TAKE OFF - The Grumman hydrofoil gunboat, Flagstaff, begins to rise on her twin foils during a high speed practice run off the coast of Florida. The 73-foot, aluminum vessel is undergoing extensive seatrials prior to final operational evaluation by the U.S. Navy at Coronado, California. The boat was designed and built by Grumman at its Stuart, Florida, installation.

The hydrofoil gunboat "Flagstaff", newest addition to the U.S. Navy's surface fleet, is undergoing intensive seatrials in the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of Florida, prior to shipment this summer to Coronado, Calif., for full-dress operational evaluation.

The futuristic vessel, which "flies" on submerged foils or wings that lift its hull completely above the waves, is 73 feet long, and weighs about 60 tons. Exact speed is classified, but the Navy acknowledges that Flagstaff will exceed 40 knots in heavy seas.

Built by Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation, the new hydrofoil can perform a variety of missions in the open ocean or near shore areas. It is expected to be useful in action against enemy shore in-stallations or light surface craft, in patrol and reconnaissance roles and in air-sea rescue operations.

The Flagstaff was designed, constructed and tested under a $3.6 million Navy contract which called for a patrol gunboat featuring unusual stability at high speeds in rough waters. It is constructed entirely of corrosion - resistant aluminum and incorporates an autopilot system which automatically

The Flagstaff has two modes of operation. One is hullborne travel at slower speeds, when two diesel engines provide the propulsion. At higher speeds, however, struts or arms which support three foils resembling a section of airplane wing, are lowered into the water and the vehicle rises or "flies" on these foils. This action lifts the hull above the water and practically eliminates all drag. A gas turbine engine propells the hydrofoil gunboat at the higher

he owed a merchant in Henrietta

Miss Goade's mother went to raising fryers commercially. They built a cage on the back of their buggy large enough to hold several dozen fryers, and Arcola hitched the Indian ponv to the buggy and headed toward Henrietta many times. Eventually the debt was paid off. She recals that on the trips she bought 10 cents worth of cheese and crackers, enough for her lunch and for her mother's supper.

Mss Goad and her mother saved their heifer calves and increased their stock of cattle from year to year. She arose many nights and went to the pasture to time of calving.

Having a yen for variety and at the same time a desire to add more money to the family bank years. She took a course in practical nursing and she was the most "sent for" person in the community when sickness invadin Levine's store at Wichita Falls. She was president and secretion for 25 years.

Even though she has no children of her own, Miss Goad has 23 nieces and nephews who are nar and dear to her. She lives between two nieces, Mrs. Carl Robertson and Mrs. Hubert Weseman, who is dividing her time betwen Iowa Park and El Paso until next January, when she will retire and return here for permanent residence.

Miss Goad has some family heirlooms which she treasures. Among these are a set of walnut chairs with binder twine seats approximately 100 years old, made by her father when he and his bride went to housekeeping; and a cane made by her father after losing his lg a few days be-fore the close of the Civl War. She has two other canes, but uses her father's on special occasions. She has an old amber demijohn, cupboard, trunk, wardrobe, and pictures.

Attesting to her love for people is the story of Mss Goad's fster son Jimmy Fletcher. When he was about 10 years of age he came to her house one day and said, "Miss Arcola, would you side and told her his time on have me? I don't have anyone or earth was short. He told her that a ywhere to go."

Filled with mixed emotons, she told the lad she was an old maid and set in her ways, and reminded him that living with her would not always be a rose-tinted bubble. He was willing to take a chance, and he has been a source of pride and joy to her. He tived with her until he entered the service during World War II.

He is married and has three children. The family live in Jal. N.M., where he is a welder.

As a farm woman, Miss Goad did the same kind of work and had similar experiences of others, both men and women, who farm and raise cattle. She was undoubtedly a stout-hearted female, not easily disheartened and with philosophy of not looking back once she had set her hand to the find and assist a cow during the time of calving see herself as "a frail female with only a short stick n her hand for protecton." She had gone to the account, Miss Goad clerked in a pasture late onei fall afternoon store at Joy for a number of to drve the cattle in for milking and feeding. A blue norther blew in which was somewhat of a pep pill for the animals. The cows dashed by her like a whirled the home. She later clerked wind. Th bull, bringing up the rear, rushed by her too, but a few yards ahead of her he turned tary of the Joy cemetery associa- and started pawing the earth. She stopped, petrified with fear, stood still and took stock of the situation. She continued to stand still while the bull pawed and snorted. expecting him to charge any minute. She could hardly believe her eyes when he turned and ran after the cows. She felt divine intervention more strongly than she did "a stroke of luck."

> The animal generating happiness in Miss Goad's life at the present time is Boots, a black and white dog about six months old. He came to a neighbor's home about three months ago and followed the neighbor to Arcola's house, where he lay down on the porch leading into the house from the garage.

She was not interested in owning a dog, and did not encourage him to stay. When night came she put the puppy outside and closed the garage door, hoping he would sense her "no dogs wanted" attitude.

The little animal had apparently becme attached to Arcola, and he was not to be discouraged. Whn night came he dug under the garage door and rested comfortably on the porch.

Goad realized what had happened not be blown until there is adefsent the puppy to her for a com- vicnity. C. D. Director Pete Shook panion and perhaps for protec- asks that when you hear the alarm ton as he grows older.
