WARNING ISSUED ON DANGERS OF SNAKE BITE

Austin, April 23.—A warning has just been issued by Dr. John W.
Brown, State Health Officer, about the dangers of snake bites. A number of cases of snake bite are reported each year in Texas during the summer and early fall; however, few of these result fatally.

Most of the bites occur on the hands or feet, which indicates that stepping or falling in the immediate vicinity of an unseen snake or picking up objects under similar conditions are the hazards of contracting snake bite. The pain following the injection of the poison is most intense.
Other symptoms are swelling, giddi-ness, difficult breathing, hemorrhage swells, pulse, and vomiting.

If one is unfortunate enough to be bitten by a poisonous snake, such as the rattlesnake, the following first aid measures should be carried out.
After making proper incisions at the site of the wound, apply suction, and continue for at least half an hour.

Apply a tourniquet above the site of the wound, releasing same every ten or fifteen minutes for about a minute of the time.
If the proper antivenom serum is available, apply it according to directions, but most important of all is to remove as much of the poison
as is possible so as to prevent its absorption.

Secure the services of a physician
at the earliest possible moment.

If one is bitten by a poisonous snake DO NOT run or get overheated and DO NOT take any alcoholic stimulants because circulation increased by alcohol or exercise serves to distribute the poison much more rapidly through the body.

DON'T injure the tissues by injecting permanganate of potash, which is known to be of no value as an antidote.

DON'T depend upon home remedies or so-called snake bite cures, for they are of no value.

for cut and that gesture was enough to cause words to lie in the throat of those who saw Lydia. Here, Lydia, from Thirty-Seven, invading this place

He did not stop talking until the woman's shadow fell upon him. Then he looked up, saw her and rose.

He rose because a woman was standing there, evidently waiting to speak to him. He did not know her; had never seen her before. He had no time to observe and judge. He would have risen, anyhow, because he was naturally courteous to women. He did more than rise. He even bowed just a trifle

Lydia's voice sounded sharp and hard as she said: "I should think you'd be ashamed of yourself!" she said.

Ben had started to smile, but this changed to a frown of perplexity. "Ashamed, madam?" he asked. "Why,—" "Yes; ashamed! There's that poor girl in my house, sick and crying for days! You brought her here, didn't you? You're the one who got her to come to Tincup. And now, when she needs you, you won't come near her!"

"Ma'am, I ... That is, I don't understand you," he stammered. "I'm not sure I'm taking you right now, from her costly fur coat to the emerald earrings, and the hardness of her eyes; and, as in a daze, he classified her, put her in the shameful niche which was hers. A great flush of bewilderment swept into his face.

"Don't understand!" Lydia laughed harshly. "I say you understand! Maybe you think you can abuse a girl like that and get away with it in this town, but not while she's in my house, you can't!"

"There's no stopping me now, Elliott. I've come to show you up—and to show the town what a scoundrel a founder of lies, a snare and stepped closer to her.

His face was drawn and pale, now, jaw set, and his eyes flared dangerously. "This is some outrageous plot," he said, "and so low that only those nearest him could hear. This is done deliberately to give me a black eye before these people here! You're a party to a filthy scheme, whoever you are!"

"Fine words, Elliott! Fine words! But this girl's tears and misery are on your head and if you won't help her, why, she goes back where she came from tomorrow!"

and the sounds carried through the room. "Gone! Fled because she believed this woman? His heart went cold but he calmed himself and stalked out of the room."

Brandon, alone in his office, drank deeply from a whisky bottle. Then, a telegram had scrawled an Ontario address. The message itself consisted of but two words: "Send Red."

He signed his name and sat back, brows drawn and after a time nodded vindictively.

Out at the Hoot Owl Ben Elliott went through a week of unbroken dismay. It was a situation such as he had never dreamed of facing.

Dawn had heard and seen and believed! She had fed the hall, convincing him of her belief in Lydia's story. Dawn had passed and he had heard nothing from her. He was impelled to go to her but, under such circumstances, a young man does not do that. There are some affairs so complicated that words fall flat.

He was walking, wondering grimly what Dawn was thinking then, what she was doing; he was hearing once again the bitter voice of Lydia's hearing, in memory, the hush fall over that dance hall.

CHAPTER X ... The rifle bullet had passed so close above Ben's head that he had felt its breath even before he was aware of its whiz.

A bullet ... here ... for him! A hunter? But what would a hunter be shooting at here? That bullet was designed for him and had missed by inches. And he was pitching and somersaulting a fall, letting himself go limp. It was the only protection he could conjure.

He saw nothing, no movement, even; heard nothing. He was a-tingle, scarp creeping with an odd sensation as he waited for another bullet from these heights to the eastward.

After a moment he rose, went forward again and entered the shadows boldly. No one was there, for certain, but before he had gone more than a few paces he came to that which he sought: a snowshoe track, visible in the gleam of the softness of the snow. Whoever had gone that way had sunk deeply.

He followed this out of the thick timber to a little clearing. The trail was not visible in the darkness so he struck a match and holding it cupped in one hand, bent low.

The flare showed the track of a long, narrow shoe plainly and as he moved the tiny torch along toward his tip he stopped all movement. The match burned out. He moved on to the next track and lighted another. He examined several of the imprints made by the shoe. Then he went as rapidly as possible back down the slope to the road and started on to camp.

After supper Ben called Bird-Eye Blaine to one side. "I'd like to have you harness the supply team and spend an evening in town," he said.

"The little barn boss cocked an inquisitive eye. "Just in town, Mister Elliott? Or for something special?" "Something special, all right. But no one else is to know. What I want to find out is this: Who is wearing a pair of Canadian snowshoes with the webbing in the toe of one foot so it makes a hole about this shape."

on a leaf of his notebook. Bird-Eye scanned it and nodded. "Take it easy. Maybe you won't find out tonight. But make a start, anyhow. If you should have any luck, stop, and let me know your way back. I'll ride that far with you."

It was after midnight when Ben Elliott roused from his sleepless bed to hear Bird-Eye speaking to his team leader. He crawled out of his blankets and opened the office door to let the other in, but before he asked any questions lighted a lamp.

"The barn boss blinked. "I dunno 'bout that. It ain't no good, I'd say. They're the property," he said, with an emphasis on the word "property." Red Bart Delaney, a celebrated killer from somewhere in Canada!"

"What I have, he was mixing up in that war on the Zing-Wauk. A hired killer. "Killer is right! 'Nd what may be a-doing in these parts?"

"Well, he brought his stinkin' prisings into Tincup Wednesday night at six o'clock, and he had the favorin' Joe Pietre's hotel. The snowshoes was in 't' office 'nd it come up so I didn't have to seem curious to find out whose they was. He's here lookin' fer cedar, he says. But it gives a body a lot of bother wonderin' what his real business is. Lylin' 's natural as breathin' to 't' looks."

"I can tell you, Ben said. "He's gunning for me, Bird-Eye." "Sain'ts! ... I thought it, I did! Ah, he's!"

"Yes, he started today. I was shot at with a rifle two miles up the road just at sundown. The man who shot me showed up and said the rifle was broken. He wouldn't be lending his goggles to me."

"Bird-Eye stood motionless and silent for a moment before he spoke. "The grip of the rifle cracks the two barrels as somethin', 't' safer y'll be, Mister Elliott! He's a hard chunk, him. It's Nick Brandon's work, who's tried everything else 'nd who'd not raise to try murder to get you down, Benny?"

"Likely you're right," Ben said and rubbed his chin with a knuckle. "But we have to prove the fact. There's nothin' we can do about, now, we know the man's here to get me. Likely he thought he got me. Still there was he? Um ... Well, that's somethin' to think about, Bird-Eye. You better fix for camp, now, and get some sleep. I may call you in the forenoon."

"Bird-Eye sniffed and twisted his head gravely and after adding imprecations to Nicholas Brandon and warning Ben to stay close to the office, departed.

He could be heard unblanketing his tent and climbing into the sleigh; and when the frosty runners screamed in departure sounds came from that second bedroom behind the partition, the door opened and John Martin stood looking out. His dark eyes held on Ben Elliott, anxious and troubled.

"I couldn't help hearing," he said simply. "Of course not, John. Looks like he's in town—with a grin. There's 't's none of my affair, Elliott, but I'm an older man than you. I've seen trouble ... plenty." His voice dropped significantly, as though old custom were being opened. "I've heard of Delaney. Every man in the timber has heard of the Zing-Wauk war. I can't help but think Bird-Eye's advice is good. Swear out a warrant for him the first thing. This is a time for caution. I'll do you no good to take risks."

"I'll not walk into any traps, but if Brandon thinks he can make me hunt my hole."

"Oh, Brandon!" The cry was bitter and Brandon threw his arms wide in a gesture of helplessness. "You've got to watch him as you're never watched a man in your life. Why, son, you don't know you don't dream, of the ends he'll go to!"

If I know what to expect next. But one thing he can bank on: I won't run. I'll drive him into the open if I can by hook or crook, but I won't run!"

"No, I know you won't. But I wish ... Oh, how I wish you'd counsel with some one else, with Able or anyone. You're young, you're in danger. ... And this matter you just mentioned: Can't you think of Dawn a little? If you love her can't you see that she has a right to believe that you will protect yourself?"

The man's voice had fallen to a broken whisper. He held out both hands in appeal and tears sprang into his eyes. This man, this mature, quiet gentleman, this stranger to the country, begging him with tears in eyes and voice to consider Dawn McManus struck Ben dumbfounded.

"Oh, it's only that you've shown yourself to be so decent," Martin said after a moment, emotions under better control. "I hate to see you putting yourself in danger."

"I won't lack my head into any noose," Ben replied. "Lord, it's late. We'll need clear heads to meet this situation. Better get into the old blankets."

But he did not sleep at once. He lay awake a long time, thinking of Red Bart Delaney and Brandon and wondering how he could prove their relationship. ... And speculating on Martin's outburst, the man's keen hatred of Brandon, whom he probably had never seen, his intense interest in Dawn McManus, and the somewhat odd and unnatural was there, Elliott told himself. Still, he added, you could stake your last hope on a man like John Martin.

Early the next forenoon the merchants and traders and loafers in the business places on Tincup's main thoroughfare saw something to nip their attention.

Ben Elliott came driving into town at a spanking trot, his team of alert drivers coated with frost. This was nothing unusual. But when he brought them to a cranking halt before the bank building, over which Nicholas Brandon worked and lived, jumped out, three blankets over their backs and led them to a post, a few necks were craned.

"Throughout the evening before Brandon had gorged himself on a sense of relief. At eight he had passed Bart Delaney on the street. None had been broken. He wouldn't be lending his goggles to me."

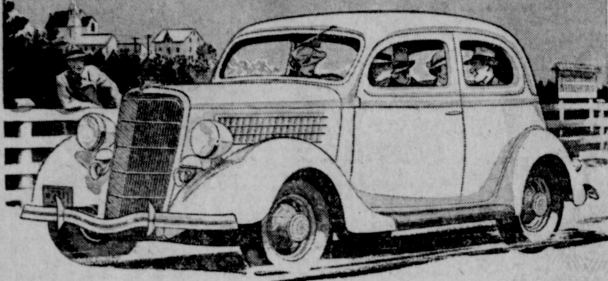

"In his tracks ... Two mile above 't' mill." "Will be alone?" "Sure ... They'll find him stiff. 'Who do we settle?"

"As soon as the bank opens tomorrow, inside, the man seethed with a savage exultation. He crossed the street, drunk with the feeling of relief, mounted to his office and drank to his own success. ... And drank again. For hours he sat at his desk, whisky bottle

MORGAN 4-H GARDEN DEMONSTRATOR REPORTS

Miss Marjorie Rhodes of the Morgan 4-H Club made the following report at the last meeting of the club. My garden joined the yard on the south and because it was too expensive to fence the yard and the garden separately, I decided to fence them together. The fencing was completed in December and I began fertilizing at once.

Next my garden was plowed and harrowed. I irrigated it thoroughly and in a few days my Daddy made rows for me. I irrigated it again and began planting.

First I planted purple top turnips for greens only, also I planted lettuce, mustard, spinach, and radishes. After a few days I planted onions and cabbage. Of course no garden is complete without beans so I planted beans, beets, carrots, English peas, cream peas, and black eyed peas. I also planted two bushels of Irish potatoes.

By keeping the ground moist the sand has done little damage to these young plants. We are now having plenty of greens, radishes, mustard, and lettuce for the table. I plan to plant more vegetables as soon as the weather permits.

I find it a great pleasure to work in my garden and I am very proud of the compliments I have received on it.

ON TEXAS FARMS

Gardeners hung up a $21 value per garden record in 1934—and that in spite of the drought—(we should have a rubber stamp for those last words)—according to figures compiled by Extension horticulturist J. F. Rosborough from the annual reports from counties having Extension agents, whose 22,683 garden reports showed $480,253 profit.

Good as this was, Rosborough is backing 1935 gardeners to beat it and to this end is coaching them on sub-irrigation to defeat the drought. And warning them to watch out for mildew on the peas and all the varied crawling, creeping, sucking, chewing, insects likely to cut down profits.

"Making the punishment fit the crime," he has a spray or poison or trick ready to meet each attack and wise gardeners will follow his advice as to which to use. That way neither time, labor nor money will be wasted. To prune or not to prune? is the question that vexes tomato growers. Whether it is better to pinch the tender sucker and so increase the size and earliness of the fruit, or let them grow and lose this great advantage, Rosborough says nips 'em.

He says also stake tomato plants in the region of generous rainfall. In regions of limited rainfall staking is not necessary since it is done to insure that the fruit does not rest on the ground and become blighted.

Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Boyd have as their guest, her father, Mr. G. A. Reeves of Tatum, New Mexico.
