A RETURN OF HERITAGE.

Mr. Mills, astute secretary of the treasury, has found another reason for the failure of business to respond to the volumes of energizing credit that the administration has pumped into the flabby structure. He has discovered that the forthcoming election is the biggest obstacle to recovery. He means to convey, of course, that the prospect of the election of a democrat is the thing that is holding the old vehicle in neutral gear and that the re-election of Mr. Hoover will open the way for full steam ahead and prosperity again.

All during the campaign republican leaders and scene shifters have been diligently promoting a "Red" scare. They have found Reds behind every bush and even before the august tribunal of the supreme court. Failing to find cause for a direct accusation they have sought to reflect a lurid glare upon the democratic leadership. Gov. Roosevelt has been cautious. He has avoided molehills that the sanguine opposition could make into mountains. His mildness has been less satisfactory to the more radical factions of the middle-west but it has been reassuring to the conservatives of the east and south who are dissatisfied with the blundering leadership of the white house and anxious for a new orientation of national policy to lead the nation out of the depression into which it had slumped. They do not wish to lose what has been lost, but they are disgusted with a leadership that has proved inadequate to effectively mobilize American resources and manpower in a crisis, disgusted with an inflexible doctrine that may have served well the needs of a generation ago but finds itself wholly inadequate to meet the changing conditions of a new era. They are demanding, not a radical upheaval, but a readjustment of national powers and resources to meet new fronts. Roosevelt, as the spearhead of this new determination, is offering them a leadership that they are accepting with confidence. It is a progressive leadership, the formulation of a new advance, a step away from plutocratic paternalism, toward the revivifying of the body politic with a sense of proprietorship in its own institutions and an appreciation of its responsibilities in those institutions. Through Roosevelt and Garner the American people in this campaign can come back into touch with the very principles upon which American greatness has been built, a grasp we are beginning to lose because of years of a dissipation of those forces that are ultimate in individualized citizenship.

Democracy offers to an individual American a return of his heritage.

THE VIGILANTE SPIRIT.

Lubbock, aroused over the wanton killing of Robert Tharp, assistant manager of a grocery store and former star football player of McMurry college, has aroused the old vigilante spirit of the west. The Lubbock bar association at a called meeting voted that no member for a year should defend any person "charged with the commission of theft, burglary, robbery or murder committed in the execution of any of these crimes, unless appointed to do so by the court." In the event of appointment the member will confine his interest to assisting the court in seeing that the constitutional rights of the defendants are protected.

The Lubbock lawyers are citizens first and lawyers afterward. They are determined that the criminal element shall have no recourse to their skill and ingenuity in escaping the punishment that it deserves. If the criminal is guilty he should be punished, in their stand, and their duty is simply to see that he is punished without violation of his constitutional rights.

"Shoot like hell," was the injunction of Mayor J. J. Clements, a brother of Cisco's Comm'r Joe Clements. "If one shows any sign of pulling a gun, beat him to it."

With that sort of a spirit aroused the gunman is going to find it hard sledding in Lubbock just as the old frontier desperado found it hard sledding with the vigilante committees who made summary use of necktie parties to deal with his breed.

The idea that a murderer may walk into a peaceful town and shoot down honest citizens in cold blood is abhorrent to every impulse of true citizenship. If the bars of every other county in Texas would take the same stand that the Lubbock bar has taken there would be a short end to these criminal depredations.

NORRIS ON REGULARITY.

Some amusing contrasts are provided in this year's political campaign. Senator George W. Norris, independent republican senator, battling for the defeat of President Hoover, and the election of Democratic Candidate Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt is making use of an argument that is abhorrent to the minds of the democratic party regulars in Texas.

Norris denounces party regularity as "one of the greatest evils confronting our government" and declared that if Hoover is elected it will be by the votes of people who are so enamored of the fetish of party loyalty that they will vote for him in spite of their dislike.

That argument may go in the north and east where the democrats are striving to make inroads upon republican majorities, but it would have a rather sour taste in the mouths of Texas democrats who are fortifying their candidates with the very thing that the Nebraska senator is denouncing in effort to win them the national election.

According to Norris the modern slogan of stand by your party right or wrong "in the logical end means the destruction of democratic government."

It begins to look more and more that political doctrines and "isms" are more a matter of expediency and less a matter of fundamental honesty.

The Campaign Investigation of 1933

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

Two facts came out of the monthly love-feast of city officials and employees at the city hall last night. One is that Joe Clements is an excellent barbecuer of chicken. The other is that H. S. Stubbfield mistook the meeting for a democratic convention.

Mayor J. T. Berry swore this morning that Henry would be barred from further participation in these social affairs. It seems that he became so enamored of Joe Clements barbecued chicken that right in the middle of things he clambered upon the boards and did a clog with the zest of the old-time buck and wing artist.

Mayor Berry, however, found occasion for Henry's enthusiasm. He, himself, was ecstatic over the flavor of the chickens. "Elegant" he termed it. Joe may be cussed as a commissioner but he'll carry off the medals as a prize barbecuer if the plaudits of the 35 who attended the meeting are to be believed.

There were twenty chickens and each man got a half, said the mayor. Where the other five halves went was a mystery until "hizzoner" explained that the night shift employees were not forgotten.

The social was held in the auditorium of the city hall. Next month, November 11th is the exact date, the event will be expanded into an oyster supper. Families of all employees who have families are invited. Preparations will anticipate 150. J. T. Elliott has been delegated to connect with oysters Joe Clements' reputation with chicken.

Save your suspicions. Each commissioner and each employe pays his way. No delving into city funds for these events.

A few sparks:

A member of congress was very much impressed with the dignity of his position, and it was always on his mind. One night his wife awakened him and whispered:

"John, there are burglars in the house."

"You must be mistaken, my dear," he answered. "There may be a few in the senate, but in the house—oh, no; the idea is preposterous."

An old negro who had spent many years in a wheel chair wanted to go on one last coast hunt before he died. So he and his grandchildren accompanied by several dogs started out.

Hardly had they penetrated the swamp when they met a bear. All

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—Making a last bid to the great open spaces and hurling a few more thunderous blasts at the middle west, the presidential campaign is veering toward the east for the final battle.

The "Four Horsemen" of 1932 politics reserved their heaviest fire for the industrial area which stretches from Wisconsin along the Great Lakes to Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and New England—with a total of 240 electoral votes.

These are the "Four Horsemen," the only real big shots who are participating in the campaign: President Hoover, fighting with his back to the wall, forced to carry his cause from the White House out into the country, vigorously defending his own record in a fight for survival which he must make virtually alone.

Governor Roosevelt, riding on a wave of Hoover unpopularity, also doing most of his own fighting, proving himself a shrewd politician and soon to be facing a final test in the section where his cause is weakest.

Calvin Coolidge, the only other Republican speaker who can command a national audience, who was persuaded to emerge for a single speech at New York in the hope that his wide popularity might swing votes back to the G. O. P.

Al Smith, still the personal idol of millions, who has been persuaded to bury his grudge against Roosevelt and Hoover try to reclaim the large body of his followers who have threatened to ruin the Roosevelt ticket in New York, New England and New Jersey.

THOSE are the four men to whom the country wants to listen this year. They are the only ones who count very much as campaigners, although there are hundreds of others on the stump.

Vice President Curtis is touring around in some section or other, virtually unnoticed, and Jack Garner, Roosevelt's running mate, thus far isn't making any speeches at all. At least seven cabinet members and Mrs. Dolly Gann are campaigning for Hoover or about to start out, but even such party heroes as Secretary of the Treasury Mills and Secretary of War Hurley have thus far failed to make any deep impression.

The situation has thrown almost the entire burden of victory or defeat on Hoover, who originally intended to campaign by staying on the job at the White House, making only two or three speeches and those of a not very partisan nature.

The spectre of defeat, however, drove him out into a fighting mood. With the possible exception of Coolidge, his campaigners and managers have been of very little help and if he wins this election his will be the glory.

at the University of Texas may be taken as a criterion.

Taking a population of 50,000 as the dividing line only seven of the 22 lettermen on the Longhorn squad hail from larger towns, six of these from Austin which is on the borderline. Only 19 others squadmen out of some 80 players represent the larger cities.

On this basis the boys who get their early training digging fishing worms or playing makeshift games in the wheat stubble appear to have it over their city cousins with their parks and supervised playgrounds.

Naturally, the greater number of smaller cities gives this division a larger number of squad members. Too, schools other than Texas university attract players from Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, and El Paso. The "small town" boy is in his own at Texas.

Heading the list of "small-towners" is Ernest Koy, co-captain, fullback and main cog in the Longhorn offense. His address is Seely. Alongside him, and expected to be his equal on offense this year, is Harrison Stafford, Wharton halfback.

Besides this pair, the "small-town" boys in the two powerful Longhorn backfields are Charles Bankhead, third-year quarterback from Paris, Behn Hilliard, brilliant sophomore open-field runner from Orange, and Marshall Pennington, sophomore back from Georgetown. The other three are Hank Clewis, Jimmie Burr and Osburn Hodges all of Austin.

At the center post is Bill Smith, Cisco flash, understudied by Charlie Coates, Waco, another borderline city. Clifford Blanton, stellar tackle of two year's experience comes from Hewitt while William DuBose, third-year tackle from Gonzales, is making a good early showing and doubtless will see much action this year. Edwin Price of Corsicana twice has lettered at end.

In addition, there is a large array of "small-town" candidates who are making strong bids for the relief jobs and some may even crowd out the apparent regulars. Included are: Vernon Taylor, Gonzales; Leon Bohls, Taylor and John Newland, Corsicana.

Other letter-men from the larger cities are: Edward Gannon, Dallas; Daniel Delaney, Houston; George Rogers, Houston; Russell Brickell and John Maney, Fort Worth; Earl Platt, Dallas; Plackett Moody, Beaumont, and Jim Phipps, Waco.

CALL of the WEST

by R. G. MONTGOMERY

BEGIN HERE TODAY
 Stan Ball accused Asper Delo, thinking of crooked practice and of being men shot who try to check on his activities. Ball says he is taking a check and Delo tells him he will personally prevent it. Upon saving Delo's office Ball saves Delo's daughter, from kidnappers. He slips away when he finds who she is, being her he is Stanley Black.

Dudley Winters, in love with Dona, comes with her to Three Rivers to get a check up on his mad fight with all. They find Ball accused of killing a ranger. Dudley has secured a horse and has had a marriage certificate filed out to marry Dona. He uses the certificate after Delo is flushed and wounded to keep him from taking any more part in the hunt. Ball is caught by Swergin. Delo's timber boss, while listening to Dona tell of her marriage. He escapes but believes her married. Dona decides out to find Stanley Black who she believes is in the country. She meets Ball and thinks him Stanley Black. He promises to rid the ranger of Ball. Valuable records are stolen from the office and Swergin's man insists Ball wounded him and took a posse around Ball. Dona goes out and see Ball escaping. She shoots at him and he takes a wound during her and taking her to a cave.

Asper learns of her capture and heads a posse but fails to find her. Ball makes Dona promise not to leave and go for water and food. Swergin finds the cave and Dona. He waits for Ball.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXIX

Swergin crowded into the cave and looked around. He clicked his tongue suggestively and an ugly grin spread over his features.

"You don't act very happy over this rescue," he growled.

"Oh, I am, but you startled me!" Dona found her tongue.

"Where's Ball?" he demanded almost savagely.

"He left. Didn't you meet him on the trail?"

"Is he coming back?" Swergin snapped.

"He made me promise to stay here." The words sounded odd and unconvincing under the glare of the timber boss.

"And you stayed?" Swergin's grin was replaced by a leer. "That is fine! We'll talk about that later. Now I'm going to get this Ball. Get him right and you've got to help me."

"I'll certainly help you to capture him," Dona hastened to assure him. "That's the reason why I stayed."

Swergin brushed aside this explanation. It was plain he was placing his own meaning on the whole affair. "I'm going to hide back in that dark pocket and you get Ball facing you. Then I'll step out on him."

"We're to take him in?" Dona's eyes were wide. She did not like Swergin's manner and she did not want to stand and see any man even Ball shot in the back.

"No gun play unless I have to," Swergin growled. "I got other plans for Mr. Ball." He walked back into the dark corner and sat down. The blackness of the pocket enveloped him like a blanket; he had vanished completely.

Dona finished drying the dishes and sat down on the stone cot. Her heart was pounding like a trip hammer and the blood was beating in her ears. Now that she was face to face with a stern situation she had found of her strong nerves.

The minutes ticked away and there was not a movement in the cave. A pack rat, considering the place deserted came out of a crack in the wall and began an examination of the dishes. He selected a spoon and started off with it. A movement of Dona's boot caused him to drop the spoon and frisk into his hole.

Stan Ball certainly was taking his time. A half hour slipped by and he had not returned. Swergin grunted and shifted his weight to an easier position. He was beginning to get suspicious of the setup. Dona could not move. She was sure Ball would return and she was half convinced that Swergin would shoot him in the back.

Outside on the bench a stone rattled. Dona stiffened and listened. She heard Ball speak softly to the black mare. A minute later his wide hat was darkening the cave entrance. He had no bundles or pack with him and his face showed surprise when he saw Dona.

"So you kept your promise!" he greeted her briefly.

Dona's tongue was dry but she managed to put a question without betraying her emotion. "Where is the food?"

"Some one beat me to it and cleaned my cache." Stan lied without outward expression. He had intended to allow her time to get away. He had no cache of food.

Dona opened her mouth to answer when suddenly a bulky form pushed out from the blackness of the pocket. Two big guns bore down upon the back of the unsuspecting Ball. Dona could see that both black hammers lay back against the grip of each gun. Swergin meant to make no slip this time.

"Stick 'em up!" he roared.

Slowly Stan's hands rose above his head. A twisted smile curved his lips and his eyes held those of Dona. "You win," he said evenly and bowed his head a little.

Swergin jerked Stan's gun from its holster and shoved it into his jumper pocket. "You won't slip through this time," he gritted.

"No?" Ball's voice was soft and careless. He might have been serving a well-brown cake to Dona for all the strain he showed.

"Cross your hands behind you!" Swergin demanded.

Stan did as he was told and Swergin produced a length of light rope. With one hand he jerked the rope around Stan's wrists until the hempen strands cut deep into the flesh. Leaving a length of the rope loose he tossed it to the floor. "That will take care of you," he grinned.

Stan Ball did not wince as the rope bit into his wrists. He expected worse than that to come and had ceased to be much interested. Physical pain could not touch the bitterness that welled up in his heart.

Dona got to her feet and stood watching. She could find no fault with the way Swergin had handled the capture. Ball had to be safely bound for he was a dangerous man. She could not keep down a feeling of admiration for the way he took it, standing up straight with that crooked smile still on his lips.

Swergin was plainly angered by his prisoner's lack of feeling. He thrust his beefy face close to Stan's and leered. "Think you're hard, eh? Well, we'll see!" He picked up the loose rope end. "Move outside."

Stan went with a firm stride. When they were out on the bench Swergin turned to Dona. "You can ride the black."

Stan had hoped that Swergin would decide to ride the mare. This would have been a break, for the black knew no master except Stan Ball.

Dona looked at Stan instinctively. He nodded and whistled. The mare trotted to him and muzzle at his bound arms.

"The lady wants to ride," Stan spoke softly.

Dona mounted and sat waiting for the mare to make a move. The horse looked at Stan in surprise and he spoke reassuringly to her.

Swergin climbed upon his horse and fastened the loose end of Stan's bonds to his saddle horn. "Step out!" he ordered.

Stan led the way down through the cleft of rock with Swergin riding at his back. The big timber boss kept his gun ready all the while. Undoubtedly he was enjoying the capture.

Already her triumph over Stan Ball had lost its flavor for Dona. She was western bred and could not help but admire a brave man. Ball certainly was proving his courage.

They wound down through the timber for a mile then Swergin changed their direction. He made Ball tear off to the right in the general direction of Pass Creek. They did not halt though the sun had become hot and Stan's face was streaked with perspiration and dust. Finally Dona rode up beside Swergin and demanded that they stop.

Swergin pulled up, jerking savagely on the rope. Stan did not give a sign of the pain that the sudden jerk caused his burning wrists. "What's up?" Swergin demanded roughly.

"Why aren't you heading for camp?" Dona asked.

"I got to take this snake to a place where the boys won't find him. What you think would happen if I rode right in with him? I'm an officer of the law." Swergin fairly smirked as he made this explanation.

Dona could not help but agree with the big boss. He was doing just what any officer would have done.

gin produced a length of light rope. With one hand he jerked the rope around Stan's wrists until the hempen strands cut deep into the flesh. Leaving a length of the rope loose he tossed it to the floor. "That will take care of you," he grinned.

They did not halt though the sun had become hot and Stan's face was streaked with perspiration and dust. Finally Dona rode up beside Swergin and demanded that they stop.

She was about to demand easier treatment of the prisoner but held her tongue. After all, Swergin was acting well enough, considering what he had suffered at Ball's hands.

They moved on at a steady pace until they came to a cabin hidden in a thicket growth of uncut spruce. The place was so well hidden that it would have been passed at close range by anyone who did not know their location among the rank undergrowth that choked the trunks of the sturdy spruce.

Swergin dismounted and marched Stan into the cabin. The door was open as though someone had prepared for this event. The cabin was bare except for a split log table and two benches made after the same pattern. Swergin backed Stan up against wall at the far end of the cabin. Two pegs had been driven into the logs waist high and the timber boss made his prisoner fast to them.

Swergin faced Dona. "You stay here with this gun," he handed her Stan's revolver, "while I ride hell for leather and get a few good men to take him in. 'Til only be gone about an hour. Then you can go on in. I'll see your old man and tell him you're safe."

Dona nodded and sat down on one of the benches facing her prisoner. Swergin hurried out and upon his horse. Dona could hear him thundering down the slope toward camp. She met her prisoner's eyes and found them blinting with a hint of amusement.

SOVIET GIVES SCHOOL MARMS USE OF SWITCH

MOSCOW, Oct. 18.—Soviet school children have been rigidly limited in their classroom autonomy through the recent order of the Central committee of the Communist party officially conferring upon teachers and principals the "leading role" in the drama of education.

Not only have teachers been invested again with the authority which they exercised before the revolution in relation to studies, but they have been given wide punitive powers to enforce discipline.

In extreme cases they may even expel pupils from school for a period from one to three years.

Children Ruled
The restoration of teacher's rights is frankly intended to end a chaotic situation, in which children more and more dictated terms to their pedagogical elders. By means of pupils' courts, wallpapers and other self-government methods school children heretofore were in a position to embellish the lives of teachers who did not please them.

The Party resolution on reforming the school system by implication admits many weaknesses both in subject matter and in teaching methods. It is sufficiently apparent that in a great many schools the most elementary studies were distorted and neglected. Pupils it appears were graduated from the seven-year courses without having learned the basic elements of primary education.

The Central Committee declared that there has been a serious "vulgarization" of some subjects. As examples it cites the teaching of physics without reference to the laws of Newton, biology without reference to the cell and the cellular structure of organic matter, geography without a clear understanding of maps and the like.

Backward in History
Even more specifically it indicates the backwardness in history. Elementary schools hereafter will be expected to teach children more about the history of Russia and other nations, instead of limiting themselves as often until now to a history of the Bolshevik revolution.

Objective observers of the school system here—especially the parents with children of school age—always have criticized the ill-balanced program of studies. Children quickly learned to quote Marx, Lenin and Stalin; they could discuss current events in the tone of Investing editorials. But they were not so adept in reading, writing, arithmetic and other subjects of general knowledge.

Bullfighters' Earnings Down

MADRID, Oct. 18.—Earnings of bullfighters, like those of film stars, are in true life much smaller than the public thinks—in these hard times even smaller than before.

The highest-priced bullfighters of the 1932 season were Domingo Ortega, Marcial Lalanda, Vicente Barrera and Manolo Bienvenida, who, on the average, earned from 12,000 to 20,000 pesetas per performance. This is the equivalent of from 1,000 to 1,700 American dollars for a hard afternoon's work. Since the maximum number of bullfights for any given matador is around 90—generally much less—in one season, it can be seen that nowadays nobody is getting rich quick as a matador do toros.

But that is not all. A first-class matador has a lot of expenses to pay out of his own salary. The four acs named above, in accordance with the tariff established by the Union of Picadores and Banderilleros, had to pay out 400 pesetas each for two picadores, 400 pesetas each for two banderilleros, and 300 pesetas for the third banderillero—or a total of 1,900 pesetas. Furthermore, the matador has to pay for his valet—the mozo de estokes, who dresses him and carries his sword for him. And he has to pay the traveling and hotel expenses of all his "cuadrilla," that is to say, the two picadores, three banderilleros, and mozo de estokes. Besides, some of the acs do advertising on a big scale, paying for their photographs in newspapers and magazines, big write-ups, etc., all of which is costly.

Lesser hits among the matadores de toros charge much less per performance, and naturally pay as low as 250 for each picador and 225 pesetas for each banderillero.

Two hands of bridge were played, with Miss Lois Pulley winning high score and Miss Virginia Butts winning the low score. At the close of the games, guests were ushered into the dining room, which was beautifully decorated, featuring yellow in an attractive color theme. The breakfast consisted of grapefruit served with cherries, waffles, baked eggs, bacon strips, and coffee, with stuffed grapes completing the delicious menu.

Baskets of candy lemon drops and jaw-breakers were given as guest favors to Mesdames Mary Elizabeth Cleet, Lillian Shterzer, Bessie Pearce Betty Fee Spears, Pauline McClelland, Lois Pulley, Lucille Clements, Virginia Butts, and Marjorie Lee Russell.

ACC TO HAVE HOME-COMING THANKSGIVING

ABILENE, Oct. 18.—Former students of Abilene Christian college will gather here Thanksgiving day for a reunion that will be featured by a barbecue and the annual football game with Daniel Baker college. More than 1,500 ex-students are expected to attend.

The "exes" of this institution, which surprised the educational circles of the state when it enrolled more students this fall than it had ever before attracted, are scattered throughout the nation. Being the largest higher educational institution supported by members of the Church of Christ, it attracts students from greater distances than most senior colleges of the southwest. Thirteen states are represented in this year's student body.

The gathering is to be solely a social affair sponsored by the Alumni-ex-students association to renew interest of former students in the college, which moved three years ago from its small campus in west Abilene to a completely new plant northeast of the city. This is expected to be the largest of many meetings of patrons, friends and

China Flooded With Silver Dollars

PEIPING, China, Oct. 18.—Bankers, foreign and Chinese, in Tientsin and Peiping are faced with a difficult problem arising from a glut of silver dollars. As a result, check of silver dollars are rapidly becoming unacceptance for clearing accounts and there is danger that the local financial markets will reach a complete deadlock. Hence, the bankers propose to establish a joint treasury to receive from members silver dollars for deposit. Certificates against deposits received will be issued for clearing purposes and loans will be granted at all to members after enough reserve has been set aside against cash liabilities.

The hope is to provide in Tientsin a reservoir for the surplus of silver dollars, caused by the excessive supply of money in the interior.

"Nature in the Raw is seldom MILD"

THE INDIAN RAID
"Nature in the Raw"—as portrayed by the celebrated artist, Fred Madan... inspired by that wild, bloody scramble of covered wagons in the Colorado Gold Rush (1858), as described in the National Geographic Magazine. "Nature in the Raw is Seldom Mild"—and raw tobaccos have no place in cigarettes.

No raw tobaccos in Luckies—that's why they're so mild

We buy the finest, the very finest tobaccos in all the world—but that does not explain why folks everywhere regard Lucky Strike as the mildest cigarette. The fact is, we never overlook the truth that "Nature in the Raw is Seldom Mild"—so these fine tobaccos, after proper aging and mellowing, are then given the benefit of that Lucky Strike purifying process, described by the words—"It's toasted". That's why folks in every city, town and hamlet say that Luckies are such mild cigarettes.

"It's toasted"
That package of mild Luckies
