610 schools enrolled for the 1935 Inter-scholastic League basketball tournament, according to Roy B. Henderson, athletic director of the University of Texas Bureau of Public School Interests, State executive officer of the League.

Of these 1,254 are high schools and 356 were rural schools. This year is the first time rural schools have been required to register for participation in basketball, and this fact undoubtedly accounts for the large increase in enrollment. The State Tournament will be held in Austin during the Inter-scholastic League State Meet, March 8 and 9.

STATE LEGISLATOR'S MAIL COMES BY SACKS FULL

Austin, Feb. 26. (Special)—Small squads of sweating porters carry dozens of bundle, gray mail bags into the State Capitol each day.

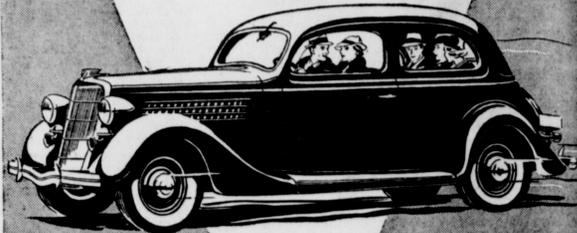

For the State Legislator's mail is as voluminous as that of a motion picture queen. Seated at his desk the Legislator is, figuratively, working under the eyes of thousands of habitans. Letters, telegrams, petitions—when an important measure is under consideration he receives hundreds of communications in one day from his constituents.

Often a single bill will provoke a storm of correspondence. Last week

Senator Arthur P. Durgan of the 30th District had through 36 telegrams ranging from 10 word straight messages to 300 word night letters, its of motor trucks.

12 petitions, and 193 letters, the opinions of South Plains citizens on a bill proposing to raise the land tax cheap.—Eliand-Waltsett Imp Company, O'Donnell.

It's Worth More Than It Costs--

This customer should derive some profit from everything he buys. If the article purchased is not worth more to the buyer than to the seller, the customer has no reason to buy it. The article's value to the customer is determined readily by comparing its cost to that of substitutes. The difference between the value of a product and its purchase price is the customer's profit.

Natural gas is worth $1.00 per 100 cubic feet for refrigeration, $2.50 for cooking and $1.25 for heating—compared to the cost of performing these services with the most expensive form of fuel. The difference between the actual price of gas represents a 75-percent saving on refrigeration, a 50-percent saving on cooking fuel and a 40-percent saving on the fuel for water heating. What other articles of general household use can be bought on such a bargain counter basis?
