

GUILTY LIPS

by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN Author of "MAD MARRIAGE"

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Pretty Norma Kent, 20-year-old secretary, marries Mark Travers, millionaire's son, in spite of the opposition of the father, F. M. Travers.

The story opens in Marlboro, middle western metropolis. Mark sells his roadster to get money for an extravagant honeymoon at fashionable Blue Springs. Soon their money is gone. Mark borrows $500 and they return to Marlboro. When almost everything they have is gone he finds a job only to lose it. Finally, he becomes a flowerwalker in Blossomdale's department store.

In spite of poverty the young couple are happy until Mark's father sends for him. He offers to take Mark back into his own business organization if Mark will first prove he can make good. His first task involves a business trip to France. Norma is to remain at home. In spite of her protests Mark goes.

When Norma is rudely treated at her father-in-law's home she slips away leaving no trace of her whereabouts. Chris Saunders, her former roommate, helps Norma find a job.

Travers employs detectives to trace her. They discover Norma's name in police files and the record that three years before she was convicted on a vice charge. In spite of evidence that the charge was framed and Norma innocent Travers sends his lawyer to Paris Mark to secure a divorce. Norma knows nothing of this until late in January she receives a letter telling her Mark has secured a divorce. Half-sick she goes to work next morning and faints in the office.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXXVI

Chris followed Dr. Willoughby to the outer office. Stuart arose as they entered.

"She'll be all right," the doctor assured them. "Better send her home for the day, though. Seems to be a little run-down." He turned toward Chris. "You're a friend of hers?" he asked.

"Yes, doctor. We used to live in the same apartment. It isn't anything serious."

"No. I shouldn't say that. Perhaps you can arrange to go with her."

"I'm sure I can."

Stuart said, "I'll call a cab for you," and picked up the telephone. The doctor nodded curtly, put on his hat and said, "Good day." As he stepped into the corridor Chris followed. "Doctor," she said earnestly, "you're sure she's going to be all right? Norma's all alone in the world. If there's anything at all to be done—"

Dr. Willoughby eyed the girl narrowly. "You say you're a friend of hers?" he repeated.

"Oh, yes. I'm the closest friend she has in the world I guess. You see she's been worried lately. That's what made me so anxious!"

"And you don't know what's the matter with her?"

"Why—no—"

"After you get her home," the doctor said wisely, "call in her regular physician. He can tell you."

"But—you don't mean—?"

Willoughby nodded. "Perfectly normal condition," he said. "She's evidently been under a strain—worried as you say—and something brought on this fainting spell. Quite unimportant in itself. She ought to have a thorough examination. Take her to an obstetrician if you can. There are clinics, of course."

"But doctor!" the girl exclaimed. "Oh, but doctor—it can't be!"

"Sorry, but I assure you that it is. Has she a husband?"

Chris' hands had gone to her throat. "She did have," she said slowly. "There's been a divorce. Norma didn't know a thing about it until last night. You see—he's in Paris. Oh, this is dreadful!"

"Paris?" the doctor said with a show of interest.

"Yes," Chris hurried on brokenly. "Oh, I might as well tell you! She's been working here as Miss Travers but she's really married. Mark Travers is her husband—I mean he was. You know, F. M. Travers' son. The family didn't approve of the marriage. Mark went abroad two months ago and she hasn't even heard from his since. Last night she got a letter telling her about the divorce. Oh, what can she do?"

"She can go home and rest for a few days and take care of herself. That's the sensible course. Unfortunately of course. Very! I'll tell you what you do, Miss—"

"Saunders," Chris supplied.

"Yes, Miss Saunders. My office on the fifth floor. Bring Mrs. Travers in to see me in a few days, on Monday. I'll give her the animation. Does she have anything beside her salary here?"

Chris shook her head. "No," she said. "It's not much but we'll manage some way."

Dr. Willoughby shrugged. "Don't worry. I'll take care of that. Sorry the girl. Call my secretary at an appointment, will you?"

Chris said that she would. She went back to the private office where Norma had been lying on an improvised couch. Chris found her sitting up, pale but otherwise looking natural.

"The doctor says you're to take a day off," Chris announced, "going to take you home and Stuart's already called a cab for you."

"But I can't—" Norma began, trying to hear her protests routed.

"You can certainly do as your boss tells you! These are Mr. Stuart's orders. Shall I get your wraps and bring them in here?"

Stuart put his hand to the door saying that the taxi was waiting.

Chris hurried to the advertising office to explain her absence and came back wearing hat and coat.

Four Aggie Mainstays

JIMMIE ASTON

CHARLIE MALONE

CAPT. CARL MOULDEN

PAUL McFADDEN

COLLEGE STATION, Sept. 30.—Here are four of the men expected to make the "Fighting Texas Aggies" live up to their reputation during the 1931 football season. Captain Carl Moulden, Cisco for two years a fiery tackle, will be available for either tackle or end. Jimmie Aston, Farmersville product who has been switched from quarterback to fullback or halfback, is one of the most accurate forward passers on the Aggies' roster and Charlie Malone, letterman at end from Dallas, is equally able at catching passes. Paul McFadden, Cleburne, is rated as one of the best punters in the Southwest Conference and will be one of a trio of Cadet kickers who probably will bear the brunt of Aggie punting this year.

San Angelo—This city will be using natural gas from Big Lake fields by May 1st.

Harlingen—$1,000,000 will be spent on tract near city for citrus fruit planting and preparation.

Cashew Nut Imports Grow

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—A striking instance of the service which science has rendered to industry is shown in the remarkable growth of cashew nut importations from their native habitat, India, to this country. In less than ten years importations of the delicacy have increased 180 times, from 50,000 pounds in 1922 to an estimated importation for 1931 of 9,000,000 pounds.

Less than ten years ago a Hindu merchant sought out T. M. Rector, chemical engineer, and asked him to find a way to keep the nuts fresh during their long trip from India to New York. Rector, following successful efforts to keep coconut fresh during long shipment, chose the same method. He chose carbon dioxide. The inert gas packing was so perfected that he nuts were not only kept fresh, but so cushioned that few were broken in transit.

Since this process was put in use the importation of cashew nuts into the United States has practically doubled each year.

The kernel grows on the bottom of a fruit which looks like a large pear and is used by natives for food and for distilling into a brandy-like liquor which resembles applejack.
