Communities With Holdouts Face Loss Of Participation In Boll Weevil Program

Communities along the eastern edge of the Caprock of the Texas South Plains face possible loss of participation in the joint producer-USDA funded Diapause Boll Weevil Control Program if holdouts in their area continue to thwart efforts to stop the weevil's migration onto the Plains.

In a strongly worded statement released recently in Lubbock by the steering committee of the boll weevil control program, steps were mapped out which would lead to the exclusion of communities where producers having significant amounts and locations of acreages refuse to participate.

Such action could possibly affect several area counties where pockets of holdouts exist. The statement was compiled by the Technical Advisory Committee of the control program and adopted by the steering committee. The advisory group is made up of representatives of Plains Cotton Growers, based in Lubbock, Plant Protection and Quarantine Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Texas Department of Agriculture, Texas Agriculture Extension Service, the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, Texas A&M University, Texas Tech University, and several representatives of the cotton and allied communities.

The steering committee is composed of 10 persons from the South Plains area. The Diapause Boll Weevil Control Program was begun in 1964 along a 15-county area stretching from the upper South Plains southward and southwestward to the New Mexico line, along the Caprock. Its purpose is to use pest management concepts, including spraying and field scouting, to prevent the boll weevil from migrating westward from its overwintering areas along the Caprock.

Officials believe they have successfully prevented the establishment of overwintering infestations above the Caprock on the Texas High Plains and eastern New Mexico by treating infested fields along the Caprock. Cotton producers in this area voluntarily participate in the program which is administered by producers through Plains Cotton Growers and the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Plant Protection and Quarantine.

Producers refusing to participate give a number of reasons for holding out, this statement said. Many of them say they are fearful that treatments may open the door to bollworm infestations. To overcome the threat of a bollworm problem, officials have adopted recommendations of the advisory committee that treatments for boll weevil control be delayed from August 25 to September 6. This has the effect of delaying the disruption of beneficial insect activity which keeps the bollworm in check.

A second step to counter the objection would be to continue the practice of providing for bollworm counts in the field along with weevil counts. During the fall, field scouts are customarily sent out to survey weevil infestations. This second measure includes survey of bollworm activity as well. According to the statement, the steering committee aims to "make the best use of public and private funds which have been made available in good faith."

The community (a defined geographical area to be determined by the review committee) will be excluded for the remainder of the season or until such time that the appropriate committee may review a petition from the uncooperative growers requesting readmittance. Provisions also were outlined in the statement for dealing with potential holdouts. When USDA and PCG personnel are notified by growers that they do not want their fields to be sprayed, efforts will be made to "persuade them to stay in the program. If this fails, the growers will be told that their request will be honored, but that their names cannot be held confidential when there are inquiries about holdouts."

USDA and PCG officials say the steering committee adopted the statement with no ill feelings or harassment intended, but simply to make the best use of tax money and private funds which have been made available to the Diapause Boll Weevil Control Program for its specific goals. The recommendations of the statement take effect with the 1976 treatment program which already is being mapped out. Officials said information about the statement can be obtained by calling or writing Plains Cotton Growers or USDA-Plant Protection and Quarantine, in Lubbock.

"We the Women" of Quitaque are sponsoring a performance of "Hee Haw" which the Silverton Lions Club has presented in Silverton twice with excellent results. Some of the Quitaque musicians are included in the performance and also others in the cast. Those who have seen it say it is as good as the Nashville "Hee Haw." There is a cast of 35 members and they add musical numbers and jokes and salutes to try to improve the performance each time it is presented.

The proceeds will go to the Community Center in Quitaque. A number of items for the kitchen and other areas are needed. We feel it will soon be completed and will be available for many special events for the entire community. It is a place of beauty and pride. The cost of the tickets for "Hee Haw" will be $2.00 for adults and $1.00 for students. It is a two-hour show. If you enjoy a good show and good music, make plans to attend.

The date is Thursday, June 3, at 8:00 p.m. in the Valley School GYMNASIUM. There will be plenty of seating room.

LOVE IS NOT JEALOUS OR BOASTFUL

Jesus said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20:35
Jealousy and boastfulness relate to selfishness rather than to love and are based on the belief that happiness consists in getting something for self. Poor Eve made this error, and most of us have followed in her footsteps. Our world is in a constant turmoil because of the tension and frustration of people who are involved in trying to get ahead at the expense of others.
How grateful we should be to Paul for bringing these words of Jesus to our attention. Few are convinced that there is more happiness in giving than in receiving, and yet those who dare experience it find this to be true.
Paul himself is a good illustration of this principle. He gave himself unselfishly to the Ephesians. He did not boast of his greatness as an apostle, but voluntarily served night and day. Paul exemplified love in a wonderful way. When jealousy strikes, or we feel the need to boast, we may be sure that our love is a little weak, and needs to be strengthened.
As one has said: "If there is anything better than to be loved, it is loving."
Have a nice day.
