

LARGE ACREAGE IN COTTON IN '32 EXPECTED

DALLAS, Feb. 4.—Out of the perplexing situation in which the Texas cotton farmer finds himself as a result of court ruling that the cotton acreage reduction law is invalid is expected to come a large acreage planted in cotton this season, cotton authorities indicated today.

The decision of Judge W. C. Davis, of Franklin, in holding the acreage reduction law unconstitutional will be taken to the Civil Court of Appeals at Waco and finally to the Supreme court.

But regardless of whether a final decision has been made by the higher courts before cotton planting starts late this month in the lower Rio Grande valley, the Texas farmer is expected to turn as usual to his old standby—and plant cotton.

A. J. Stone, secretary of the Dallas cotton exchange, said he considered the law "dead as it lies," and pointed to the steadiness of the cotton market even after the decision of Judge Davis was announced. The dumping of cotton on the market by Japan Tuesday finally forced the market down.

If there had ever been any faith in the law's effectiveness, the market would have broken immediately when the court made its ruling," Stone opined. "Texas' experiment in acreage control has been more or less a huge joke ever since the governor called the legislature into special session to pass it."

Authorities in the cotton trade expected a reduction of only from 5 to 8 per cent in 1932 production despite low prices, Stone said. The cotton law, which would restrict the planting of cotton to 30 per cent of the 1931 cultivated acreage, was expected to cut Texas' cotton production of more than 5,000,000 bales in half in 1932.

Victor H. Schoffelmayer, agricultural editor of the Dallas News, expressed the opinion that the agitation for reduction of acreage has died down.

"All the feverish agitation attendant upon getting the Texas legislature to enact a cotton reduction law and similar excitement in some other cotton states last fall seems to have died out now that cotton planting time draws near," the agricultural editor said.

"The irony of it all is in the hue and cry raised by agitators who, last fall, had the law passed and now want it repealed on the theory that 5 cents cotton might prove such an inducement that competing states will plant an excessive acreage at a time when Texas farmers will be forbidden by law to do likewise. There never were two more incompatible premises."

Governor Ross Sterling has resisted all efforts to call a special session of the legislature to repeal the law. He had expressed the opinion that farmers in favor of the law did not build up a very strong case in the test suit of the law tried at Franklin.

Texas Cotton Co-operative officials announced that Texas farmers will cut their acreage regardless of the law's fate. They predict that cotton acreage will be cut 20 to 40 per cent. The threat of bankers withholding credit from those farmers who overplanted is held out by the cooperative officials as a deterrent to cotton acreage.

Bankers Contribute. The fact that Texas bankers have contributed largely in the 7,000,000 bale withholding program of the south, in which bankers cooperated with the federal government in financing the withholding from the market of that number of bales, may cause them to take a greater interest than usual in what their debtor farmers plant.

On the other side, however, is the recent activity of the Japanese and Chinese companies in buying large amounts of cotton, which is an important constituent in making explosives. War clouds now hovering over the Orient may have silver linings for the cotton farmer in increased demand for his product, and this may make some so sanguine as to plant lots of cotton.

Judge Davis, in his opinion holding the cotton law unconstitutional, said in part:

"In our judgment, the enforcement of this statute will not have the beneficial result as the law itself recites, but on the contrary would have the most hurtful and destructive effect ever known to a free people. Its enforcement would be the essence of tyranny and destructive of the fundamental principles of free government and violate sacred guarantees of our Constitution and would make the bill of rights a nullity and a farce."

Tyler — Coca Cola Co. announced plans for erection of new bottling plant here to be fully equipped with modern machinery and will cost approximately $25,000.

That's Story of Two Democrats Named by Hoover to Big Corporation to End Depression.

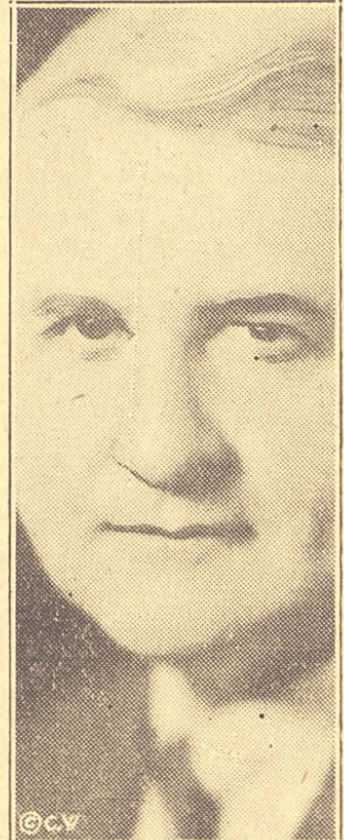

They started as poor boys—and now they're worth millions! These two men, outstanding in their states, have been named by President Hoover as directors of the new $2,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation formed by an act of Congress to end the depression. Yugoslavia: King Alexander's annual income is about $335,195. He has not yet announced any reduction, but his other source of income, mainly from landed property, has been seriously affected by the decline in agricultural prices.

Sweden: King Gustaf last November announced a cut of about $9,400 in his annual income of $182,400, but it does not come into effect until the next budget year, beginning July 1, 1932. The Crown Prince's income of about $49,500 also will be cut by about $2,800.

King Christian of Denmark and King Haakon of Norway have annual incomes of approximately $196,000 and $131,250 respectively. Neither has yet announced any reduction of economies.

Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has an income of $482,280. She also has not reduced it, but it is well known that the Dutch royal family lives in a democratic and quiet manner.

SAN ANTONIO IS CITY WITH INDIVIDUALITY

(This is one of a series of articles on the historical landmarks of Texas, written by Samuel E. Gideon, A. I. A., associate professor of architecture at The University of Texas. Mr. Gideon is national committee man of the American Institute of Architects for the Preservation of Historic and Worthwhile Landmarks. He is also chairman of the committee for that work in the West Texas Chapter of the American Institute of Architects.)

AUSTIN, Feb. 3. — Will Rogers said that San Antonio is one of the three remaining cities in the United States with a distinct individuality — San Francisco and New Orleans being the other two. If San Antonio, however, continues to tear down historical buildings, widen her streets, straighten the course and curb the picturesque river with concrete banks, to give other names to Spanish streets, to call plazas by modern names, and to modernize everything, it will make of San Antonio a modern city like hundreds of others in the United States.

To Harvey P. Smith, architect, is due the credit, largely, for the restoration of the famous Governor's Palace, otherwise known as the Veremendi Palace in San Antonio. He and committees appointed by the mayor, his own's archaeologists, antiquarians and others, worked untiringly for any data that could be used in restoring the building as it was originally.

Two old wills, perhaps, proved to be most helpful in determining the character and arrangement of the original building. Mr. Smith says that the two wills were made by Luis Mariana Menchaca and Jose Menchaca. The will of Jose Menchaca, whose children sold this building to Ignacio Perez in 1604 probably gave us the most information about the individual rooms of the palace that was obtained from any source. This will named, for instance, different rooms, which Menchaca willed to his various children. The room on the front right hand corner, he called "the Blessed Virgin," and his wording was something like this: "The room of the Blessed Virgin with the kitchen and dining room back of it, with its corresponding depth to the creek. I leave to my daughter, Trinidad." Then he went all balance of the building, leaving certain rooms, and their corresponding depth to the creek, to other children, in turn, until he had given the entire house and property in that way. An old picture painted of a ball room scene in the palace was helpful, also, in the restoration of the rooms.

The Palace faces Military Plaza. It is a long facade of interesting wall windows and doors though the main doors are carved in the manner of the old mission doors. The Austrian coat of arms is sculptured upon the key-stone over the entrance doorway. The reason is this: Phillip of Austria, married "Johanna the Mad," who was the daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain. Their son Charles, called "Charles the Fifth of Austria," through his mother inherited Spain and thus became, about 1521, Emperor of both Spain and Austria. Philip the Fifth of Spain, a later ruler had a son called Ferdinand the Sixth who reigned between 1746 and 1759. Philip the Fifth sent a colonization expedition in 1531 from the Canary Islands and they settled around what is now known as Main Plaza, in San Antonio. They called the settlement Fernando de Bexar in honor of Crown Prince Ferdinand the Sixth and the Duke de Bexar. Thus the coat of arms of Austria, which was also the coat of arms of Spain, was placed over the doorway of the Governor's Palace.

Through double gates on the terrace one enters the court or patio. To the left as one enters the court is the long arched pergola, one of the most striking architectural features of the structure.

Gradually, the Palace is acquiring furniture and atmosphere which belonged to the original structure making a veritable museum of the life and culture of the period of Governor Menchaca.

San Antonians are certainly to be congratulated upon the success of this worth while venture.

The dime-a-dance girl

BY JOAN CLAYTON

CHAPTER I

A milk wagon rattling along Pine street brought Ellen Rossiter wide awake. The Rossiter apartment was five floors above the street but Ellen thought irritably even in the moment of waking that the clanking below was sufficient to wake the dead.

It was going to be another scorching day. The girl's face rosy from sleep, was faintly damp and her thick tawny hair was live and beautiful with heat curls. She was conscious only of discomfort as she thrust it back and rolled over hastily to look at the clock.

Only 20 minutes to seven. Twenty blessed minutes more, Ellen stretched luxuriously, assured herself that the alarm was set for seven, and snuggled down again. She was closing her eyes she noticed that the adjoining bed was empty. Myra had already risen and slipped quietly from the room. Ellen had sleepily decided that her sister intended to be there before leaving for the library when she heard from the kitchen Myra's voice raised high in expostulation. Something was wrong again. Ellen did not know quite why but the particular note in Myra's always meant trouble.

And trouble in the Rossiter household meant inevitably a difference of opinion between Myra Rossiter and Molly Rossiter.

Ellen sighed, tossed back the sheet and in one leap was out of bed. She grabbed a green cotton crepe negligee and streaked for the bathroom. The door was locked. Michael, aged 12, was inside. The one male of the family, the adored and spoiled little brother, he had special prerogatives and was not to be trifled with.

"I'm studying," he called out.

"In the bathroom!"

"In the tub."

He added plaintively, "I'll get out if you want me to. Only it's so cool in here and I'm always being interrupted no matter where."

"All right, darling. Stay where you are for 10 minutes. But after that I'll have to rouse you."

Ellen Rossiter was three days past 20 on that morning in late July three days past 20 and already beginning to be afraid that the wild and careless dreams of her teens would not be fulfilled in her twenties. It was money, of course. The Rossiter had more than their share of good looks, from Molly Rossiter who had once been Molly O'Reilly the prettiest girl in the whole of County Cork, to baby Mike, but they had nothing else.

The three children, — Myra, the oldest, and Ellen and Mike had from their father their thick copper hair and wide, thick-lashed blue eyes, and from their mother their creamy skin. The peculiar, arresting way they walked and stood, the nervous movements of their hands, the confident, arrogant ease with which they faced the world, all those were Rossiter ways as Molly who was a Rossiter by marriage, said so often. The unconscious air of distinction that was shared by all of them was from their father too. It was Charles Michael Rossiter who had given them an unmistakable look of race.

There was no denying that the young Blacks down-stairs, or the young Harbordians in the basement, or the Shannabergers who sprawled thru the two floors above. They were different and suspect. Ellen had often reflected bitterly, as people always are who have a past and no future.

But Molly Rossiter, an incurable optimist, had never once admitted the secret fears of her two daughters. Even when she had her crying spells she always insisted hysterically that her children were better looking than any of the English Rossiters, better qualified to move in that mysterious world whose doors had been shut to them abruptly when Charles Rossiter, unable to forget green English fields and misty country English mornings, even in the love of his wife and children had closed his eyes and died of a common cold.

There once had been Money. Myra at 26 could remember surroundings quite different from the down-at-heel Brooklyn apartment, could, with a pang in her heart, remember the glorious years before her father's death the soft spoken servants the gleam of candle-light on old silver (sold long since), and rugs so deep that all sound of footsteps was lost in them.

Charles Rossiter had met Molly O'Reilly on a trip to Ireland. He had married her before his father and mother and a many brothers and sister could rush in to point out the impossibility of marriage between the fourth son of Lord Harbord and a tenant farmer's daughter.

They had never forgiven him that.

They were, as anyone except Molly Rossiter would admit, scrupulously fair Charles' share of the Harbord estate had been settled upon him at once. The condition was that he leave England. His father and mother had refused to meet his bride. And Charles Rossiter, stiff-necked with pride, had been glad enough to leave England. He had come to America and had never gone back. He had often longed for England but no one of his brothers or sisters had ever learned that. No one of them had shown the slightest interest in what he might have been thinking during those long years of exile. No one of them except his youngest sister, Myra, for whom his eldest daughter was named, had shown in the years following his death any recognition of the fact that he had left a family. His sister Myra, perhaps held back by the pressure of her brothers and sisters, had never seen any member of his small family but she did from time to time send boxes of clothing discarded by her own daughters.

On that August morning Charles Rossiter had been dead 12 years. His death took place three days before his only son was born. He could never have foreseen that his two beautiful daughters would be forced to work, the one at an underpaid job in a public library, the other as an underpaid salesgirl in a great department store. He had left a sufficient sum to bring up his children in comfort, to educate them, and to provide for the life time of his young wife.

But Molly Rossiter, dazed with grief, had seen that money slip from her irresponsible hands within two years.

Ellen could remember only as of something dreamed those days when money was not a daily problem, a daily topic of conversation. Her and gone to work at Barclay's department store when she was 14. She was still there.

As she walked to the kitchen she wondered a little hopelessly if she would always be there.

When she entered the small heated room where the blue-checked linoleum had long since retreated into the corners, her mother turned from the stove. Molly's pretty fading face was flushed and set in a line of determination. Ellen sighed again. She was afraid that her mother had hit upon another disastrous scheme which would make them all rich.

Myra was seated at a chipped porcelain table, her chin resting upon her elbows, morning paper or some such work at Barclay's department store when she was 14. She was still there.

CANDIDATE

Joe Burckett, formerly of Eastland but now residing in San Antonio, will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the coming election for congressman-at-large. Under the latest census Texas, which has not been redistricted, is allowed three congressmen-at-large and it is for one of these places that Mr. Burckett will contest. There will probably be a large number of contestants and the three men receiving the largest number of votes will be declared the nominees.

Mr. Burckett formerly lived in Eastland county and is well and favorably known over the entire state. He began his political career in this county, when, after working on a farm, teaching school and taking a fling at newspaper work, he was elected district clerk of the county. From the district clerk's office he was elected county judge. Serving one term in this office he announced for and was chosen district judge mother talked that way. But Myra was frankly angry. "New York isn't Ireland," she said flatly. "Rich men may grow on bushes there, I don't know. But rich men in New York marry rich girls. They don't meet any other kind. If you're thinking that Ellen might meet John Astorville at Dramland Mother, it just shows you don't know such places. The only result of Ellen's trying to work at night as well as all day would be that she would break down her health. And then where would we be?"

Molly Rossiter smiled mysteriously and with characteristic optimism, overlooked all drawbacks. "You can't tell how such things will happen," she remarked, still smiling. "I met your father in the most unexpected way. If we both hadn't happened to be at the same place that one night we'd never have met at all."

"It was at a dance too," she concluded triumphantly.

Ellen laughed. "Don't try to marry me off so soon," she pleaded. "After all," she added, "I'm only 20. I might be touring Europe with my husband by the time I'm 21."

"I was married at 17. And Myra here—"

"Yes, I've been engaged to Bert ever since I was 17, nine years!" Molly conceded bitterly. "And perhaps by the time I'm 70 we'll have enough money so that he and I can hobble to the altar."

The very blackness of the picture she drew was irresistibly funny. All three of them burst out laughing. For a moment they were like children and Molly Rossiter was the youngest of the three.

WALTER GRAY ANNOUNCES FOR COUNTY CLERK

Walter Gray of Eastland, today announced that he will be a candidate for county clerk of Eastland county subject to the action of the democratic July primaries. Mr. Gray has been a resident of this county for 29 years, casting his first ballot in Eastland county. From 1914 to 1916 he was county treasurer and for two years he was deputy county clerk under R. L. Jones, present county clerk. He believes that his experience and qualifications fit him for an efficient and economical administration of the office and he is basing his candidacy for the post upon the promise to conduct the affairs of the office he seeks in a thoroughly business-like way.

Mr. Gray is the son of Mrs. J. W. Gray, of Cisco. His father died here last year. The elder Mr. Gray was organizer and secretary-treasurer of the Cisco National Farm loan association and after his death Walter Gray spent three or four months here in disposing of his father's interests in connection with the organization.

Mr. Gray announced that it is his purpose to see most of the voters of the county personally between now and time for the primaries.

Girl Wins Fight for Beautiful Surroundings

Without funds but with a determination to make the old farm home look "more like pretty places in town," Jewel Smith, who is a 4-H club girl at Ingleside in Young county, invested in a hair cut and tackled an Olney banker for a loan of $10 with which to buy shrubs. She got it and to provide for its repayment started raising turkeys that was three years ago. The severe freezes of 1930 killed the shrubbery but the loan was paid off because Jewel made $93.47 from 42 turkeys. She re-invested in more shrubbery and after two seasons of drought during which she had to haul water to keep the plants alive she had developed farm surroundings so attractive that her methods have been copied by neighbors. Unightly fences have been removed, flagstone walks laid, the yard levelled and cleared for a lawn, and foundation plantings of privet developed. To her turkey venture she had added a white Wyandotte flock. Her earnings have not only enabled her to improve the home but last year she helped put a brother through a year in Texas Technological college. At present she is a student in Olney high school where she is making her own way. Her home demonstration agent is Miss Norfleet Grimes.

RE-ELECTION IS SOUGHT BY REP. GILBERT

Victor B. Gilbert, state representative from Eastland and Callahan counties, today announced that he will be a candidate to succeed himself in the legislature. A statement of his candidacy and some of the issues upon which he will appeal to his constituency was made by Rep. Gilbert as follows:

To the Citizens of Eastland County:

I take great pleasure in submitting my candidacy for re-election to the office of representative of Eastland and Callahan counties, subject to the action of the democratic primary in July.

The record of my service and my activities in behalf of tax reform are well known to my colleagues in the legislature as well as to my constituents here at home and because of that fact I have been selected as chairman of the powerful committee on revenue and taxation which committee must first consider and pass upon every revenue raising bill that is introduced in the legislature. In that position I obtained much valuable information on tax matters, and as a further recognition, I was appointed by the last legislature as one of four house and three senate members to compose the legislative tax survey committee, whose duty it is to make a survey of the taxable resources of this state, to write, introduce and sponsor legislation that will equitably apportion the cost of government and the collection of taxes between the corporations, individuals and business interests that compose this vast commonwealth, in the next legislature. Backed by the authority of senate concurrent resolution No. 6, which created the above mentioned committee, we will be in a position to effectively enforce our measures in both branches of the legislature, because of the statistics and information we now have and are obtaining from the income reports and private records of the big corporations and moneyed interests of the state by authority of law through the federal government. This information has not been available to a committee before and the facts it discloses are of a most startling revelation of the unfairness and injustice of the present system of taxation. The small home owners and farmers can no longer pay the confiscatory taxes now levied at the farms and homes of Texas and the necessary relief must and will come from the next legislature by and through the activities and efforts of the committee above referred to.

County Road Bonds.

In 1922 with a county valuation of almost $50,000,000.00 and with prospects for further oil and gas development, our people voted a road bond issue of $4,500,000.00 for the construction of state highways in this county. There has been paid to date on this huge indebtedness the sum of $1,243,000.00, leaving a balance due and unpaid of $3,257,000.00 bearing interest at the rate of (approximately) 5% per cent, which is to be paid out of a valuation now estimated to be $28,000,000.00 for this year, and no telling what the valuation will be next year. My theory is that the counties were never the rightful paymasters of these highway bonds; that they should have been paid from the gasoline tax from the beginning. The state should therefore assume the payment of all outstanding bonds and the counties should be reimbursed for the amount they have heretofore paid, which in the case of this county, amounts to $1,243,000.00. This amount when refunded, could be used by the county in retiring its other indebtedness, applying on court house bonds or in lieu of the general county tax and would when so used result in practically a moratorium for us during which time the people could get their breath. To say that this can be done is no idle talk or empty gestures; to say it ought to be done is correctly stating it because it is fundamentally right. Would not our courage and determination to carry on be greatly strengthened if we were relieved of the present bond levy which $1.20 of the present rate of $1.88 and would not our farmers
