Scenes From Bridge Opening Ceremony

These pictures of the opening ceremony mark the opening of the bridge over the Quitaque river. The ceremony took place on May 5, 1951, at 3 p.m., with the presence of the Floyd County reconnaissance, and an estimated 5,000 people attended. Among the speeches and events, a noticeable change was the construction of a new all-weather road between these two points was available, which heretofore were cut off by high water and floods. This new road seemed to run in the same channel and travel for many families, as the construction of the bridge made it easier for people of this territory in getting to and from medical attention and better housing. Furthermore, the new road would make it easier for them to travel to other conveniences when one or the other conveniences were not available.

In the lower panel, the traffic is being led by Pot. Salazar, formerly the county inspector. The most significant change is the new road, which has eliminated the need for people to travel through flood waters. The new road will allow people to travel to other conveniences more easily.
