L. R. PEARSON CLUB SPEAKS

Representative L. R. Pearson spoke briefly to members of the Callahan County Club on various bills passed by the 52nd Legislature, just adjourned. Mr. Pearson stated that the legislature was in session 151 days, and had been praised by Governor Shivers for its economy.

Referring to the bills passed by the law-makers he stated that the tax bill was probably the most important. Some $24 million was trimmed off the State's budget.

The drivers' responsibility bill is an important measure, he told. The department of public safety claims that 85 per cent of our highway accidents are caused by 15 per cent of the drivers. The bill, he told, would not require drivers to carry insurance, but the driver would be held responsible for damages he causes. His drivers license can be taken away from him if he doesn't pay for the damages he causes.

Another bill that is of great importance, he explained, is to help keep doctors in the smaller towns. Under the provisions of this bill medical students will be loaned $5,000 with which to pay their way through school. If they practice medicine in towns under 2500 population after finishing school the state will give them credit on the note of $1,000 per year. If they should decide to practice in the bigger towns, they will be required to pay back the $5,000 with interest.

Visitors of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Kerby and son, Glen, Tuesday night were their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Bost of Bartlesville, Okla.; Mrs. H. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Mr. and Mrs. Bost left Wednesday for Austin, where they will attend the University of Texas. Mr. Bost will complete work on a P. H. D. and Mrs. Bost will work on a Master's Degree.

THIS WEEK IN Washington

THERE IS ABOUT a two to one chance that the peace talks now going on in Korea between representatives of General Matthew Ridgway and Red China may be successful. Likely if the cease fire order holds good, there will be discussion looking toward an armistice, but when peace will come will depend upon weeks of discussion.

In the meantime, the government here in Washington is operating on a stop gap basis. Since no appropriation bills were passed by the congress when the end of the fiscal year, June 30, rolled around, it was necessary to pass emergency stop gap bills in order that the agencies of government could function and the employees be paid.

By the same token, neither house or senate could get together on an extension of the highly important national defense act, which also expired June 30, so after an all-night session, congress passed a 31-day extension of the act, but hedged it about with a ban on any roll-back in prices during that 31 days. So the consumers who were due to reap the benefit of some price roll backs on thousands of articles which the office of price stabilization had already ordered effective July 2, will be prevented from cashing in on those lower prices.

OPS was forced to issue a quick price freeze again on these articles as of June 30. These price roll-backs would have applied to machinery, cotton textiles, shoes, wearing apparel and many household appliances and such items as bolts, screws, nuts, plumbing and drainage specialties, builders hardware, soaps, cleansers, watches, mattresses and box springs, agricultural insecticides and other items.

What will happen to the foreign aid program, including the Marshall Plan and the aid asked for by General Eisenhower is still to be seen. It may be that some stop-gap legislation will be necessary to keep the country from lapsing or repudiating some of its commitments under these programs. Because of Democrat increases in the senate, such as the replacement of GOP Senator Vandenberg, deceased, by Senator Blair Moody of Michigan, two Republicans have been ousted from important committee posts on the senate appropriations and banking and currency. The two senators bumped were those with lowest seniority, Senators McCarthy of Wisconsin and Bennett of Utah. The GOP assigned McCarthy to the senate rules committee and Bennett was assigned to postoffice and civil service committee.

This leaves McCarthy without a major committee assignment. In the meantime, a resolution adopted by the Young Republicans of the Eighth District of Wisconsin, Senator McCarthy's home district, urging McCarthy's defeat in 1952, was given widespread publicity here. The resolution urged the McCarthy defeat on grounds that he has accomplished nothing of importance during his five years in office and "has engaged in character assassination and mud-slinging tactics, thus discouraging good men from holding office."

The house on a roll call of 240 to 139 passed a bill authorizing the importation of Mexican farm labor and permitting farmers to employ Mexican "wet-backs"—those entering the country illegally. A similar bill authorizing recruitment of Mexican farm labor was passed by the senate May 7, but the senate bill contained an amendment making employment of "wet-backs" a felony.

The senate crime investigating committee now is engaged in a probe of narcotics in the country. As a result of its hearing, nineteen narcotics control bills have been introduced in this congress, largely protecting minors from drug addiction. In the entire 81st Congress only one measure was introduced.

Strangely enough, two former top-notch government employees upheld the morals and ethics of the average government employee in Washington in testimony before Senator Paul Douglas' senate labor subcommittee on ethics in government. They were former Secretary of Interior Harold Ickes and former chairman of the atomic energy commission, David Lilienthal.

How To Conquer Fear

JAMES M. BIRD, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, says, "If you would be sure of controlling your fears, literally burn your bridges behind you so you will have no avenue of escape. Then advance against your fears and destroy them—before they can destroy you."

By the time James was 13 years old he was six feet tall and rather frail. Standing head and shoulders above his classmates made him self-conscious and in time he developed a terrible inferiority complex.

Whenever he engaged in sports he made a poor showing, and because of his not strong constitution he often suffered injury. When a little later enrolled in a school of commerce, he fought all his worries and fears right along with him, and as a consequence, although his classmates were a friendly lot, he failed to make a single friend during the four months he was there.

It was the army that took him out of his dilemma. He worked hard and obtained a commission, believing this would help him to face the two things he feared most: people and what he thought was cowardice.

One day the test came. He went into action with the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. He experienced terrifying fear time after time; his blood ran cold, his knees turned to jelly. But as he came through each experience he said to himself, "I was afraid, but here I am." And he realized anew each time that he could control his fear, and that through this fear he was really becoming a better leader of men.

NO U TURN FOR SAFETY

Quite a number of Baird people have been wondering what kind of traffic regulations must be worked out for the sake of safety where Market Street runs into Highway 80, in front of the courthouse. This is going to be a dangerous spot in our town if traffic rules are not established to prevent accidents there.

Some have suggested various arrangements of traffic lights and signals. Some say to make a U turn anywhere within the block, but not allow cars to drive into the new highway for a U turn.

There could be numerous rules established to regulate the traffic at this particular spot, but as we see it, there is only one thing to do to give the maximum protection to our people at this place. Do not allow a U turn anywhere near there. The only safe practice for motorists driving onto Highway 80 from Market Street is to stop, then make a right turn only. This is the way we see the picture. What do you think?

The Lazy J Ranch's 1950 Ford F-3 Express with POWER PILOT was one of more than 5,000 Fords in the nationwide, 50-million-mile Ford Truck Economy Run.

George Stephens of the Lazy J Ranch says: "The low cost my Ford Truck showed in the Economy Run speaks for itself. I got regular service checkups from my Ford Dealer."

"My ranch 'workhorse' runs for only 2 1/2¢ a mile!"

Ranch owner George Stephens proved for himself, in the big Economy Run, just how little it costs to run his Ford Truck!

"The Lazy J's Ford Express did itself proud in the Ford Truck Economy Run," says Stephens. "Daily records kept during the entire six months show that our Ford Truck ran up a total of 5,109 miles. My out-of-pocket expense for gas, oil, maintenance and repairs was exactly $123.51... about a $20 bill each month... only 2 1/2 cents a mile!"

The Ford Truck POWER PILOT carburetion-ignition system is one reason why Ford Trucks cost so little to run, in ranch work or any work. The POWER PILOT gives you the most power from the least gas. In the low-price field, only Ford has it!

"Great Manhunt" Set in Rugged Dolomite Mountains, Stars Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

The ruggedly beautiful Dolomite Mountains in Italy provided the sweeping background for the compelling climax of Columbia Pictures' "The Great Manhunt" (formerly titled "State Secret"), gripping action drama which is coming Tuesday to the Plaza Theatre, with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Glynis Johns and Jack Hawkins co-starred. Their most inaccessible crags, seldom photographed, are not as famous as the fabulous Alps, but they have a wild and rugged beauty all their own.

In filming the climatic mountain scenes, the stars and technical unit the "The Great Manhunt" encountered innumerable difficulties as they literally sweated to carry out the mandates of the script. Fairbanks, as an American who has come into possession of a state secret in a strange country, discovers that the knowledge may cost him his life and so he flees, with the state police hot on his trail. He involves Miss Glynis in his troubles and together they blackmail a black marketer, Herbert Lom, into smuggling them past the mountainous border to another state—and safety.

Sidney Gilliat, who wrote, produced and directed "The Great Manhunt," chose the most photogenic portion of the Dolomites, the Vajolet Towers, as background to the stirring climax of the story. Mountain guides were chosen, equipment purchased and the production unit was assembled for laborers almost as arduous as Hannibal encountered scaling the Alps.

Before sunrise each day, "The Great Manhunt" unit and players began climbing slowly, single file, towards whichever mountain had been chosen as the day's location. Red splashes of paint on the rocks indicated the safest route; to miss a rock might have meant being lost forever. One threatening day a hail storm trapped Miss Johns at the top on an 8,000-foot climb and she was compelled to stay the night in a rough wooden refuge hut miles from human habitation.

One of the trickiest location spots was a particularly narrow ledge half-way up the Vajolet Towers. A foot and a half wide at its broadest, the ledge vanished to nothing at the corners where there was only a rope between the individual and disaster. People walked gingerly to and fro, clutching the tools of their trade, hoping the shots could be completed quickly and they could descend to a safer place.

In all there were three cameras operating in the mountains, and the work of the second camera unit was considerable. Often they had three mountains to negotiate in one day. With a small convoy of porters they would haul themselves up to some pointed rock where the camera would be fixed with difficulty. But like real troupers, actors and technicians persevered in the face of all obstacles—and their reward—and that of audiences —is one of the outstanding action dramas of the year.

"The Great Manhunt" is a Frank Lauder and Sidney Gilliat Production for Columbia Pictures.

ILLUSION

A Short Story BY LEONARD BUTTS

BESS KIMBLE, 23, stood there in the kitchen, a short compact bundle of blond freshness. Her blue eyes were quizzical as she listened to her fiance's words from his end of the telephone in the den.

"He can't open the safe," Herbert Stanley said, dropping the receiver on its cradle. "Even with the combination."

"So what?" Bess asked.

"I've got to dash to the office. And by the time the coffee's ready, I'll be back."

"Golly ding! Mr. Bate must be a helpless boss." Bess followed Herbert into the living-room.

"You said it," Herbert was at the door. "Be back in no time."

Bess sank listlessly into a chair. She disliked interruptions and delays. Especially now. For tonight, she intended to return the engagement ring because Herbert wasn't exciting enough. If just once he'd do something romantic, reckless, she'd take it as a sign of normalcy. She'd love him like she had at first.

Her parents were out. So just to give this unhappy occasion a bit of warmth, Bess had suggested, "Let's make some coffee." But Mr. Bate finally had reached Herbert by first calling his home.

But nothing could change Herbert. As usual, he'd repeated, "You said it." Repetition. Always dry, trite repetition.

So, feeling sorry for him and herself, she was ready to return his diamond ring. No longer would she have to evade his insistent requests for a wedding date.

But suddenly, she remembered that he hadn't asked lately. Counting the days and weeks, she rose and went into the kitchen. She supplied the percolator with water and coffee. The matches. Where were they! She opened the cabinet where they were usually kept. But there was none. She went into the living-room and dug into her handbag. Not a single match. She'd never known it to happen before.

Then she remembered that Herbert had left without his topcoat. It would be hanging in the front closet. He was never without matches.

No matches in the outside pockets. In the inside pocket, her fingers struck a sheet of folded paper, but no matches. She hesitated, then drew the paper out and unfolded it.

The note read: "My sweetheart, I'll be expecting your call tonight at nine. I can hardly wait to feel your arms around me again. You know how it is, dear, until things are settled. Always yours, Emma."

Her face burned. The clock on the mantel struck nine. So that was it. "The telephone call was a fake. He's probably talking to her this very minute."

Quickly, she thrust the note back into the coat pocket and closed the closet door. Now it wouldn't hurt to return the ring. She held it near the light and watched the stone sparkle. Beautiful. One thing, he wasn't cheap.

She poked nervously at the roses on the table and moved the rocker. Emma was Mr. Bate's secretary.

When Herbert came in, Bess was in the kitchen rumaging in the drawer of a floor cabinet.

"What, no coffee yet?" he panted.

"Plenty coffee, but no matches."

"Imagine that," he said, taking a book from his pocket.

She thought she saw a new look in his eyes. A wicked look.

Presently, the coffee was bubbling and spreading its aroma, while Bess sliced an apple pie. So that was why he hadn't mentioned marriage lately. Emma was a snip, not good enough for Herbert. Slightly she watched him sitting there with his hands folded on the table.

"What about the safe?" she asked, pouring the steaming coffee.

"Oh. He pulled the door open just as I dashed in."

"And you dashed right out again?"

"You said it."

He was eating pie and sipping coffee. Bess doing the same, marveled at his composure. He was handsome and manly. And there was something mysterious about him. Of course, most any girl could fall for him, like she had.

Only one thing was left to try now. It would be quick, one way or another.

"About our date, Herbert," she heard herself say. "You think December the tenth would be too soon?"

He dropped his fork. "Too soon? Tomorrow wouldn't be too soon. You mean that?"

"Uh, huh," she replied, wondering what had happened to Emma.

The next morning, on his way to the office, he halted and stared at the note.

"What again?" he thought, grinning. It's Randlett's coat. And he's got mine."

"The Thing," A Menace From Far Skies, Comes to Plaza as Subject of Melodrama

Hailed as one of the most suspenseful pictures ever made, Howard Hawks' production, "The Thing," offers a cast of brilliant new faces in an amazing story of a terrifying visitor from the sky.

The thrilling melodrama distributed by RKO Radio, has its locale near the North Pole, at a base where a group of American scientists are investigating a mysterious space-ship crashes near by, the scientists radio the Air Force at Anchorage Alaska, and a group of Army fliers arrive on the scene.

The space-ship is accidentally destroyed but one of its "crew" is rescued and taken to the base. The subsequent thrilling developments take the form of conflict between the scientific group who wish to study the fearsome "thing" and the Air Force Captain who realizes it poses a terrible threat to all civilization and wants to destroy it while there is yet time.

Kenneth Tobey, as the captain, and Margaret Sheridan as the pretty secretary of the scientific group, head this competent cast of newcomers, which producer Howard Hawks hand-picked for his unique offering via Winchester Pictures Corporation. Dewey Martin and James Young as two of the fliers, Douglas Spencer as a newspaperman, and Robert
