INSURANCE OFFICE IF BENEFICIARY TO BE CHANGED

insurance policies are not in line with the veteran's current wishes.

Insurance policies are not in line with the veteran's current wishes. In many cases, a widow who assumes she is the beneficiary, learns for the first time that the insurance does not go to her, but to her husband's mother, or former wife. In most cases, this results in a hardship for the widow and young children.

According to Henry Teubel, Veterans Service Officer for Swisher and Briscoe counties, the cause of the problem is that the veteran simply never got around to naming his wife as beneficiary. In a typical case, the veteran named his mother as beneficiary when he first took out his policy upon entering service, and when he eventually married, he forgot to inform the insurance office to change his beneficiary. When the veteran died, the policy still designated his mother to receive $10,000 in insurance. In some cases, the name of a former wife, long divorced from the veteran, will receive the insurance instead of the widow because the veteran died, the received and will receive the insurance instead of the widow because the veteran wished we here Tuesday and Wednesday with the veteran should know who assumes has beneficiary.
