

Tech Med School to Conduct Area Survey

SAFE AT FIRST! He cracked a bounding single midway between the pitcher's mound and third base. It was, he knew, a race to beat the relay to first. As he ran he saw out of the corner of his eye the pitcher receive the relay throw. In no time he hit the dirt, determining that sliding into first was the only change he had to beat the coming throw.

Caliche does not make the kind of pretty dust that major league dirt does on a slide. It just stays on the ground, is rough on the skin through the pants. But the play is all that matters, and the call. The first baseman (No. 55) was ready, the third baseman was watching the play at first, the pitcher was relaying the throw (ball is still in his hand); but the batter was safe.

Reese Officials to Announce New Land Use Zones Near Base

Colonel Edward Mendel, commander of Reese Air Force Base's 64th Flying Training Wing has announced that he, other Reese AFB officials and a representative from the headquarters of the Air Training Command from Randolph AFB, Texas will brief the news media and representatives of interest groups, local, state, and federal governments and agencies at 3 p.m. on Tuesday, June 22, in the Reese AFB Officers Club. The briefing is open to general public.

Topic of the briefing will be the Air Force's new Air Installation Compatible Use Zone (AICUZ) report for Reese AFB.

The AICUZ report defines potential noise and accident hazard zones and makes recommendations for varying degrees of land use within those zones for the protection of community property and its inhabitants. The report is intended to assist communities in recognizing air base impact on their zoning and land use planning in order to avoid future civilian community encroachment on the base.

No Decision on Proposed Clinics

By Richard Mason

A survey to study the medical needs and habits of people in and around the cities of Shallowater, Idalou, and Wolfforth will be conducted by the Texas Tech School of Medicine, Suburban Today has learned this week.

Approximately 60 households in the Shallowater area will be contacted during a 90 day period beginning Monday.

Results from the survey will be used to determine the medical needs of people in small town and rural areas around the City of Lubbock. The survey may be used to draw plans for a series of proposed medical clinics to be located in one or more towns in the Lubbock area. The Texas Tech School of Medicine is currently awaiting official word on how much, if any, money will be granted to the school to establish the clinics by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Official word on how much money, if any, the government will grant the Medical School will in late June

Last week Suburban Today learned that the concept for establishing medical clinics staffed by third year interns from the school of medicine, supervised by the faculty, and located in rural areas had been approved by the agency.

Tuesday a spokesperson for Congressman George Mahon's Washington office confirmed that the Medical School's application for a special projects grant had been accepted by HEW but said the agency had not made the grant awards yet.

A rider which said that not everything approved would be funded was attached, the spokesperson explained. However, Mahon's office confirmed that the Medical School was due to receive some funds.

"It won't be one of the ones to not be funded," the spokesperson said, adding that HEW was "uncertain as to the exact amount."

The Medical School would make the final determination as to where any possible clinic would be located.

Any difference between the amount of money the Medical School receives and the costs of starting a clinic would need to come from other sources.

A civic organization locally has taken steps to express its interest to the Medical School in locating such a clinic in the city. Last winter, a move was made to establish the Shallowater Chamber of Commerce which would name specific committees to work with the Medical School on the clinic concept. That group approved its by laws last week.

Shallowater Chamber of Commerce Holds Meeting

Members of the community and businessmen were invited to attend a meeting of the Shallowater Chamber of Commerce Thursday, June 11th, 12 noon, at the First State Bank of Shallowater - M.J. Williams presiding.

The meeting was held to hear from the nominating committee and to discuss business pertaining to the clinic.

The nominating committee suggested names for the board of directors and the chamber approved. The new board of directors for the Shallowater Chamber of Commerce will be

C.E. Pair, Jack DuLaney, Jay Stanton, Leroy Grawunder, Mabry Brock and Burnis Penny. The acting officers of the SCC were approved to carry out their duties for the remainder of the year. Those officers are: M.J. Williams, president; Louis McMenamy, vice-president; and Carey Gooch, secretary-treasurer. This will make up a board of nine men for the new Shallowater Chamber of Commerce. There will be two new directors elected every year involving a rotating system of election. Regular meeting times will be set up by this board of directors.

Comptroller Lists New Exemptions On Agriculture Supplies for Texans

Comptroller Bob Bullock said last week his office has rewritten sales tax procedures on agricultural exemptions to make them as easy to read as a mail-order catalog.

"Inflation has squeezed the farmer and rancher tighter than a bale of wet hay," Bullock said. "Our new procedures are clear enough for them to be able to take advantage of the sales tax exemptions to which they are entitled."

The new procedures will be effective about July 15, he said.

The Comptroller said the procedures clarify the fact that the following items are exempt from the sales tax: expendable supplies such as hand tools, baling wire, binders twine, hardware, tires and lubricants for farm machinery; fences, pens, gates, cattle guards and chutes; and structures that can be considered a piece of equipment, such as automated laying houses and farrowing houses. However, most farm buildings, such as barns, garages, warehouses and family dwellings, are taxable, he said.

Exemptions for farm machinery and equipment and storage facilities will be clearcut, Bullock said, as well as the general exemption for all medications and tonics given to farm animals. In addition, he noted, the term "farm or ranch" has been clearly defined for the first time.

Bullock said the new procedures tie in with Internal Revenue Service regulations. Proof that the IRS has allowed an item as an investment credit will be evidence that the item should be exempted from the sales tax, he said.

However, he emphasized, any farmer or rancher seeking an exemption must have an exemption certificate on file with the retailer at the time of purchase.

The Comptroller said that persons needing more information about the new procedures may call the Comptroller's Office toll-free at 1-800-292-9687.

Autograph Party to Honor Authors of New Book

The authors of "Panhandle Pilgrimage," R.L. and Pauline Durrett Robertson, of Amarillo, went on a 2½ year sojourn to research and write the book that honors the events and pioneers of the Texas Panhandle.

A Panhandle-wide autograph party will honor R.L. and Pauline Durrett Robertson of Amarillo, on Sunday, June 23, from 2 to 5 p.m., in the East Sunburst Room of the Quality Inn, 2915 Interstate 40 East in Amarillo. The Robertsons will be autographing their new book "Panhandle Pilgrimage: Illustrated Tales Tracing History in the Texas Panhandle".

To commemorate our Panhandle's Centennial, the Robertsons have spent the last 3 years researching and writing the book that honors the pioneers, settlers and events of the top 26 counties of the Texas Panhandle. It is published by Staked Plains Press of Canyon to coincide with America's Bicentennial and the Panhandle's Centennial.

Panhandle Pen Women and Amarillo Photographic Society are hosting the autograph party and extend and invitation to attend to everyone in the Panhandle - and especially to those whose families pioneered the top 26 counties.

SPORTS

by Joe Kelly

It's almost here, the 1976 Bi-Centennial All America football game. This is the biggest single sports event of the summer in West Texas and we hope there's a tremendous crowd on hand.

The players in Lubbock were considered among the best, if not THE best in the nation. It doesn't matter whether they played for a major college or a minor school, whether they made one of the "recognized" All America teams, or were overlooked.

I was talking with Dr. Wallace Hess Sunday. He is a team physician for the game each year and has seen them all come and go. He's one of those doctors who pronounce them fit or unable.

"We've got a lot of beef this year," he said with a quick grin, "but you know, of all the squads I've examined, I guess that first one with those Notre Dame players stands out the most. Man, there ought to be a law against anyone being THAT big."

These are big players. It's not surprising. The pros want size, along with speed, agility, lateral movement, meanness and a desire to hit people.

I've used this example before, but the main difference between Arkansas' Wayne Harris and Tech's E.J. Holub a few years ago was size. E.J. had it and that impressed the pros. Harris was a great college linebacker, but he didn't fill the needs of the pros.

So, fans will be seeing players that the pros wanted and put high on the draft list. You'll be seeing the bright lights of the 1975 collegiate campaign with two outstanding coaches again, George Welsh and Frank Kush.

It should be a wide open game, with plenty of passing and some exciting running. It's easier, of course, to install a passing attack in this type of game, so the running is secondary.

And, when you have someone like New Mexico's Steve Myer to do the chunking, you'd be foolish not to capitalize on it. Myer made believers of Tech fans for two years and he well could be the MVP in the game Saturday.

But Myer isn't the only exciting player. True, the so-called big names of 1975 are amazingly missing—again—but there is plenty of talent to please every fan.

One of the reasons that we hold Jim Plunkett in high regard, no matter what his fate in the pros, is the fact that he played in this game. Plunkett was an All American, the Heisman Trophy winner. He could have begged off playing.

But Plunkett didn't. He participated to the hilt and, as a result, one of the game's biggest crowds was on hand. Not all the big names can produce, but Plunkett did. *****

I, for one, hated to see what happened to the game this year. Many top players signed and then backed out. That made it necessary to bring in substitutes, almost at the last moment.

It isn't to the credit of the players who backed out. They had a commitment. They signed to play. Then, because of pressure from their agents and/or pro clubs, they backed out. They forgot that, without the colleges, they wouldn't have been signed by the pros.

The pros have earned no respect with this type of shoddy treatment. By some strange quirk, players that they won't let appear here somehow show up for the College All Stars-Pro champions' game in Chicago.

This, after all, is THE game of the American Football Coaches Assn. The coaches, who guided, directed, encouraged, prodded and otherwise led these players, deserve better treatment.

Regardless of which players aren't here, fans are going to see an outstanding game. It may not be perfection, you wouldn't expect that in a short week's time, but you'll see outstanding talent.

There will be plenty of excitement, some great plays, good contact. By all means plan to be in the stands. There's really no better way to spend a Saturday June's night. *****

If you're a golfer, don't go out to Reese AFB this weekend for annual Partnership Tournament. You'll be a week early. The dates were changed to avoid conflict with the AA game.

This popular event will unfold next weekend, with golfers competing for $1,800 worth of merchandise. There will be three days of 18 holes a day, starting with a shotgun sendoff. Entry fee is $20 and it covers a dinner Saturday night.

Did you know that a sleeping bag could be a death trap? An improperly dry-cleaned, aired bag can cause extreme sickness, even death.

Another more obvious hazard is eating food while in a sleeping bag. Food odor lingers and could attract a hungry bear, or some other animal. Sleeping bags should be shaken and aired regularly, with occasional washings. It will increase the life of the bag and it could save yours.

Kristi from Olton visited with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W.F. Williamson, Tuesday. *****
 Mrs. Pat Stanton and daughter, Terri, returned home Thursday night from a 10-day tour of Israel and Jerusalem and reported a wonderful time.

Ropesville Gets New Building

A building to house the Ropes ambulance and fire truck is now under construction. The building, to be financed by revenue sharing funds, should be completed by the end of this week.

The 25 x 50 x 12 foot structure is located next to the City Hall and is being constructed by Tusha Buildings, Inc.

Common sense is a quality many fail to understand.

What's Behind It? Saving Money

That's more important than ever these days. There are ways you can make sure that the energy you use in your new total electric home is used in the most efficient manner possible. So efficiently that you will save 40% or more on heating and cooling cost when compared to previously accepted standards for total electric construction.

WALLS in the ENERGY EFFICIENT HOME conform to one of three options that make sure heat stays where you want it...outside in the summer and inside in the winter. Option #1 with 6" walls and R-19* insulation, Option #2 with tongue and grooved 3/4" styrofoam sheathing, 4" walls and R-11* insulation, or Option #3 with R-15* minimum insulation. Walls also have a vapor barrier of 6 mil. polyethylene or foil-backed sheetrock. Sill insulation or sill caulking between the bottom plate and the floor is required.

CEILING in the ENERGY EFFICIENT HOME is insulated with R-30*.

FLOORS (if pier and beam construction) are thoroughly insulated using R-13*. In slab floors choose between Option #1, rigid urethane or styrofoam (3/4" minimum thickness) from top of floor along the outside edge of the slab down to the brick ledge, or Option #2 - pour vermiculite in the cavity between bricks and slab up to the top of the floor.

WINDOWS AND DOORS are weather-stripped and caulked. Double pane glass or storm windows and insulated core or storm doors also ensure energy efficiency. It is recommended that glass area not exceed 8% of floor space.

OTHER RECOMMENDATIONS include the use of cool fluorescent lighting, and a heating/cooling system like the heat pump that maximizes efficiency and an electronic air cleaner to be used with moving air systems.

Having Comfort

Yes, you can save money without sacrificing comfort. The total electric ENERGY EFFICIENT HOME is the way to save 40% or more of heating and cooling cost and still enjoy all the convenience available in a new home today. Call us this week for all the details.

*The "R" value in the guidelines indicates the "Installed Resistance" of the insulation to the flow of heat.

Clinton Vardeman Accepts Job With Public Health Resources

Clinton Vardeman has accepted a position with the Public Health Resources in Region I effective Monday and will be residing in Canyon.

Vardeman has been assisting in teaching Emergency Medical Technician Courses at Lubbock Christian College for the past two years and was president of the Emergency Medical Association but, due to his assignment, he has resigned as president of the group.

A native of Shallowater, Clinton is a '71 graduate of Shallowater High School and attended A&M University and Texas Tech.

He is the son of Mrs. Edith Vardeman and the late Carl Vardeman, longtime residents of Shallowater.

Following the Emergency Medical Technician class Monday night at LCC the instructor, Mrs. Bonnie Jackson, presented Clinton with a white cake, decorated with roses, bearing the inscription "Congratulations Clinton on your new job, we're gonna miss you." Members of the class, the hostess and Vardeman were served cake before going home. Three Shallowater residents who are members of the summer course, Ernie Rackler, Harry King and Dardie Williamson, were present for the occasion.

Poem Written by Mrs. V.T. Brady

The following poem was written especially by talented Mrs. V.T. (Blanche) Brady who has been writing poems most of her life. Getting most of her ideas from Bible scriptures, taking notes and listening to lectures.

The Bradys are very active in church work, and both teach classes at St. Luke's Methodist Church in Lubbock where they have been members a number of years.

The Two Hands

Daniel 5:26, John 8:6

The handwriting on the wall
That day as revealed unto men
Said, "they'd be weighed in the balance,
And be found wanting in their sin."

The handwriting in the sand
Was unrevealed unto men.
Jesus condemned not the woman

Brought there in her sin.
Jesus set down no words
Save those in the shifting sands,
But how mighty the impact -
The writings of these two Hands:

Jesus writing in the sand,
The fingers writing on the wall!
Each has a message for mankind -
To remind us of the Master's Call.

We crucify ourselves between two thieves - regret for yesterday and fear for tomorrow.

Sheridan's Ride

by Jack Sheridan

I've just been reading about the poor box office showing in that sophisticated center, New York City, of a film called "Hawmps" which has been playing to good houses at the Cinema I-II in the South Plains Mall.

Well, all I can say is that New Yorkers don't know a good thing when they have it on their doorstep. For "Hawmps," which was made by the Dallas-based Mulberry Square Productions, is without a doubt one of the most adroit, funny and delightful all-around family films to come out in a long, long time. If you haven't bundled your kids and the old man into the car and taken off to see this charmer, then get with it.

"Hawmps" is, of course, the Texan's way of saying "Humps" and that means camels. This story is based on fact for, in the days before the Civil War some brains in Washington decided that the U.S. Cavalry on the Texas border could do a lot better by substituting camels for horses. Well, after a slow start, with James Hampton as the dullish Lt. Clemmons dispatched to handle the project, the camels arrive and the men are dismayed to find their Arabians are not the horses they anticipated but the humped camels.

From here on out the fun is on. The rival horse unit guys and pokes fun at the camel-corps with a knockabout saloon brawl that is hilarious between the two factions and the culminating race over arid desert lands between horses and camels with dramatic and funny sequences. The finale is a wild slapstick howler that kids and grownups alike will enjoy.

It is impossible to tell you more. This is a sight picture whose antics will convulse you at times and please you - and the kids - all the way. The afternoon I caught the film the house was full of kiddies and when it was over they applauded (!) and that's the first time in a long time I've heard an audience applaud a film.

Joe Camp, who produced and directed this one and had a hand in the script as well, is that man who brought us the delightful "Benji," about the little lovable dog a year or so back and if anyone knows his adult-kid audience, Joe Camp does. He has given us a wholesome, G-rated film that is a welcome balm after so much trash and, if for no other reason, he is to be commended to the high heavens for his "daring" and his keen perceptions.

I can't say enough about "Hawmps." It makes the sly innuendo and vulgarisms of "Blazing Saddles," hilarious though it was, fall short of the promise. "Hawmps" is just plain, cornball, old-fashioned fun and I certainly am 100 percent for it all the way.

Incidentally, on the same bill with "Hawmps" is a delightful Mulberry short, "The Life of Benji" which is a charming recap of this little dog who first won us all when he was Higgins in the early TV series, "Petticoat Junction." You and the kids will love this one, too.

Now to turn to another outstanding film that also has been on the screen locally for a week or so. This one also has an unqualified endorsement. I am talking of Warner Communications production of "Ode to Billy Joe" at the Fox 4. Here is a film drawn from the Bobbie Gentry ballad lyrics of 1967 and a 1953, Mississippi-based story along the tragic Romeo and Juliet line.

If you will remember the song, Billy Joe jumped to his death from the Tallahatchie Bridge. He was only a teenager whose love and desire for the pretty, 15-year-old Bobbie Lee was thwarted by circumstance of a tragic nature and drove him, rightfully or in error of thinking, to commit suicide.

Here is a film of such tenderness and reality of the confusions of adolescent awakenings that it grips the heart and brings the tears to the eye. Seldom have two youngsters appeared so attractively, played so realistically and with such sensitivity as the leads Bobby Benson and the truly superb Glynnis O'Connor do. They are simply wonderful; no other two could have captured the entire feel, the encompassing turmoils and love than these two people.

The film was produced by Roger Camras and Max Baer, with Baer directing with uncanny knowing. Yes, this is that same Max Baer that was the clownish one in "Beverly Hillbillies" some time back and went on to make a killing with a rough-stuff film, "Macon County Line." From that one a moviegoer would never have dreamed that he could attain a film to the quality and depth such as "Ode to Billy Joe." He has - in spades. The photography, the delicate and subtle score by Michel Legrand, a touching song "There'll Be Time" spoken by Miss O'Connor and the entire production is excellent.

That goes for the cast, too. As Bobbie Lee's warm, concerned parents you couldn't do better than Joan Hotchkis and Sandy McPeak. James Best as the boss is fine as are Terence Goodman as the older brother, Simpson Hemphill as the pastor and all the others.

This is fine stuff, "Ode to Billy Joe," a PG-rated film, and a haunting, beautiful story set against the soft and verdant growth of Mississippi. I do urge you to see this one.

This is the weekend for the opening of the second season of the Summer Mumpers old-time mellerdrummer and olio of celebrated acts at the KoKo Palace, 50th and Ave. Q. The play, an original by city man Dan Dunahue, is in the cheer-the-hero, hiss-the-villains period, and is called "Who Was That Masked Man I Saw You With Last Wednesday." It is directed by Mrs. Pam Brown, and features a large cast of Lubbock Theatre Centre-Act IV favorites.

The show will be given each Friday and Saturday through June 24, with the gala opening night set for tomorrow (Friday). Prices are $3 for adults and $2 for children. You can have an optional dinner starting at 7 p.m. at $3.50 for adults and $2.50 for children.

The show starts at 8 p.m. with the olio acts, oldtime vaudeville at its best. It is followed by the performance of the play.

The entire project is a benefit to raise money for the Lubbock Theatre Centre, such a vital and necessary adjunct to Lubbock's entertainment and cultural life.

Just to show you what it entails there are more than 40 people given their time and energies free to the project which is no small undertaking.

So, if you have a couple of bucks and want to be royally entertained, remember the Summer Mumpers at the KoKo Palace. You'll have fun and a "different" kind of a time.

Summer Homemaking

For the past week Shallowater High School homemaking students have been involved in various arts and crafts. The girls first made a necklace of "rose beads" and shrink art discs. Then using various copper shapes, ground glass, glass chunks, and glass threads of different colors, the students designed and fired these pieces in a kiln. These are most unique and individualistic. Placed on a chain they are conversation pieces as well as attractive.

A macrame pot hanger was made also. The girls learned how to wrap and make the knots required for the small hanging pot hanger. These can be used over a sink in the kitchen.

On Tuesday, June 8th, Mrs. Bill Boone and Mrs. Kenneth Harrison provided transportation and sponsored the group on a field trip to Holland Gardens. Cindy Harris presented a most interesting program on "Using Plants in the Home and Ways to Display Them". She stressed the importance of a home displaying each individual's taste. In addition a demonstration was given on potting a plant, suggestions for watering, and care required. Many valuable tips were learned.

Next the group visited Itasca Draperies. Marie Kingsley discussed the various kinds of window treatments. The girls looked at the displays showing shades, valances, cornice boards, lambrequins, and pinch pleats. They were given the opportunity to tour the workroom where they could see the various stages of making drapes and lambrequins, the equipment and facilities. The girls also were given time to look at carpet samples, wall paper books, drapery swatches, and bedspread fabrics.

Karate Instructor Feels Sport Beneficial

By Richard Mason

When David Ellis was on guard duty in Vietnam there was little of interest going on, so he began to watch Korean troops in a nearby compound perform daily karate exercises. He was, he says, impressed.

Ellis himself soon became involved in karate and today heads a franchise of the Texas Karate Institute in Lubbock. The institute offers instruction by registered professional black belts along with curriculum accredited by the American Karate Black Belt Association.

"We follow a set curriculum which includes all facets of karate," the tall, muscular man with dark hair and beard says. Those facets range from Kata, a system of prearranged movements for attack and self-defense organized into a flowing dancelike pattern, to actual techniques for self-defense. "In our system a professional must have a minimum of 25 tournament credits to qualify for a black belt," the instructor explains. "You compete professionally."

Ellis adds this last bit of information because he is concerned that a lot of unqualified black belts who received their rank overseas have established studios to teach the sport, and may be turning out students who are themselves less than qualified. "To the untrained eye, even an amateur in karate will look fantastic," he explains.

Ellis is adamant about the reasons to study the art. While it is a competitive sport it is also good for physical fitness. And self-actualization, and self-awareness, and, of course, self-defense. Benefits from sincere involvement in the program range from increased concentration — children will do better in school the instructor says — to spiritual development.

But mostly, a person just feels better.

"A person who has learned self-defense gains confidence in himself and his techniques, knowing that if he was in a certain situation he could defend himself. Therefore," Ellis concludes, "a student eliminates fear from his consciousness."

Most people are motivated by fear, he said, and once fear is eliminated, a person's inner self can be revealed. Karate students become motivated from within, thanks to the self-discipline and increased ability for concentration and project an appearance of calmness and harmony, a feeling which, the instructor says, carries over to others.

But when people outside the sport think of karate, they do not think of an art which develops peace and harmony within. They perceive instead a method for destruction involving gouging, kicking, and punching. That misperception worries Ellis.

"People outside the art don't know the full extent of the training," the instructor says. According to the instructor many parents, in fact, feel their child will learn something deadly and go out and kill somebody. But a child cannot generate the force that an adult can and self-defense is taught so that the student uses only as much force as necessary to get himself out of a dangerous situation.

Self-defense at the Texas Karate Institute is taught in three stages. The first involves avoidance or escape. If an attacker attempts to put a headlock on the student, the student avoids it. It is best not to allow the person to grab you. But if he does, the next move is to escape — break the lock and get away from the situation. Sometimes the attacker persists which leads to the second level of application: control.

The student is taught a series of moves which enables him to turn and attack to his own advantage. For example, if an attacker grabs the student, the student can control the attacker by placing him in an armlock. The attacker is neutralized and no longer presents a threat.

But should a student's life be endangered, he must make a decision on the power and the force to apply to one or more assailants. If things look bad, the student will enter the third level of application: using a destroy technique.

Methods of self-defense are learned through constant repetition. To be successful, they must be reflexive.

"It actually becomes part of you. You decide what to do and how to use it" in each situation, Ellis says.

But learning takes time. A student who enrolls in the karate institute will spend the first three months learning about karate rather than learning techniques useful in self-defense. For the next three months, the student learns self-defense techniques. After a year's training, according to Ellis, the student is mastering some of the techniques, and after one and one-half to two years he can take care of himself in a situation where there are one or more attackers.

It takes three to five years for a student to become an accomplished martial artist "providing he has worked diligently," Ellis says. Then he is brought before a board of Texas Karate Institute instructors and given his rank. The board, since it is made of people not familiar with the student, compares the applicant's performance against institute standards to ensure equality in rank. If he passes the board review, the student is certified as an instructor.

Students at all levels of instruction can compete in tournaments. The tournament is divided into two phases of competition, kata, or form competition and kumite, actual sparring between two partners. Kata emphasizes the beauty of the art while kumite displays the sport's practical aspects. A kata competition is judged on difficulty of movement, power and speed, overall form, and attitude. Points are awarded much the same as for gymnastic competition, an exercise which Ellis says kata resembled.

Kata competition has different forms for different levels of excellence, and students at relatively the same level of accomplishment compete against one another.

In the sparring competition, points are awarded for successful blows in a timed match. In an amateur tournament (less than black belts) contact is often prohibited. "This is where the art form is important," Ellis explains.

But in a professional tournament safety gear is mandatory, and participants go full contact.

Members of the local Texas Karate Institute are arranging a tournament in this region for September 18th, and expect competitors from Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado, and Missouri. The event, the sixth annual West Texas Championships will be held in Fair Park Coliseum. A similar tournament last December drew 65 competitors.
