

Baird Star Editor Elected President of West Texas Press

J. Marvin Hunter, Jr., publisher of The Baird Star, was elected president of the West Texas Press Association Saturday when the convention was in session at Alpine. He replaces L. B. Smith of the Brady Standard.

Hunter was accompanied to the convention by his wife and little daughter, Carlie Sue. At a breakfast given for the association by the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, Hunter received a plaque as winner of first place in the WTCC community service contest. He was commended especially for an outstanding safety campaign.

The Baird Star also won third place in the West Texas Press Association's general excellence contest for weeklies and semi-weeklies in towns under 2,000 population.

Other officers elected were Bill Collins of the Midland Reporter-Tribune, first vice president; Ed Harris, Jr., of the Graham Leader, second vice president, and Mrs. June Jones of the Hamlin Herald, secretary-treasurer and editor of the association's magazine, the West Texas Publisher. She succeeds Mrs. Maud Green of Kermit, who has held the office four years.

Elected as new directors were Ben Oglesby of the Bronte Enterprise, Roy Fox of the Colorado City Record, and Smith Holdover directors are Aaron Edgar of the Munday Times, Charles W. Roberts, Sr., of the Andrews County News and Ned Williams of the Winkler County News at Kermit.

WTCC Breakfast

At the WTCC breakfast, an annual courtesy to the West Texas editors, Fred H. Husbands, executive vice president and general manager of the regional chamber, outlined the work of the chamber to date, emphasizing continued efforts to maintain municipal water priorities and studies that now are being made of ways to publicize tourist attractions of West Texas. He strongly urged formation of area groups to develop tourist facilities before a general advertising program is undertaken.

More than 90 West Texas newspaper people registered for the two-day convention, which was held in the ballroom of the Holland Hotel.

After a brief opening session Friday morning they toured the Davis Mountains Friday afternoon, and on Saturday afternoon went to the Big Bend National Park for a week-end outing.

On the Saturday morning program were discussions of teletyping by Bill Berger, publisher of the Hondo Anvil-Herald, and of Fairchild engraving by Hugh M. McBeath, Jr., of Abilene. Vern Sanford, manager of the Texas Press Association, and W. J. Hooten, editor of the El Paso Times, also addressed the convention.

The convention adjourned after a luncheon at which Sul Ross College students entertained.

The Clyde Lions Club Carnival Opens Today

The Clyde Lions Club's 3rd annual carnival opens this evening at 8 o'clock with a big street parade. It will be held Friday and Saturday this year for the first time. Heretofore the carnival was held only one day, but in that day huge crowds attended and were highly entertained.

The carnival will be bigger with more entertaining features than ever before. Members of the Lions Club have been working ceaselessly for weeks to make the big show a great success.

The new Clyde community building, a project of the Lion's Club will be the scene of the carnival. The building will house many displays, while the grounds will be occupied by entertainment concessions.

Admission is free. Proceeds from the concessions will go to worthy civic projects for the good of the town and community. For two fun-filled evenings, the public should turn out for the Clyde Lions Club carnival.

Wilbert Voshelle Writes Star Editor

The editor received the following letter last week from Wilbert Voshelle at Chunchon, Korea:

"Dear Mr. Hunter: I have been aiming to write you for some time and just never got around to it, but since it has been raining for the past 72 hours. We have nothing to do, all the aircraft are grounded on account of the weather, no mail coming in or going out by air but, believe it or not, the Star came through today rain or shine. Mother sends it to me every week and I keep up with all the home town news. It sure seems funny to pick up and read about all the fellows that are in the service now and most of them veterans at that. Most of them were only children in the first and second grade of school when I left in 1940 for the service. I knew nearly every kid in Callahan county, since I worked at the show for a number of years and now to see them all grown up and in the service makes me think I must be getting older than I thought.

Well, enough of that. What I really wanted to tell you is if any of the boys around Baird ever get around Chunchon, have them stop by and spend the night with me. We have some fine cooks and the chow isn't too bad. Everyone in my outfit knows me, so they won't have any trouble locating me. So tell them to drop in any time and if they want a hop in a T-8 to see the country from the air I can fix them up on that too. My outfit flies ground support for the ground forces, and we have quite a few of the ground force personnel attached to us as observers. We are known here as the "Misquetos".

Well, I will close for now, tell every one hello for me and I plan on visiting all of you in November. So until then, I will be seeing you.

Sincerely yours,
Wilbert Voshelle

Decline of Texas' Small Farms

What has become of the "40 acres and a mule"? Where are those small farms which were passed from father to son and worked by all members of the family? Why is the younger generation forsaking the land to seek a livelihood in large cities?

The modern trend towards a larger metropolitan population and a corresponding decrease in rural resident is being viewed with alarm by many persons. The question foremost in their mind is: "Will the declining rural population in Texas hurt the state's future agricultural productivity?"

A parallel situation arose about 150 years ago when Thomas Robert Malthus, a brilliant but rather short-sighted English economist forecast starvation for the human race. The world population, warned the Englishman, is fast outstripping agricultural production.

But Malthus underestimated the farmer's ingenuity in constantly improving his crop raising methods. Because of this ability, and the advantage of mechanization, the present day farmer produces enough food for himself and 13 other persons, plus a vast quantity of goods for foreign export. In Malthus' day, however, it took three men on the farm to feed one man in the city.

The rural population may be declining in Texas but the land is not being abandoned. Instead, more land is being farmed by fewer people. While there has been a decrease of some 4,500 farms in the state since 1919, the total cultivated land has increased 31,368 acres.

Farm tenancy was 37 per cent in the state in 1945. Five short years later, the figure was reduced to 30 per cent by population shifts. Yet, during that same time, Texas farm crop acreage increased 4 million acres.

Mechanized farming is largely responsible. The tractor began replacing the mule more than 30 years ago. In 1920, there were 9,048 tractors on Texas farms. This year, the figure is around 250,000. The mule is becoming a part of the past.

We in Texas have nothing to fear in the present trend as long as the farmer continues to increase his per-acre yields, improve his soil conservation practices and work for better plant and animal breeding.

EDITORIAL

WE ARE HONORED

It is with humble gratitude and a feeling of real satisfaction that we report the honors bestowed upon us at last weekend's convention of the West Texas Press Association held at Alpine.

While we are indeed proud to be president of the West Texas Press Association, and to receive third place in the general excellence contest for weeklies and semi-weeklies in towns of under 2,000 population, it is the plaque we received as winner of first place in the West Texas Chamber of Commerce community service contest that we prize most highly. We would rather be known for the service we render our community than for any personal accomplishments.

In announcing the winners in the community service contest, Wendell Bedichek, public relations director for the West Texas Chamber of Commerce stated, "More interest was shown in this contest than in any year since it was established in 1946. This time we used a new judging system. A panel of three judges devoted a good deal of time to the entries. The judges were Harry Provence, editor of the Waco News-Tribune and Times Herald; Lon Atkin, publicity and public relations director of the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce, and Olin E. Hinkle, professor of journalism at the University of Texas.

"By using a 5-3-2 point system for first, second and third rankings, the winning newspaper scored 13 points, the second place newspaper ten points and the third place paper seven points."

Of the entry of the winning newspaper, The Baird Star, the judges' comments included the following: "It conducted a very excellent safety campaign, not only in news features, but also with good editorials. The cooperative ads used in connection with the campaign were also better than average. Coverage of other civic enterprises as projects seemed adequate also." Another judge said, "Few pictures were used but the newspaper hit hard in numerous editorials supporting community projects. Morale building editorials were effective because they documented facts. This paper had been active many years in seeking an adequate water supply and was able to report completion of a dam which gave the city an award for improvement in water service. The paper supported many projects with news stories and editorials, including safety, a cooperative feed mill, firemen's activities, rat control and a drive for band uniform fund by band members' mothers."

Placing second in this contest was the Radio Post, Fredericksburg. Ranking third was the Hamilton Herald-News.

DALE CARNEGIE

★ AUTHOR OF "HOW TO STOP WORRYING AND START LIVING" ★

THIS STORY of two persons who learned to conquer themselves was told me by David S. Gonyer, Bridgeport, Conn., after he came out of the Army.

His mother was injured in an automobile accident and this left her in a nervous state just before David enlisted in the navy. His enlistment hit her hard and in her condition she made no effort to conquer her worry over him. No matter that many other mothers were suffering the same trial, no matter that the majority of our soldiers and sailors have returned safe and sound from our wars, she saw only her own trouble.

So David wasn't frank with her and allowed her to think that he was not stationed anywhere near a danger zone, although he was in the thick of the fighting at Leyte Island. He also asked relatives and mutual friends not to tell her where he was.

Suddenly letters from her ceased and his sister wrote she had burned her hand but was all right. Later her letters resumed. It wasn't until he came home that he learned she had worried herself into a nervous breakdown immediately following someone accidentally telling her that he was in action. When he saw her after his return she had to be carried up and down the stairs.

One day her doctor knowing that her illness was due wholly to her mental attitude, suggested that she try Christian Science. She asked a practitioner to visit her, and after several discussions, she was convinced that her trouble was brought on by her own self.

When David arrived home, he scoffed at Christian Science; but only for a short while after he heard his mother's story. She had been so ill that she had been sent to a hospital. That was when her letters to David had ceased. It was after she had gained faith in God through Christian Science that she resumed her letter writing. His mother's example so impressed David that never again will he be subject to Fear as he once knew it.

Comanche County REA Meeting

The program for the Comanche County Electric Cooperative's Annual Meeting—Electric Fair is looking better and better as the Big Day draws closer, next week, August 22, at Eanes Park, Comanche. For the benefit of those who aren't familiar with the location of the Park, arrows will show the way from the square in Comanche.

A circus atmosphere will prevail, as for the first time, entertainment and electrical exhibitions are combined with the cooperative's necessary business to give the members a full day to be long remembered.

Two of the headline attractions are "Bozo the Great" and the Amateur Talent Contest. Entrants in the Amateur Contest have been requested to register by the 14th but anyone interested should still contact the REA office in Comanche up to the time of the meeting. This contest sponsored by Kelvinator Corporation, has as first prize a table model clock radio and the winner here will be invited to compete with winners from 17 other Cooperatives where this Fair has been held.

Likewise exhibit space will be available to civic and service groups up until the last minute. Dealers over the territory are enthusiastically sponsoring the show and many fine exhibits will be on hand.

Attendance prizes will be numerous and of very real value, including such items as automatic coffee makers, waffle irons, and electric churn, radio, clocks, etc.

One very interesting exhibit will be a model of the Texas State Electric Cooperative's pole creosote treatment plant, which furnishes individual Electric Cooperatives poles on a non-profit basis. Many other interesting and unusual exhibits are being planned.

Plans are definitely completed for a Jamboree to begin at 8:00 p. m. for the benefit of the Cooperative's many friends in the towns and cities in the territory. This will be a good opportunity for any of the Cooperative's members who are unable to attend the business and entertainment sessions during the day to get the benefit of most of the entertainment and to inspect the varied and interesting exhibits.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Stanley of Carlsbad, N. M., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Stanley and children and Mr. and Mrs. V. F. Everett and family.

The editor and wife received greetings from Mr. and Mrs. Roland Nichols, who are vacationing in the west. The card was sent from Yellowstone National Park, with a message that they were enjoying the cool weather and would soon be home.

Cong. Cox Expresses Thanks To Voters

Jack Cox of Breckenridge, recent candidate for Congress for the 17th Congressional District, expressed his sincere thanks to the many voters who supported him in the election. In a statement issued from his headquarters, Cox said that he felt humbly grateful for the splendid support shown him throughout the district.

"It is indeed gratifying to know that I carried 8 counties out of the 12 in this District," said Cox, "and I can hardly find the words to express my appreciation of the hard work that so many people put forth in my behalf. To the many fine folk in my home county and throughout the District who gave unstintingly of their time and effort, I owe a debt of gratitude that I will never be able to repay. It is a tribute to their work to know that only 1/4 of 1% of the votes would have turned defeat into victory. To all of you who voted for me, my sincere and deepest thanks. I feel that it is a healthy and good sign of the awakened interest of the people in their government to realize that this was the largest vote ever cast in a congressional race in this district. Such interest should be kept alive and records checked, for it is in that way that our government will remain in the hands of the people where it belongs. My wife and I and our family feel that the opportunity to meet all of the fine folks in the district has been one of the richest personal experiences in our life and we will cherish the many friendships we have made. Again, my sincerest thanks to all the voters of the District."

Livestock Trade Slow At Fort Worth

By TED GOULDY
FORT WORTH — The Monday trade on cattle and calves at Fort Worth was very slow with a weak to unevenly lower undertone. Some of the best fed cattle and fat calves held about steady with other slaughter classes weak to 50 cents, spots $1, and more lower. Stockers and feeders were the slowest in several weeks. Some feeder heifers and thin stocker cows sold near steady but other stockers, and especially calves, were sharply lower, some drastic declines in effect later in the day.

Butcher hogs advanced 50 cents per hundred and sows were 50 cents to $1 higher. The restriction on sending feeder pigs back to the country was still in effect and any pigs that were on the market had to sell for slaughter at sharply reduced prices.

Sheep and lambs generally held prices as compared with the previous week's close.

Good and choice slaughter steers and yearlings cashed at $36 to $32.50. Plain and medium slaughter kids sold at $15 to $27 and cull yearlings $12 to $14.

Fat cows brought $14 to $17, and canners and cutters cashed at $8 to $14, some old shells down under $8. Bulls drew $13 to $22.

Good and choice slaughter calves sold at $25 to $28 and plain and medium butcher sorts cashed at $16 to $24, with culls from $12 to $15.

Good and choice stocker calves drew $24 to $29 and plain to medium quality sold for $16 to $22. Stocker and feeder steers and yearlings of good and choice kinds sold at $22 to $25.50, and common to medium sorts sold at $15 to $20. Stocker cows drew $14 to $18.

Good and choice butcher hogs reached a top of $23.25, most sales $23 down. Sows cashed at $16 to $19. Pigs sold at $10 to $12.

Medium, good and choice Spring lambs sold at $20 to $27 and stocker and feeder lambs sold at $12 to $20. Stocker and feeder yearlings cashed at $10 to $15. Old wethers sold from $7 down. Two-year-olds sold from $12 downward. Slaughter ewes cashed at $6 to $6.50.

Keep costs down, performance up, with a Dodge

- Haul at lower cost with a Dodge truck — 1/2- through 4-ton—that's "Job-Rated" to fit your job.
- Boost gasoline mileage with features like high-compression ratio and special gas-saving carburetor.
- Reduce upkeep with such wear-saving features as floating oil intake and positive-pressure lubrication.
- Enjoy super-smooth performance with gýrol Fluid Drive, wear-protecting advantage available on all 1/2-, 3/4-, 1-ton and Route-Van models.
- Come in for a demonstration—and a good deal!

Save on gas and oil. All 8 Dodge truck engines give exceptional economy with plenty of power. You get advantages like lightweight aluminum pistons, improved fuel system with economy control, precision-balanced crankshaft, and other money-saving features.

Save on maintenance. Rugged engines and chassis make Dodge trucks famous for dependability. Upkeep costs stay low because of special Dodge features like 4-ring pistons, chrome-plated top ring, and wear-resisting exhaust valve seat inserts.

Save with long life. Because Dodge trucks last so long, depreciation is less and trade-in value stays up. Long life and dependability are result of such features as alloy steel springs, shot-peened axle shafts, and extra-sturdy frames.

My Dodge trucks save a lot of money on gas!"

says H. A. ROBINSON
Contract Hauler,
Mobile, Ala.

"On a 200-mile run I save 1 1/2 to 2 gallons of gas. I get this saving seven days a week, and on my two trucks that means I save over $300.00 a year on gas alone. That's good, because each of my trucks makes an average of 50 stops per day hauling mail.

"My first Dodge truck cost me only $54.00 of repair expense in two years. I ran my second Dodge over 103,000 miles in two years and spent only $15.50 on it for repairs.

"If I'd known what I know now about Dodge trucks, I'd have switched to them long ago and saved myself a lot of money."

GOOD SENSE

BY RICHARD HILL WILKINSON

THEY DECIDED to be sensible about it.

"I'm only making $30 a week," Ken said. "But I've a good chance of making more soon. I couldn't ask you to get along on $30 a week."

"We'd be happy," Jill told him. "I'd be happy with you no matter what you made a week," she added, practically. "But it is more sensible to wait. Things would be so much easier."

Jill's parents nodded their heads wisely when she told them about it. Their daughter was smart. She had good sense.

"Ken's a bright boy," Mr. Whitney agreed. "He'll be making $50 per in no time at all."

Mr. Whitney had faith. Jill had faith. Ken had faith. But Ken had more. He had incentive. Jill was the incentive. Up until a month ago women hadn't bothered him much. Then he'd met Jill. Neither of them had ever quite recovered from the discovery that they loved each other. It was too wonderful.

Ken was a writer of advertising copy. In the days that followed he wrote advertising copy with a zip and a sparkle that he had never thought himself capable of. He thought surely that Mr. Santrell, his boss, would notice. Mr. Santrell did. He complimented Ken highly and bestowed upon his young shoulders an encouraging pat. But the old pay envelope still contained 30 bucks, no more.

Weeks passed. Ken still zipped out his smart copy, but that was all the good it did him. Every week he opened his pay envelope with an eagerness that made his disappointment double-edged. Every week he hoped that he could call on Jill and tell her that he'd received the raise and there was no need of waiting longer.

But that day didn't come. He and Jill talked about it. Occasionally one of them became discouraged. Then the other assumed a cheerful and optimistic attitude. The raise would come. It was bound to.

But it didn't. Two months passed. Ken began to despair. Jill, he imagined, was becoming less interested. He fancied she was falling out of love with him. He couldn't blame her. On the other hand, if her love were genuine, she'd wait forever.

His fears were realized one day a week later when he saw her out driving with a young man with a black mustache. Sight of the pair laughing and talking together was like a knife-thrust in his heart. He made inquiries and learned that the young man with the black mustache was Cy Parker, son of a business associate of Jill's father. Cy was just home from a year abroad after graduating from college.

The next night when Ken called on Jill he expected her to explain about Cy Parker. But she said nothing. It was a dreary night. The moon was obscured by heavy clouds. There was mist in the air. Ken drove home early. They said good-night without kissing.

Ken wished he were dead. He might, he thought, as well be. Death could have no sting like the pain in his heart.

Thereafter the zip and sparkle went out of Ken's advertising copy. He could think of nothing but Jill. Mr. Santrell no longer paused beside his desk to compliment him and pat him on the shoulder. He began to fear for his job. He was miserable.

Three nights later he called on Jill. She was alone, waiting in the living room, dressed for a party. He knew she must be going out with Cy Parker.

"I guess," he said without preamble, "you've thought it over and decided it was a mistake."

"Thought what over?" Jill said.

"About marrying me. If you loved me you wouldn't care how much I was making."

"I've already told you I could be happy with you no matter what you made a week."

"But you wouldn't marry me on 30 dollars a week."

"Who said I wouldn't?"

"Why," said Ken, "why—you did."

"I never. I never said any such thing. I merely agreed with you when you said we ought to be making more. I thought you wanted me to agree. I thought you didn't think we could be happy on $30."

"Well, for gosh sakes!" said Ken. He stared at her. She was looking at him round-eyed. There was a sort of hopeful appeal in her expression.

"Well, for gosh sakes!" he said again, and suddenly popped out of his chair and strode over to the divan where she was sitting.

When Mr. Cy Parker rang the Whitney doorbell 15 minutes later no one answered it. The elder Whitneys were away and Jill was busy. Quite busy. After awhile Mr. Parker went away.

Shortly after this Ken sat up straight. He looked like one who had swooned into a coma and liked it. Jill said:

"And now that we've decided we can be happy on 30 dollars a week, I want to tell you something. I feel that I have the right."

"You certainly have," declared Ken earnestly. "No one in the world has a better right."

"Then tomorrow you start writing advertising copy with the same zip and sparkle that you did before. And after you've been doing it for a week you go into Mr. Santrell and demand a raise."

"But, holy smoke! I can't do that! Why, he might fire—"

"You do as I say," Jill told him. "After all, my opinion ought to be considered if I have to get along on half your salary."

Ken did as he was told. The following Saturday night he rushed up the Whitney front walk with wild whoops of joy.

"I knew he'd give you the raise," Jill smiled. "Your stuff is good."

"What gripes me," Ken said, perplexed, "is why I didn't think of asking him myself long ago."

"There's a lot of things you should have thought of long ago," Jill said wisely.

From Cattle Range to Cotton Patch

By DON H. BIGGERS

Dick Ware, for several years Sheriff of Mitchell county and afterward United States Marshal for the Western District of Texas, once told me in an amusingly interesting manner how he chaperoned the M—Cattle Company from Austin up through the Panhandle. They were all Englishmen and had come over here to select a location for a cattle ranch. In the early part of the summer of 1881 they reached Austin on a special train, but as their arrival had been heralded several weeks previous, all necessary preparations had been made for their reception. They were met at the train by brass bands, committees of prominent citizens, State officials and leading society ladies, and were driven from the train to the hotel in decorated carriages. Receptions and champagne suppers followed, and for several days all business was virtually suspended in deference to the functions in honor of the distinguished guests. Ware, who had for several years served as a ranger and was well acquainted with Western Texas, was selected to guide the party on their tour. There were lords, dukes, peers, earls, valets and flunkies, newspaper correspondents, generals, captains, admirals, and dudes. The expedition was regularly organized by electing Rt. Hon. Sir Somepunkins director general, and his first official act was to direct that Ware don a uniform indicative of his official rank. But Ware refused to comply with this request, giving as a reason that he was well acquainted out West and might meet some of his old friends, and he wouldn't want to make them feel envious or estranged. This matter having been amicably adjusted, Ware was given carte blanche to provide everything necessary for the trip, which he proceeded to do to the amount of about $1,500. Then he listened to the suggestions of a friend and invested about $1,200 more in luxuries, but he said the fact suddenly dawned upon him that merely because he was spending the money of wealthy people who did not care for expense did not justify him in reckless extravagance, so he called a halt and with a guilty conscience made his report to the director general.

"I think I have made all necessary purchases. Guess I've been mighty extravagant, but if I've bought anything we don't need I'll have the order countermanded," said Ware, at the same time producing a list of the articles, which ranged from toothpicks to two-horse wagons, the price of each article being given and the total summed up. His highness scanned the list and then shook his head and began walking the floor, evidently greatly vexed and thoroughly disgusted. Ware knew he had no business to spend too much money, but he didn't think his highness would be so highly indignant about it, especially after being advised that the orders could be countermanded, if necessary, and he was on the point of apologizing and tendering his resignation, when Rt. Hon. Sir Somepunkins walked up, shook the list of articles at Ware, and blurted out:

"Blow the bloomin' cost! You haven't spent enough to pay for a decent slave. I would infer from the kind of stuff you have on this list that you expect only the flunkies to accompany you on this trip, and 'ow the 'ell do you expect us to have any comfort with a mess like this? Would you 'ave us ride in contraptions like these and drink water from muddy streams? Not a bit of champagne nor a carriage on the list. Maybe you know all about the Western country, but I see that you don't know much about the comforts for an English gentleman."

"Then I got mad and swelled up and told the 'English gentleman' that if it wasn't for insulting the Governor, who was a friend of mine, and had insisted that I take the job of guiding the outfit through the West that I would kick an 'English gentleman' down stairs, and that if they didn't like my style they could go it, and that I would have nothing more to do with the commissary and caravan department; that they could fix that to suit themselves, and when they got ready to start they could send word to me and I'd be ready; whereupon I got my hat and walked out of the room, leaving his lordship looking more astonished than mad. I paid no more attention to the matter for three or four days, and hearing nothing from the parties, supposed they had procured another guide and pulled out, but one morning I received a message advising me to be at a certain place ready to start at a certain hour. I bought a box of cheap cigars, which, together with a change of underclothes, I packed in my grip and pulled out. When I reached the starting place I quickly realized why my penuriousness and lack of preparation had so offended His Highness. There were the two-horse wagons I had bought but instead of each wagon containing four or five earls, dukes, lords, etc., seated on piles of bedding and with their legs hanging over the sides, true Western fashion, they were loaded with provisions, guns, ammunition, champagne, beer, whisky, flunkies, tents, lounges, wardrobes and the like; while there was a great string of carriages, decorated with liveried drivers, loaded with lords, the lords in turn loaded with champagne, and the whole drawn by spirited horses in waving plumes. The carriages were surrounded by state officials and new made friends of the distinguished English gentlemen, sorrowfully bidding the guests good-bye. It was a sorrowful good-bye, too, for I don't think the Austin gang has ever had another such succulent morsel fall into their hands. I got into a carriage with Right Hon. Sir Somepunkins and two other descendants of nobility, and we were off. I thought from the expressions on their faces that smoking was offensive to them, so I threw away the bigger part of a 5c cigar and a few minutes later one of the mproduced a box of 50c cigars and presented me with one, whereupon we all smoked and then began a social intercourse which evolved into a warm friendship, for I came to know them as a jolly, good-natured lot of fellows, extravagant and impractical, but able to afford it. In view of my own ludicrous experience I never referred to the matter of expense, and as it was never intimated to me, I have no idea what the cost of that trip amounted to, but we were out several weeks, traveled through Western Texas, and all over the country, which is now the M—Ranch, and which was established as a result of the trip."

This is a conservative and true illustration of how the country was inspected and ranches located by some of the boom victims.

Extravagance of this character was the rule rather than the exception. One more instance presents itself. I think it was in 1884 that a big champagne supper was given in Colorado City, Texas, for which occasion the cost of the champagne alone was more than $3,000. The attendance was large, but notwithstanding this, there was a surfeit of full stomachs and a surplus of champagne. It was free, and hundreds of bottles were carried away by the guests, and perhaps an equal number of the guests were carried away by their friends. This is not mentioned as an exception, but as an illustration, for such events were common, and if Abilene, San Angelo, and nearly every Western Texas town now had the money that was spent in this way during the cattle boom Wall Street would not be the financial center of the United States.

The cattle boom era presented spectacles that will never be repeated in any country under any circumstances. It was a blaze of glory in a world of visions; a riotous feast on the crater of ruin. It was drink and merry, spend money and get more. The English nobleman, sent here, perhaps, as the "business manager" for some English syndicate, the native "cattle king" and the common cowpuncher were boon companions in social dissipation. They ate at the same table, drank at the same bar, gambled in the same game and all came to grief in one batch. With the Englishman the ranching business was more of a pastime than a business proposition, and losses and profits were of little concern to him, and as for the stockholders he represented they could change managers when it suited their convenience. The common, grown suddenly rich, could not comprehend how there could be any kind of adversity that would take from him the greater part of his wealth, and the cowpuncher figured on a lifetime job, good wages and a glorious old blowout every time he reached town. But when cattle prices depreciated from $35 to $10, $8, and even down to $5, per head, they discovered something they were not looking for, and did not have to send for an expert to read the writing on the notices from the banks and commission houses. Then the masks of rudeness were discarded and true manhood stood before the world in pathetic grandeur. When the sandstorms swept over the sun-plagued prairies, and the storm broke from the clouds of disaster, hurling hundreds of fortunes into one common pile of wreckage, many a cowman went to the rescue of his creditors and without a murmur gave up the last dollar he had in cash, cattle and intangible range rights, and only asked for an opportunity to make more money and pay every dollar he owed. Others were forced into bankruptcy and buried beneath judgments, while others paid their debts and had enough left to be independent, though poor compared with their former condition. The cowboy saw the folly of his ways and accepted a reduction in his wages as his share of the general calamity, though he viewed with alarm the encroachments of the barbed wire fence, which eventually forced him to turn to other useful pursuits—his pockets empty, his bosom full of regrets, his life full of experience and his head full of wisdom.

With the introduction of the boom the cattle business to a very great extent passed into the hands of new men, and with the crash there was another very general transfer of ownership. The first instance was an acquisition by purchase, but in the second, at least in a majority of cases, it was a sad surrender of property under forced sale.

When prices began to advance in 1881 what were then considered good average range cattle, though the commonest kind of scrubs when compared with the improved herds of today, were valued at about $8 per head, but by the latter part of 1882 these same cattle could not be purchased for less than $35 per head. It was in May, 1882, that Texas grass fed steers sold on the Chicago market for $6.80 per hundredweight, the highest market price ever paid for this class of stuff. Market prices were, on the whole, a shade lower during 1883, but the price of range cattle remained about the same as during 1882. In 1884 the market opened a little stronger than it had been during 1883, but closed considerably lower and the range price weakened perceptibly. In 1885 the market opened favorably, but went all to pieces in December, then came the collapse and prices went from bad to worse, reaching bed rock in 1887.

Everything from cobinations to over-production had been assigned as the cause of the collapse in 1886, but indiscretion more nearly embodies the cause of the whole trouble. One element of this indiscretion had already been alluded to sufficiently and the other may deserve more comprehensive presentation.

It was a rare thing that a cowman owned or positively controlled any considerable body of land. He depended wholly upon the stability of prices, the continued free use of the range and a succession of favorable seasons. He had not stopped to consider that prices were unreasonably high, his investments injudicious, free grass doomed by the natural, inevitable influx of immigration and a long succession of favorable seasons not a part of any country's history. He figured free grass as a part of his purchase right and he scoffed any attempt or advice to the effect that he secure his interest by purchase or other positive control. Originally the cattlemen were the bitterest opponents of the lease law, which they have since so determinedly fought to maintain, for experience has demonstrated that, in so far as their particular industry is concerned, it was a blessing forced upon them.

The boom ushered in a new era in the West, especially in the cattle business, and its collapse demonstrated that success depended not upon great herds of scattered scrubs, but upon well-bred herds, that the cattleman must own or control land and apply practical business methods to every feature of his business; but when the boom collapsed the crippled cattlemen were in no condition to acquire land, either by lease or purchase, and for nine years, beginning with 1886, it seemed that every power of heaven and earth had combined against the cowman. Drouths and die-ups followed and prices dragged along at starvation figures, with no apparent reason therefor.

In 1895 prices advanced again, and by 1898 had reached the boom degree again, but in 1900 began to decline and have since dragged along at a bare existence state, but there have been few failures and no universal disaster. The cowman was prepared to take care of his stock, and where he was a borrower the commission men were willing to take care of him because of this fact. He owned land, the universal basis of credit, whereas in 1886 he didn't own anything and owed everybody.

One illustration will doubtless serve to show how fictitious fortunes, which men thought were real, disappeared in 1886, like bubbles on the bosom of a swollen river. In 1883 a certain man owned a herd of cattle, estimated at 45,000 head, and in that year he refused $1,500,000 for his cattle, horses and range privileges. In 1886, after the collapse and the awful drift to the Pecos river, these same cattle, horses and range privileges sold for $245,000 and the man's liabilities exceeded his assets by $50,000. Had the prices of 1882 continued the natural increase and the number of beef cattle sold during the three years should have made the total value of this herd at least $2,500,000. With all it was not so bad, but hundreds of cases could be enumerated where such had been the case with individuals and companies operating upon a big scale. This is not an extreme illustration, but a fair medium. In fact, about the only men who did not suffer a similar fate were the very wealthy, who owed but little and did not have to sell, or the small owners similarly situated.

Few people can now comprehend by what means the boom of 1882 caused thousands of cattle to swarm upon the Western ranges, hitherto unoccupied and unoccupied. They were to a great extent a scrawny, sorry lot from the cane brakes of Louisiana and light-bodied, long-horned, fleet-footed creatures from all parts of Texas and Old Mexico; and another explanation of the magical multiplication of cattle on the Western ranges is found in the fact that there had for some time been a heavy immigration from all parts of the United States to Texas, and these people, for the most part farmers, had taken up small holdings in the central part of the State, a section previously devoted very extensively to stock raising, thus crowding out the cattlemen and forcing them to seek new locations farther west.
