EDITOR SMITH TALKED OUT LOUDLY. Alfred E. Smith, editor of the new Outlook Magazine, asserted in an editorial in the current number that he might be old fashioned but he could not understand how the industrial control act "can possibly work."

"Viewed from this angle, the job is one for the philosopher, the priest, and the doctor, rather than the statesman, lawyer or business executive." This former governor and democratic leader does not sweepingly condemn the industrial control act. He would apply the curb to industry where necessary. He is very explicit about it. His viewpoint: "I do not mean to say that we must spinelessly accept present conditions. I do mean to imply that there is such a thing as putting too much faith in political and scientific schemes of salvation."

COMMODITY PRICES AND PUBLIC CONFIDENCE.

Away down here in Texas rainbows are showing their rare tints. For instance the monthly business review of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas reports "a further noticeable expansion of business and industry during the month of June." This the review states "was stimulated by rising commodity prices and growing public confidence."

Another cheerful little earful taken from the survey: Construction activity was well sustained during the month. College Station publicity agents report weevils on upland farms are increasing. Wheat continues to soar on crop damage the country over and the grain belts of the middle west and the north west as well as those in the Dominion of Canada are being scorched to a fare-you-well.

Prof. Moley Arrives in London.

Texas Home Loan Director Descendant of Noted Pioneer

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD James Shaw invaded Texas long before the republic was established. He was the personal friend and comrade in arms of Col. William B. Travis, hero of the Alamo. He was a member of the first and second congress of the republic and the personal and political friend of Sam Houston and Mirabeau B. Lamar.

He expects to open his office not later than July 15, perhaps at an earlier date if the Roosevelt administration requires it. He was backed for the position by Sen. Morris Sheppard and Tom Connally as well as others holding high posts in the federal administration.

Deal the other day. By a huge majority they voted to repeal the 18th amendment. By a very large majority they adopted an amendment to the constitution declaring for the pari-mutuel system of betting and reestablished after many years, the race courses of the Golden Coast.

It is a matter of history when Sam Houston refused to vote for the ordinance of secession that James Shaw was one of the less than a dozen delegates who faced an overwhelming tide of public opinion and walked the political gangplank with his idolized chief.

He was one of the early builders of central Texas. He established ranches in Burnet and other sections of this historic territory where capital of the southwestern empire is located. He named his son Travis Shaw as a tribute to that hero of the Alamo who was like unto that peerless Frenchman, Bayard, "without fear and without reproach."

This was a knock on the nose for Gov. James Rolph, the erstwhile republican dictator of the commonwealth. The California legislature enacted a racing bill embracing the pari-mutuel system. Rolph vetoed it. Then the lawmakers submitted it to a statewide referendum. It was adopted by a large majority by the people on the day "the ballot was the thing."

ONE EXTREME AND ANOTHER.

Really, when the people decide that quick action is the thing they go from one extreme to the other. Gov. George D. White, democrat, holds the reins in the state of Ohio.

On his return trip to Washington Sen. Morris Sheppard gave positive assurance to his followers that Texas would declare against repeal. Leaders of the repeal forces here at home and just as positive that the vote will be three to two for repeal and that the beer enactment will be carried by a very large majority.

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

By GORDON K. SHEARER United Press Staff Correspondent AUSTIN, July 5 — Efforts of the federal government to prevent stock swindles recall the path of similar legislation in the Texas legislature.

Johnson was taken sick. Friends let the bill rest until near the end of the session, hoping he would be back to handle it. Finally an effort then was made to bring the bill up in his absence.

"Why wouldn't you let my bill come up? What's the matter with it?" Johnson asked. "I am against all these blue laws," was the reply.

Senator Pat Patton of Crockett is greatly elated over his defeat for congress in the race to elect a successor to the late Congressman Clay Stone Briggs.

Patton is happy because he says he says Congressman-elect Thompson was elected only by the large Galveston vote, and Galveston will not be in the district when the regular term race comes around next year.

Fallon says with the exception of Galveston he carried the other counties, excepting Anderson county, and will be a candidate for the regular term. The difference in the district counties is due to the redistricting bill passed at the recent session of the Texas legislature.

Under the act providing a method of ratification or rejection of federal constitutional amendments, the wet and dry convention chairmen must file their lists of delegates and alternates with the secretary of state.

Then all will be in readiness for the campaign rallies, stump speeches and election advertisements.

Stone Filled With XXth Century Data

NEW BRAUNFELS, July 5.—When and if archaeologists of future ages examine the ruins of the Sophienburg Memorial, recently dedicated here, they will find comprehensive data on Twentieth century life in Texas, the United States and the world.

In the cornerstone of the building erected as a memorial to German pioneers who settled in Comal county in the 1840s, were placed papers and articles relating to many phases of contemporary life. They included:

A list of local churches and schools and their memberships, population figures for the United States, Texas, Comal county and New Braunfels; current commodity price lists; "rules" of all civilized nations and their forms of government; copies of the New Braunfels Zeitung, the New Braunfels Herald and the Texas Bluebonnet; stamps and coins, and records of local American Legion and Boy Scout organizations.

The memorial was planned and erected as a tribute to a group of Germans who came to the United States to escape oppression in the fatherland. They landed on the Texas Gulf Coast at Matagorda Bay and toiled slowly over the wilderness by ox cart and on foot, finally reaching the foothills at the head of Comal Springs. On the spot where the memorial building stands they built their first shelter, the Sophienburg, named after Sophie, the sweetheart of Prince Solms Braunfels.

August 26, John Citizen will receive a ballot. In the general election that day will have two perpendicular columns of the same width. One will be headed, "For repeal of the 18th amendment," and below it will be inserted the list of 31 delegates at 13 alternates pledged to vote the way.

The other column will be headed "Against repeal of the 18th amendment" and will have under it a rival list of delegates and alternates. The voter will scratch out the names of the candidates he opposes.

Thanks to the new unofficial election returns law the practical result of the vote likely will be known by the night of the election. Official returns will be canvassed 30 days later by Secretary of State W. V. Heath in the presence of Gov. Mirabeau B. Lamar and Attorney General James W. Alfred.

Sixty days later, November 24, the delegates declared elected will meet in Austin and formally cast the vote of Texas for or against repeal. The secretary of this November 24 convention will certify the action to Secretary of State Heath and the secretary of state of the United States. Heath also will certify to the United States secretary of state.

Friends of the Family

LOOK at the packages on your pantry and bathroom shelves, and see what a multitude of brand names you recognize. Some of them have been familiar for years. You may have made the acquaintance of others only a few weeks ago. But even these are not suspected strangers. You have bought them confidently because they were advertised. And it is the same with your sheets and towels, your shoes and clothes, your electric appliances, the car in your garage--- nearly everything you own.

They have a standing that commands respect, nameless, but vouched for by reputation, that they are advertised is in itself an indication that their standards of quality are strictly maintained, that they represent honest value.

As science and discovery go on, newly developed products are constantly being advertised --- ready to help you save money and improve your standard of living. Every advertisement of such a product you read in your daily paper is a letter of introduction to a new and possibly useful friend.

It will pay you to read the advertisements in this paper every day. By so doing you will meet many choice products --- worthy to become friends of the family.

ST. LOUIS, July 5 — Announcement has been made here by M. H. Cahill, chairman of the board and president of the Missouri-Kansas-Texas lines, of the appointment of J. F. Hennessey, Jr. (above) to a newly created position of assistant to the president.

For the last two and a half years Mr. Hennessey has been passenger traffic manager of the Katy, which position is abolished with the creation of Mr. Hennessey's new title. In addition to assigned freight traffic and executive department duties, Mr. Hennessey, according to Mr. Cahill's announcement, will continue to have jurisdiction over the passenger, mail, baggage, express and dining car departments, reporting direct to the president. Mr. Hennessey's promotion is in recognition of his long and efficient service with the Katy and of his successful administration of passenger traffic matters. In effect the appointment places the Katy's passenger department under direct executive department supervision.

Appointed passenger traffic manager soon after Mr. Cahill assumed the presidency of the Katy Lines, he has succeeded in working notable improvements in the Katy's passenger department.

Mr. Hennessey commenced his railroad career with the Katy 23 years ago, when as a boy in his teens he was employed as a messenger in the St. Louis general offices.

Long Marriages Are Happiest These Say

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 5 — Marriages are happiest when they last a long time, was the unanimous opinion of 460 persons who gathered at Swope Park here recently for a party. And these persons set themselves up as authorities.

The guests were 230 couples, who had been married for a half century or longer. Mr. and Mrs. John Clark, of Kansas City, 91 and 89, respectively, have been married for 66 years.

These folks, who earned their membership in the National True Vow Keepers' club by living together for at least 50 years, had many formulas for making marriages happy. But most of them agreed that the best plan was to keep up the courtship after the honeymoon.

The party in Swope Park was the annual event of the National True Vow Keepers' club, which was founded by Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Aurand, of Kansas City. The couple who came the longest distance to attend was Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hanson, whose home is in Mount Olive, Ill.

School Boys Find Thrills on River

NEW ORLEANS, July 5.—Life on the rivers of the south, made famous by Mark Twain and a long series of authors, who put into literature the glamor of steamboating, has nothing on a motorboat trip on Old Man River, according to two Ardmore, Okla., high school boys, who recently made a trip down the Red and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans.

Arriving here, the pair, Charles N. Harmon, Jr., and Claude L. Ferrer, Jr., termed their trip a "great adventure."

Among the high spots was their hitting a ferry boat with Ferrer going overboard. On another occasion, their small craft was caught in one of the large, treacherous whirlpools of the Mississippi, and almost drawn beneath the surface. Another time they captured an alligator, and once stopped to rescue some cattle from quaking sand.

The trip took them 25 days. The boys said they met "some of the most unusual people — guys who hadn't shaved for three years, fishermen who told us all kinds of wild tales, and pessimistic folks who predicted we'd never reach New Orleans alive."

BEGIN HERE TODAY

BARRETT COLVIN, back in New York after years abroad, falls in love with ELINOR STAFFORD. He is 35 and she is 20. Elinor returns his affection but her jealous, scheming mother, LIDA STAFFORD, breaks up the romance by convincing Barrett that Elinor is a heartless flirt.

Rich Miss ELLA SEXTON, Elinor's aunt, dies and, to the despair of the relatives, leaves her entire fortune to Barrett. Lida Stafford has been flirting with VANCE BARRETT. When Vance learns she will not divorce her husband, BENTWELL STAFFORD, he shoots Bentwell. It is uncertain whether the wounded man will live or die.

Barrett goes to see Elinor's aunt, MISSIE THROPE, to ask what he can do to aid the girl. He does not want Miss Ella's money and hopes to find some way to give it back to the rightful inheritors.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXI
THE last thing Elinor wished that morning was the further strain of seeing Barrett Colvin. He had, with a blunt, inconsiderate strength she had not dreamed he possessed, overridden her suggestion that he should wait for the interview until her father was better. As she said those last words her voice caught. "I must see you," Barrett repeated. "It is important for both of us."

"I don't see how it could be, Mr. Colvin."

"I'll explain that. I wouldn't bother you unless it was really necessary." He had not meant to let bitterness creep into that last sentence but it had, in spite of the ed against it. Well, since she enjoyed toying with aging hearts it might amuse her to laugh at their stiffened creakings.

There was a silence. He broke it by saying, "I'm coming to see you immediately. I'll only stay a few moments. Will you see that I am admitted? I'm only asking because it's really necessary."

"Yes, I'll see you for a few moments," Mr. Colvin, she promised after another brief silence.

"Thank you," she heard. She put down the telephone. Benson stood waiting and she knew by his dejected look that something else of a troublesome nature had come up. "It's the druggist, Miss Elinor," Benson stated miserably. "He won't leave the medicine unless it is paid for."

Purse in hand, she hurried to the foyer where the delivery boy waited, a trifle insolent because of his instructions. She could still settle these small charges. But the two nurses, the doctor, the endless needs made by a critically sick patient—how would she manage to pay such bills? She had talked that morning to the one clerk in her father's decaying office of finance. He had stammered that he needed his salary. He had two little girls and a wife who was not well. He had his own bills. Elinor had dropped to a chair rather too suddenly, talking with him.

"HOW are things at the office, Mr. Gerould?" she had asked. "Bad," he told her bluntly, though his eyes were sympathetic. "You see," he stammered, "so many people were waiting with the expectation that Mr. Stafford would be remembered rather generously in Miss Sexton's will. The place is alive now with folks trying to collect what they can. I went down and saw the line this morning and turned right around and came away. The rent's overdue two months. The collector let it go, thinking—"

"Yes, I know," she answered dully. She moistened her stiffened, drying lips. "How much did my father owe you?" she asked. She could not let that go. The man had worked faithfully for her father for years. Besides there were his two small daughters and his ailing wife.

BARGAIN BRIDE

She said nothing.

"You can help me right a tragic wrong," Barrett went on. "You can give your father his chance to get well, give peace to the Thropes and an education to those three boys. Will you do this?"

"How?"

"By marrying me," he said slowly. She lost color and he went on hastily. "I'm asking you to live in my house as my guest for one year. In that way I can turn over to you and the Thropes the money that is morally, if not legally, yours and theirs. It's the only way to rectify the mistake of your aunt who unfortunately was sound of mind, if not of heart, when she made her will."

"But why for a year?" Elinor asked brokenly. She was oddly dizzy and disconcerted.

"Because," he answered, "a year will quiet any idle talk there may be. I don't want anyone to know the reason for our marriage. The world would misunderstand. It might possibly see me as a hero instead of a man who merely happens to be honest enough not to want to rob others. It might see you as a girl who sold herself instead of a girl willing to forget herself in order to help someone else."

HE paused. He saw her draw a deep breath. She looked remarkably like a little girl who is balked at her lessons.

"The Thropes and their boys, your father—" Barrett reminded slowly.

She whispered, "I don't know!" She held a finger against her lips and he noticed that her hand was trembling. For a fleeting space and against his reason the old tenderness for her returned. He was shaken by the emotion which must, he felt, be wholly physical. How it persisted!

"All I'm asking," he said, "is that for a year you will, in public, conduct yourself as my wife. You will have to forgo, for the time, the admiration to which you have been accustomed."

She smiled a little at that but he did not understand her smile.

"And in turn," he continued more weightily, "I give you my word that I will never raise my hand to touch you except before others. We may have to masquerade a little before others. You can have my word that you will be safe and that I will do everything to make the situation as easy for you as possible."

He saw her moisten her lips, hesitate.

Benson appeared in the broad doorway. "It's that Mr. Streeter again, Miss Stafford," he said apologetically. "He pushed past me and refuses to go. He says he must see you. He won't wait—"

"A collector?" Barrett asked. Elinor nodded and his gaze followed a swallow on the rounded, soft column of her throat. For a moment she closed her eyes. "I'll deal with him," said Barrett as a small, round man appeared in the door.
