SHADE INCREASES LIVESTOCK PROFITS

Government and private industry research experts have found that there is a direct relationship between livestock comfort during hot weather and their rate of gain.

The most important factors are plenty of water and good shade during the hottest part of the day, according to United States Depart-ment of Agriculture and agricultural college tests.

Research findings show that aluminum is considerably more efficient in protecting livestock from solar radiant heat, the "invisible enemy" of livestock comfort, than any other type of shading. These findings are confirmed in tests cosponsored by the Reynolds Metals Company.

"You can't measure solar radiant heat with an ordinary thermom-eter," says C. H. Jefferson, director of Reynolds Metals Company's Farm Institute, "because these invisible heat-energy waves from the sun do not turn into heat until they touch an object, such as an ani-

Agricultural engineers need complicated scientific equipment to measure how well different types of shade shield livestock from solar radiant heat. The difference, however, is easily noticeable by anyone standing under an aluminum shelter for awhile.

If livestock are not sheltered from these rays, Mr. Jefferson points out, they become overheated and partially lose their appetite. This results in lowered duction-less meat, less milk and fewer eggs.

Iowa State College recently made a study of protection provided by various types of shade. In this test, as in others, aluminum was the most effective solar radiant heat-reducing shade. The following table shows the relative effectiveness of different types of shade:

Roofing material (no sheathing, 45° mitted to underside slope, 10 MPH wind) (in Btu/ft 2/hr) Aluminum __ ___ 11.9 Asbestos-cement shingles ____

Asphalt shingles ___ 57

new galvanized _ 39.1 Wood shingles (1 yr. (From thesis of Alvin C. Dale, Iowa State College, Ames.) In a farm test to determine how aluminum shade prevents the hotweather slump in livestock production, Morton Brothers of Elizaville, Ind., cooperating with Reynolds Farm Institute, erected a simple, pole-type, aluminum cover shelter over the feed bunk for 44 head of cattle. This was the only shelter provided for these cattle during the test.

In another lot they placed 44 similar cattle with a conventionally galvanized roof barn for shelter.

During the 42-day test, the cattle under aluminum gained an average of 9.37 pounds per head more than those under galvanized shading. They also reached market finish two weeks earlier and brought $1.50 per cwt. more because they graded higher.

Similar results have been recorded in tests with hogs, dairy cat-tle and poultry. "The use of alumi-num shading," Mr. Jefferson reported, "is the most effective method developed for battling the 'summer slump' in livestock production and helping farmers boost their profits.'

Note: Further information on this subject is available in a new book, "Cold Spots in the Sky Can Help Fatten Your Livestock," published by Reynolds Metals Company, Dept. PRD, 16, Richmond 18, Virginia

50 Years

Park was the scene of the wedding fifty years ago, Aug. 15, 1909, when Ethel Willard became the bride of Will Detlefs. The ceremony was performed immediately following the evening service when the pastor, Rev. A. Walter Gehres, asked that the congregation remain in their places for the ceremony which united two members of pioneer families of the area.

Ethel was daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Willard who had moved to Iowa Park in 1896 and established a home northwest of town on a farm. Will was son of Mr. and Mrs. Hans Detlefs who had arrived in Iowa Park in 1899, and made their home on the eastern edge of town.

The young people had met at various social functions and on the eveneing of Aug. 15, the ceremony was performed as Mrs. Detlefs termed it as a typical "country wedding."

The bride was attired in a white embroidered cotton dress and the couple were unattended. Their first home was in Iowa Park where the groom farmed and also served as constable. He has spent many years in this type of work, having served as constable, city marshal and deputy sheriff.

The family remained in Iowa Park until 1919 when they moved to the Rio Grande valley and established a home. While at Weslaco, Mr. Detlefs was employed by that city as water superintendent and city marshal.

On their return to Iowa Park in 1928, Will accepted the position of city marshal and continued in that capacity until 1949. He has been employed as jailor for Wichi-

Mr. and Mrs. Detlefs are parents of four children and grandparents of seven. Their son T. W. (Johnny) makes his home at Odessa, as do two daughters Mrs. Jack Scott and Mrs. Burk Scott. The third daughter Mrs. C. M. Davis makes her home in San Juan, Porto Rico,
