DAILY BIBLE THOUGHT

SORROW FOR SIN:—O Lord my God, Hear me, For I am ready to halt. I will declare mine iniquity; I will be sorry for my sin.—Psalm 38: 15, 18.

ANOTHER RAIL LOAN ON THE WAY.

According to Washington advices the Southern Pacific company has asked the interstate commerce commission to guarantee $18,000,000 worth of notes for the St. Louis Southwestern railway to the Reconstruction Finance corporation. A reminder that the Southern Pacific owns approximately 80 per cent of the Cotton Belt and on April 14 that road became a unit in the Southern Pacific system. Highway freighters and highway passenger buses have played havoc with the business of the rails from ocean to ocean and from Canada to Mexico. Lest we forget, livestock men of the West and the Southwest are asking that the present freight rates should be readjusted. Charles E. Collins of Kit Carson, Colo., is president of the National Livestock association. He testified at a I. C. C. meeting that livestock prices are lower now than at any time in the last 30 years. In contrast, he said transportation costs are the highest in the history of the livestock industry. A noted cattle and hog shipper of Kansas testified that if rail rates went higher, "the business literally will be thrown into trucks." It appears that the railroads of America are between the devil and the deep blue sea. If the railroads were put out of business, leaving the field to the highway freighters and busses, gasoline would jump to a dollar a gallon and then the high notes of another howl from the public would hit the heavens.

RICH PICKINGS FOR CROOKED WRITERS.

Representative LaGuardia of New York, an independent republican with socialist leanings, is one of the most efficient of the national lawmakers. He is an American of Italian origin and his career in type reads like one of the romances of literature. He was one of the most daring aces of the air in the World war and he has displayed qualities of leadership backed by intellectual honesty as a representative of the people of a New York congressional district. Now he is responsible for another astounding bit of financial intrigue and barefaced bribery of writers employed by New York financial journals. These financial writers of Gotham newspapers are said to be idle now. LaGuardia produced the names and the cancelled checks of these boomers of certain stocks as well as the names of the newspapers and the payoff men of the gang. It is a sordid story of the betrayal of confidence on the part of the writers, as well as a brazen attempt on the parts of those who handled the stocks to filch money from the pockets of the people. Alfred Lingle, the Chicago victim of an underworld assassin, was a trusted employe of the Chicago Tribune. First he was proclaimed a martyr to the cause of truth and justice and law enforcement. Then the story of his double dealing was revealed from the inside. He had fattened his pockets at the expense of his newspaper by playing a dual role, and the publishers of Chicago when they were given all the truth did not erect a marble slab to his memory "as the victim of underworld hate."

LaGuardia holds the center of the stage. He is one of the best copy makers under the big dome in the city of Washington. He is as independent as old George W. Norris of Nebraska and as fearless as a public servant as he was as an ace of the air in the battles under European skies in the days of his youth.

WHAT HAPPENED TO ANGEL.

A petition in voluntary bankruptcy was filed in New York against William Reynolds Edrington, real estate operator and Fort Worth ranchman who backed Earl Carroll in various theatrical ventures. Moreover the petition, filed by A. John Wanamaker on a claim for $64,500 in notes of the Earl Carroll's Realty corporation, listed Edrington's liabilities at $800,000 and his assets at $300,000.

William Reynolds Edrington is a native Texan. His father was a Confederate veteran who first engaged in the banking business at Bryan and later moved to Fort Worth years and years ago and established and conducted until his death one of the leading banks of Texas. He was a most unique character. He was not a spender. He believed in thrift. He accumulated a handsome fortune. He left a valuable estate to his children. Fort Worth was too slow for William Reynolds and he moved to New York, where he played the game in the streets and became the angel of Earl Carroll, famous in the theatrical history of Manhattan. Well, the crash came; the handsome Carroll theater was transferred to other hands; Carroll had a nervous breakdown and his physician advised a trip to Europe; the angel held the bag. Now he is in the hands of the receiver.

Many wise men go to New York from the so-called provinces to tell Manhattan Islanders how to do things in a business way. They go there with fat pockets. They pay for their thrills. They pay for their new education. When it is all over their pockets are lean instead of fat. This is what happened to the son of a Texas banker who had accumulated a handsome fortune.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON ISAAC AND HIS WELLS

Text: Gen. 26:12-25. The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for May 1.

By WM. F. GILROY, D. D., Editor of The Congregationalist. The golden text chosen from the Book of Proverbs is appropriate to this lesson: "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but a grievous word stirreth up anger."

Isaac was hardly as great a figure as his father, Abraham, but he had inherited at least a fairly large part of his father's integrity and common sense. He also inherited his father's wealth. Building upon all that his father left him, he became a man of very great possessions; so wealthy in the flocks and herds that constituted the wealth of the time that his Philistine neighbors greatly envied him.

In the strife that ensued, the Philistines had shown this enmity by filling up the wells that Abraham's servants had dugged, and when Isaac digged these wells again, the Philistines apparently continued to stop them.

Isaac seems to have had a peaceful disposition, very much like his father's, for when the wells were filled and strife arose he apparently went on to another place and dugged new wells. So it happened that strife arose about successive wells until finally he moved farther away and digged a well which was left to him in peaceable possession. In token of this fact he called the well "Rehoboth," which means "room" or "broad places."

"For now," he said, Jehovah hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land."

Was it a coincidence that, following these events, when Isaac went up to Beersheba, in the extreme south of Palestine, and the home associated with his devotion to his father, the Lord appeared to him with words of promise and blessing?

Do not the promises and blessings of God come to those who seek the way of peace and who endeavor to meet the world's strife in the spirit of patience and good will?

One does not mean by this that goodness always has its reward in outward success.

The cross of Christ reminds us, rather, that the highest way of life is often for those who suffer and who sacrifice everything for conscience's sake. But it is none the less true that the way of supreme satisfaction is the way of right and peace and truth. And this is essentially as true in our time as it was in primitive times when causes and effects were more simply discernible.

The rewards of life in their deepest and truest aspect are not for the strong and the grasping and the greedy. Even when the greedy and the grasping get the things they are after, it not infrequently proves their undoing, as it did in the case of Lot.

The man who has made a success of life in trading down his fellows and in rising to wealth and power through unscrupulous means, often does not realize how in doing so he has thrown away everything that makes life worth while. Often, if he brings upon himself and all connected with him the worst sort of material disaster, when he thinks he is achieving the greatest sort of material success.

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

With the discussion hinging upon the Patman cash bonus bill pending in congress, we hear a great deal in a lock step that it may be one method of restoring and higher commodity prices and stimulating a lagging currency circulation. The ideal behind this inflation talk is to bring commodity prices back to the levels upon which the debts we now owe were contracted. It is a movement analogous to the act of lifting a ship to a common altitude in a lock step that it may move on instead of being stagnated below the necessary level for intercourse with other ports.

But "inflation" like fire is a dangerous means to an end. Not even the high priests of our finance are acquainted with the erratic and devious courses by which the principle works. We know that prices rest eventually upon our gold standard, but just how gold governs our systems of currency and credit is technically known but practically mysterious. Public confidence has too much to do with the equations that are established.

Reading through a bulletin regularly issued by the Washington office of Ernst and Ernst I was struck by the simplicity of its discussion of this much misunderstood question. Most of those who are acquainted with its problems and characteristics live in such a rarified atmosphere of technicalities that they cannot distill their knowledge into the simple language that you and I understand. But here is an article that should interest most of you and I am turning over the rest of this column to a re-publication of it:

Much is heard these days about "inflation." It is a loose term, and may mean any one of a number of things. An attempt is made herein to outline roughly and non-technically the meaning and implications in some of the various brands of ideas regarding inflation.

Inflation by itself is nothing but a means to several ends. The volume of gold, or currency, or bank credit, or money, is not of direct importance to most individuals and businesses but is of great indirect importance. It has to do mainly with the prices of commodities—the things which people buy and use, the major things of material value. Prices are related to profits and savings. Profits and savings, in turn, are related to debts. Inflation may be considered, therefore, principally in terms of prices and debts.

Debts constitute an integral feature of our complicated business system. They represent the accumulated savings of the past which are not needed by the owners and which, therefore, are put out to hire to those whose savings are insufficient for their needs, but whose future earnings afford reasonable assurance of repayment. Debts are figured in terms of money. Money, however, has a fictitious value. It is worth nothing in itself. It is worth merely what it will buy. Debts are measurable, therefore, in terms of goods or commodities, even though this kind of calculation is not done consciously.

A debt of $1000 incurred in so-called "good times" when prices were relatively high means, let us say, 1000 units of some commodity worth $1 per unit. If by the time the debt is due the price of the commodity has dropped to 50 cents, the debt is doubled. The debtor might lay his hands on 1000 units of the commodity, but he can not produce the 2000 units which would be required to pay off the debt as figured in dollars rather than in commodity units. The debtor can not pay. The creditor, perhaps, did not expect repayment of 2000 units; he would be satisfied with something nearer the original 1000 units.

Under these circumstances, which are typical of the present, there are various courses open. Perhaps the debt may be paid if the debtor is able, but this is unfair to him and gives an unanticipated benefit to the creditor who made the loan in the good times. The debt may be adjusted downward to represent the ability of the debtor to pay, and this ability may be roughly in line with the lower level of commodity prices. Such a process is used in a wide variety of cases, including receiverships, reorganizations of capital structure, creditors' committees, and sales of bonds at less than their par value.

The other alternative, involving inflation, is to raise prices of commodity in some way, so that the debt calculated in terms of goods is more nearly in line with the original debt, described in terms of dollars. Theoretically this is equitable to all classes, but practically it is accompanied by difficulties and complications.

There are many kinds and degrees of inflation, but all relate in some way to currency, which is the utilitarian symbol of money; or to credit, which is the equivalent and the more commonly used substitute for currency. Currency is a visible and tangible thing, while credit is a vague sort of thing, evidenced by checks, drafts, notes, bills of exchange and the "lines of credit" on which these instruments are drawn. Gold is the basis for both. The volume of the gold base can not be increased at will, but the volume of currency resting upon it may be increased under certain rules, regulations and restrictions. The volume of credit, which is far larger than the volume of currency, may be increased likewise.

Inflation may be accomplished, therefore, by increasing the volume of currency, or credit, or both. Under normal operations or our currency system, the amount of currency is supposed to increase almost automatically with the activity of business turnover, but this is not inflation. To accomplish real currency inflation would require congressional legislation. It would be represented by the printing of more money under legislative direction, without regard for the immediate needs of business as measured by actual trade transactions.

If the proposal to pay the veterans' bonus in newly printed paper currency were adopted, for example, it would represent outright inflation of currency. (This would be true regardless of whether the currency were technically secured by some portion of gold, or government bonds, or otherwise. Any move to issue paper currency representing merely the promise of the government to pay, secured only by the general credit of the government, would represent the purest kind of currency inflation, somewhat like the "greenback" variety common after the Civil war.)

The value or the purchasing power of money varies inversely with its volume, subject to many invariable exceptions and qualifications. If there were more money, it would be worth less per unit; it would buy less goods per dollar. In other words, "prices would rise." If the whole proposition were as simple as this, there would be no great objection at the present time to the inflation of currency. But it is vastly complicated by the operation of credit, or the forces known as "confidence." Both foreign and domestic interests would rush to get rid of their dollars of declining purchasing power. There might be "run on gold," both from abroad and at home. The inflation of currency is, therefore, a dangerous procedure, as was demonstrated concretely in Germany after the war. Nevertheless currency inflation has many advocates at the present time.

Expansion or inflation of credit does something of the same thing as inflation of currency, but by different means and less spectacularly. The Federal Reserve System is now "expanding" credit by buying approximately $100,000,000 of government securities weekly. A Reserve Bank, let us say, buys $1,000,000 of bonds in the open market, from any owner, and pays out its check. The check finds its way into a member bank which deposits it with the Reserve Bank to the credit of the member bank. It becomes part of the member bank's "reserves." The bank may be in debt to the Reserve Bank and may use the member's check to reduce its debt. Up to this point the volume of credit has not been expanded.

As the buying of securities continues, however, the member banks tend to get out of debt to the Reserve Banks. The banks are then in better technical position to lend to customers, and they are expected to do so in due course, although the procedure may take a few months to show noticeable results. If the Reserve Banks then go on buying securities after the member banks are out of debt, such a policy would be in the realm of outright inflation of credit. Such a stage has not yet been reached in the Reserve System's program, which is described for the present, therefore, as "expansion" rather than "inflation." Whether credit will actually be inflated at some later date depends on the judgment of the Reserve authorities. In the formulation of this judgment the authorities can not overlook entirely the public pressure for inflation, right or wrong, inasmuch as Congress might force some more drastic program in a mood of exasperation at continuing low prices.

Credit inflation of the character outlined might or might not actually result in stimulating trade and raising prices. Technically it does not force banks to lend. Practically, however, it stimulates them into finding profitable employment for their idle funds or excess reserves. Neither does it force borrowers to borrow for constructive purposes which would result in "more business," as distinguished from mere refinancing or the shifting of debts. Practically, however, it makes credit easier to obtain for many enterprises which probably would be willing to use it in expanding their operations. It is the expectation of these results which provides the basis for the current policy.

The gold standard enters into all discussions of inflation. It is a complex subject, and a very much abused subject. The gold standard in the United States means, roughly, that currency, or checks (which are a form of currency), may be exchanged for gold, directly or indirectly, and this gold may be used either in domestic transactions or for export. The ready availability of gold for any purpose is the vital point of the gold standard. There is sufficient gold to meet all reasonable demands under normal conditions of confidence, though not enough if all currency or other evidences of obligation were to be presented simultaneously.

If there were to be "too much inflation," it might cause either a foreign or a domestic run on gold, and the combination of the two might theoretically force congressional legislation which would suspend the right of exchange of currency for gold, or the right of export of gold. The Glass-Steagall act, by which government bonds might be substituted for gold as partial backing for currency, provided a safeguard against insufficiency of gold to meet any reasonable withdrawals. Other government measures have provided additional safeguards. For various and sundry reasons it seems highly improbable that the United States will be required to suspend the gold standard.

Mrs. Barton, who is known as the Empress of Geneva for her autocratic leadership of society here, refused to sell. The original site was one of the most beautiful in the vicinity of Geneva. The palace would have been situated on a small hill on a point overlooking the lake in two directions. It would have been closer to town and the International Labor Office. But another and less attractive site was chosen.

Space for 500 Offices. The offices of the Secretariat provide space for between 500 and 300 offices. The Secretariat will be balanced on the right end by the Council hall. This hall forms a break in the construction, the Assembly Hall being set back some distance into a terraced patio, which connects with the Council hall and the Secretariat hall and the Secretariat. The entrance to the Assembly Hall will be separate.

Across the patio, the Rockefeller Library will balance the Council hall. All the buildings are connected by covered wings, which will contain committee rooms. In front of the palace is a sloping park, which will be terraced to hide the railroad tracks.

The League, since its foundation, has occupied the old Hotel National.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., gave added impetus to the project when he contributed $2,000,000 for the construction of a library. Since the establishment of the League, Americans have donated more than $8,000,000 toward its work.

Memorial Gives $25,000. The Woodrow Wilson Memorial Foundation gave $25,000 to be used in some form as a memorial to the principal founder of the international institution. The League has decided to use the money for bronze doors at the main entrance to the Assembly Hall.

The present site of the new palace is still a subject of many bitter disputes. The Building Committee originally wanted to construct the palace on the lake, just a short distance from the present Secretariat. An original plot of sloping land was obtained from the city, but it was found insufficient.

The committee started negotiations with an aged and wealthy Englishwoman, Mrs. Alexis Barton, who owned the adjoining property.

al, once one of the most exclusive and luxurious hotels on the lake front. The League purchased the hotel for five million Swiss francs. After some dickering, the entire property has been removed for four million francs.

LAREDO, April 30.—Tourists entering Mexico with automobiles are relieved of the burdensome bonding requirement by a new decree of President Pascual Ortiz Rubio. Foreign cars will be allowed in the republic for 90 days with only the requirement of registering the license plates. There will be no charge for this.

NEW COURTHOUSE LONGVIEW, April 30.—Construction has been started on the new seven-story Gregg county courthouse-jail, C. S. Lambie and Company received the contract on a bid of $174,500.

CHEESE FACTORY DECATUR, April 30.—A cheese factory with a daily capacity of 60,000 pounds is to be erected here, Guy Fowell, county agent, has been informed.

League's New Palace to Be Ready in 1934

By STEWART BROWN United Press Staff Correspondent GENEVA, April 30.—The League's new $5,000,000 palace will be completed early in 1934.

The structural work on the Secretariat building is completed. Construction on the council hall already has started. The foundations of the Assembly Hall and the Rockefeller Library are being dug. The project for a permanent League building was advanced in 1926. After many disputes over the site, the foundation stone was laid in September of 1929. Active construction work on the Secretariat building did not begin until March of 1931.

the MAN HUNTERS

BY MABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Susan Carey, 19 and beautiful, works in the office of Ernest Heath, Chicago architect. One of her admirers is Ben Lampman, a moody young musician, who asks her to marry him. She refuses. Jack Waring, who works in the same office, asks Susan to go driving one night. Waring kisses her and Susan resolves never to go with him again. She falls in love with Bob Dunbar, young millionaire, whom she met at business school. She believes he is engaged to Denise Ackroyd, pretty debutante. Heath feels a paternal interest in Susan but his wife dislikes her. Denise Ackroyd asks her to attend a weekend party and Rose Milton, Susan's best friend lends her a suitable wardrobe. Bob Dunbar appears at the party. He drinks too much and engages in a fist fight with Ben. Later he demands to know if she is going to marry Ben.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXV

Ernest Heath was in his library alone. With a sigh of disgust he pushed back the plans on which he had been working. Odd how sometimes everything seemed to go stale he thought. He had been fighting off this feeling of futility for weeks. He awoke with it in the morning. During the day it seemed able to shake it off but when he was tired or when his brain lagged as it did now it returned in full force.

"What I need is a holiday," he told himself. He rose and strolled about restlessly, picking up small objects and putting them down. He supposed Ruth would be quite late. She was playing bridge at the Hamilton's and they had planned to go later to the club to dance. He might as well go to bed but since he was not in the least disposed to sleep he wandered into the garden. He stood there gazing up at the cold remote, inaccessible sky, as if it might provide an answer to his problem.

It was a perfect fall night. There was a cool, high wind from the west and a strange stillness seemed to brood over all. It was always quiet there but tonight seemed especially so. Thus it was that when a stilling sound suddenly came from the street the listening man felt his nerves tingle with annoyance. There was a grinding of gears. There was, just once, a faint cry. Heath began to run in the direction of the noise. Down the lane he went, halting, a tall man in a dinner suit.

When he reached the intersection of the main road he was breathless. He looked to right and left and for an instant could see nothing. Then a little way beyond he caught sight of a lean, greyhound shape at the side of the road. He walked briskly in its direction.

For a moment Heath thought the car was empty. Then just ahead he discovered what his nearsighted eyes had previously missed. Two tall, young figures, a girl and a man. Relief surged over him and anger, too.

"Young fools," he muttered. "I might have known there was nothing really wrong."

He started to return to his quiet garden when something about the girl's pose arrested him. A fragment of what she was saying reached him. "I tell you I'm not going. Nothing could induce me to!"

There seemed to be something tremulous and appealing about the voice. Heath squared his shoulders. He was a shy man but a conscientious one and he thought he had no choice. His long legs brought him in a few strides to the quarreling pair.

"I beg your pardon," he said quietly, addressing the girl whose face was only a white blur in the darkness. "Is there anything I can do? I thought I heard a crash."

He was shaken when the voice that answered proved to be that of his secretary. Trembling, excited, yet unmistakably Susan Carey's.

"Mr. Heath!" that voice said. "I wonder if you would be so awfully good as to take me back to the Ackroyds. I'm staying there and the others have gone to another party and I have a raging headache."

Heath concealed his surprise. "I should be delighted," he said, ignoring her escort and wishing he had not left his eyeglasses on his study desk. These tall, young ruffians all looked alike.

"I should be delighted," he repeated.

The youth said something in a low voice, to low for Heath to hear. The older man waited, embarrassed. Then he felt a light touch on his arm.

"Shall we start now?" Susan said. She was trembling.

"You'd better keep hold of my arm," he admonished her. "These roads are full of ruts if you're not familiar with them. I can walk them in my sleep." His manner was as calm as though nothing unusual had happened.

"We'll go along to my house and pick up a car," he continued. "It's far too far to walk all the way and you're cold."

She began to speak all in a rush. "I think I ought to explain."

Coldly she said, "Don't tell me unless you especially want to."

"Oh but I do." She was shivering now with excitement and fatigue. "I'd like to tell you about it if you don't mind. He—he said dread-

Great Plains Wheat Crop "Doubtful"

WASHINGTON, April 30—Winter wheat in central and eastern states generally is in good condition but there is a "doubtful looking crop of wheat in the great plains territory," the department of agriculture reported today.

"From western Texas to South Dakota the grain has had to contend with dry weather, dust storms, and freezing until the reports now indicate a heavy abandonment of acreage in parts of that region," the report said.

"Current reports point to a crop of hard red winter wheat about half that of last year. The plains region as a whole apparently faces difficult crop conditions this season with adequate moisture lacking and in the north a serious grasshopper infestation."

The quantity of wheat, including flour, exported last month was the largest March exportation in three years, the department reported.

JOE CLARK TO SELECT CISCO BOYS FOR TRIP

(Special to the Cisco News)
 KERRVILLE, April 30. — Joe Clark, instructor at Randolph college and son of President Clark of the college, has been chosen to select Cisco boys for a trip to the Olympic games at Los Angeles this summer under the sponsorship of Ray Morrison, it was announced here today by Herbert L. Crate of the Rio Vista, patron of the tour.

Clark will work with Morrison, Wendell Ley, Rio Institute burdler, and Foster Rucker, S. M. U. Freshman coach, in selecting boys for the tour. Thirty seven will be chosen. They will meet in San Antonio July 11th and begin a forty day trip along pioneer trails through the old west, visiting such places as Carlsbad Caverns, Juarez, Salton Sea, Catalina Island, Frisco, Hollywood, Yosemite and many other points in their private bus.

During the sixteen days of the Olympics the boys will camp on the Pacific coast, Los Angeles, going in to the games every day, and following an athletic program of their own. Ray Morrison is arranging for them a series of personal conferences with outstanding international athletes.

Clark will also represent the Rio Vista camps, which are entering season here on the banks of the Guadalupe river.

City Commission---

Donovan, then fire and police commissioner) had ever been around.

"Pass," observed R. L. Wilson, who was standing with him just within the door, "maybe it was because the commissioners knew that the department could be depended upon. If there had been very many houses lost, they'd have come around. But they knew the department was efficient."

Pass admitted that this was probably true.

He pressed for some action on the protest and Mayor Berry suggested that the commission meet with the fire department Saturday evening.

It was agreed that this would be done.

During the discussion Pass told the commission that it had relieved him of his duties as fire marshal, which left him with the position of fire chief and a salary of only $25 a month, whereas every city of the size of Cisco paid its fire chief an adequate salary.

"But I'll tell you gentlemen this. I'll serve as fire chief on that little $25 a month and do the work of the fire marshal along with it if you will serve on your pay of $20 a month as commissioners."

After this matter had been thus disposed of, F. D. Wright, city attorney under the previous administration, told the commission that his law firm of Butts and Wright had a contract with the city to represent it in the bond litigation pending. He said that, while he felt his contract was legally binding, he would not press it if the commission wished to terminate it. "I don't want to be a quitter," he said. "I am ready to go on with the suits or terminate the contract as you wish. I want an expression on the matter as soon as possible because attorneys for the bond people have asked for an early setting in one of the cases."

City Attorney Grantham then told the commission that since Mr. Wright and his firm had been representing the city in these matters, he thought they should continue under the contract. He pointed out that a vast amount of study and work is required and said that the best interest of the city demanded that the attorneys who were familiar with the suits from the beginning should go on with them and that any other bond suits that are filed should be turned over to them. He offered his own services in assisting, if desired.

The commission took the matter "under advisement" and promised a decision Saturday evening.

The meeting of the commission was open both to newspapermen and to the public.

On Henderson's motion the commission also voted to notify all discharged city employees that their time is up May 1.

Accused Slayer Arrested at Dallas

DALLAS, April 30. — Ed Patton, 22, was arrested here today on a murder charge in connection with the killing of Robert H. Wall, of Sallisaw, Okla., whose bullet-riddled body was found last Tuesday morning at the foot of Wild Horse mountain near Sallisaw.

He was arrested here when he went to the general delivery window for mail. Officers said he admitted the shooting. A companion wanted for questioning in the case, Rev. O. Odum, was also arrested and an automobile which belonged to young Wall, was recovered.

J. Hollis Clark Will Preach Today

The Rev. J. Hollis Clark, student in Southern Methodist university and son of J. Q. Clark of Cisco, will preach at both morning and evening services at the First Methodist church today, the pastor, Rev. O. Odum, announced Saturday upon his return from Fort Worth where he has been recuperating in the Methodist hospital.

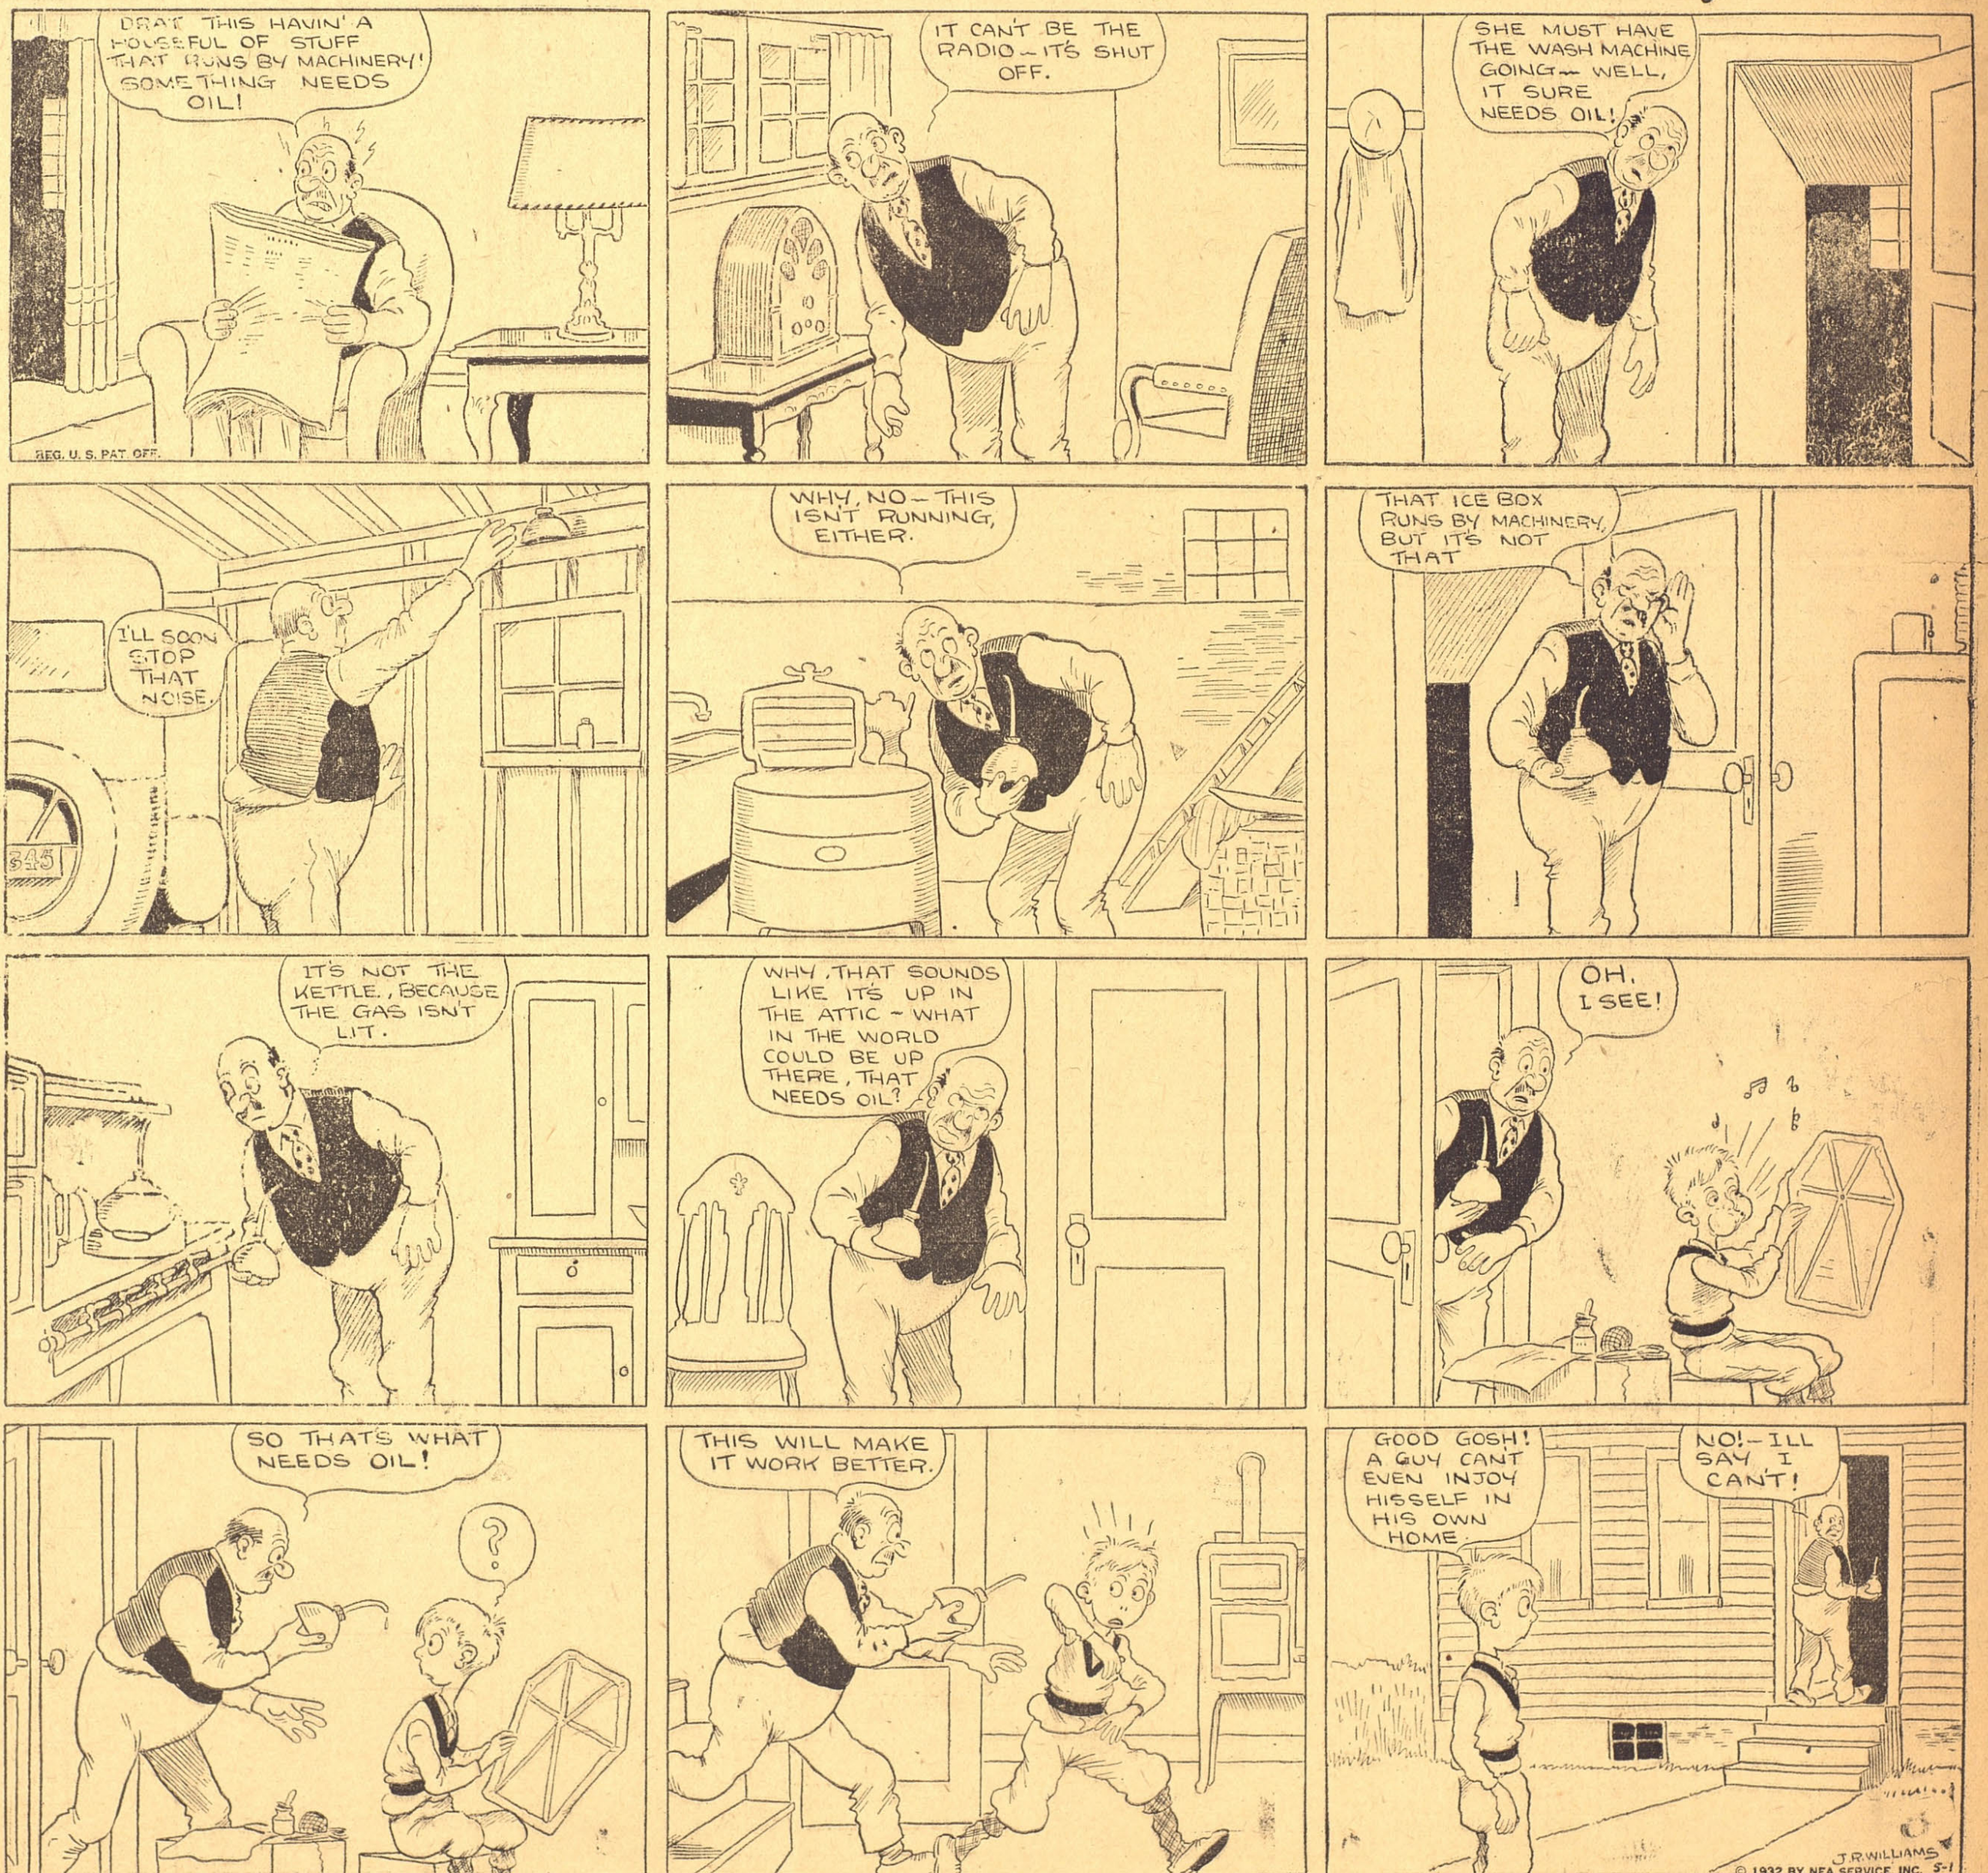

The Rev. Mr. Odum was much improved after his stay at Fort Worth where he went to recuperate from a recent illness.

GARRETT SEES EXPERIENCE AS COUNTY ASSET

"My three years in the office of county judge have served to impress me with the responsibilities of the office. My former experience as a business executive have been valuable to me in the performance of its duties thus far. In presenting myself for re-election to the office I feel that my intimate knowledge of the details of the county's affairs, and its financial status will enable me to give it a better executive administration than bringing in a new man who is unfamiliar with the situation." Thus said Clyde Garrett in regard to his intention to make the race for re-election to the office of county judge.

The office of county judge carries with it a far greater responsibility than the average citizen realizes. In addition to being the presiding officer of the commissioners' court, the county judge presides over a law court for the trying of civil and criminal cases and acts as a referee in matters pertaining to lunacy, epileptics, pensions, indigents and probate matters such as guardianships and the probate of wills and the administration of estates.

The county judge is the chief executive officer of the county's affairs by reason of being presiding officer of the commissioners' court and having these responsibilities prescribed by the statutes.

Ben Diligent
Judge Garrett and the commissioners' court have been particularly diligent in seeing that the county's funds in county depositories have been adequately protected. In a recent bank failure the county had on deposit approximately $265,000 of which the indications are that it will be recovered in full.

In view of the fact that in the closing of a county depository a few years ago in which there is still due the county the sum of $355,587.88 and probably none of it will ever be recovered the present county judge and commissioners' court have every right to take pride in the results of their diligence in attending to the county's money. In the former bank closing the county had on deposit the sum of $556,535.15. The securities guaranteeing the deposit were sold for $115,389.44, and the state guaranty fund refunded the county $39,557.33, making a total recovered of $300,947.27, and a net loss of $355,587.88.

Separate Judge
In talking to a representative of this paper, Garrett said that prior to his taking of the office there was a separate judge of the county court at law. This position was abolished. Garrett's present salary is $3,200 per annum while the total salaries for the two judges and a stenographer were $5,760, making an annual saving of $2,560 and Judge Garrett is doing the work alone.

Judge Garrett and the commissioners' court have adopted a broad policy in matters of adjusting property values for tax purposes. Sitting as an equalization board they have tried to be fair and reasonable to both the large and small owners of property.

Garrett is a native of Eastland county, having been born here of one of the pioneer families. Prior to being elected to county judge he has served as city manager of Eastland and as a banking executive.

"Eastland county owns real estate valued at more than $375,000 in addition to office equipment and road equipment of appreciable value of $100,000," said Garrett, "and it's a man-sized job to see after all of it, attend to the safety of the county's funds, handle probate matters and preside over the court." However I like the job and am experienced and qualified to hold it and am going to ask the people to re-elect me to the place."

MUSIC WEEK TO BE OBSERVED.

Beginning Sunday, May 1, every state in the union will observe Music Week. Educational programs will be given throughout the week, churches will feature special musical numbers during their services, and all of the federated clubs will join in giving due recognition to the one fine art that is in daily use in the uplifting of our lives, and the atmosphere of our homes. Of all the fine arts, music is the most wonderful. It is a gifted child of the imagination; it transports the soul through every conceivable emotion, lifting it up to a purer air, a broader view.

No home is complete without some musical instrument to bring joy to the inmates thereof. No program is complete without its musical accompaniment. And so, the nation sets aside one week out of the year and pays special tribute to music and acknowledges its uplift—its power for good over our daily lives.

In Cisco, the Music Study club will hold an open meeting on Monday, May 2, at the Presbyterian church at 4 o'clock. Mrs. S. E. Hittson, president of the Sixth District of Music clubs will be in charge of the program, ably assisted by the members of the Cisco Music Study club and their friends. This meeting is open to all, no collection will be taken, and the people of Cisco are invited to attend and enjoy the program that has been prepared.

Below is the program as outlined by the chairman, Mrs. Hittson: Chorus: (a) Spring-Boutelle, (b) The Old Refrain-Kreisler, Music club; Organ solo: Pilgrims, Song of Hope-Batiste, S. E. Steward; Solo:

OREGON RAZES FAMOUS BULL PEN AT SALEM. SALEM, Ore., April 30. — The nationally famous bull pen at Oregon State Penitentiary is being torn up.

Hereafter, incorrigibles will be placed in solitary confinement in special cells in a new block.

Since its erection in 1915, the old pen provided background for many complaints and basis for at least two prison investigations.

The bare walls of the bull pen opened into an open court, surrounded by a high cement and brick wall. It provided a place to exercise prisoners.

Two Shot. Two heavily-armed guards occupied a position on the wall surrounding the pen. Records show that two convicts who over-stepped the "dead-line" in bull pen court were shot and killed by the guards. That was several years ago.

At best, comforts of the pen proper were scant, and confinement wasn't looked forward to, even though the inmate was relieved of hard labor.

Convicts were limited to two meals a day, mostly bread and water, and prevented from associating with other prisoners.

Steel Bunks. Bunks were steel benches, and the blanket supply was limited to demands of weather.

The new cells for incorrigibles are politely called "corrective and meditation" cells.

With one exception, they are equipped with plumbing and aside from solitude, are not distressing to inmates.

For prisoners who insist upon violence, a small cell, bare of furnishings, has been constructed.
