TEXAS VOTES REPEAL OF DRY LAW

Senate Postpones Adjournment of Congress

Through the Editor's Spectacles
By GEORGE

I have just received a letter from J. Monroe Sweeney, one of the most popular and colorful baseball umpires and football referees that have ever come to the oil belt. He wrote from Syracuse, N. Y., where there is a touch of the fall already in the air. "I would rather eat hamburgers in the Oil Belt than sirloin steaks up here," he wrote. He is umpiring in International league baseball. Sweeney keeps up mighty well with the football situation in the oil belt. His first appearance here this fall will be at Abilene where he will referee a night game September 30. "I'll be glad to discard the indicator and get back to the 'whistle' he writes.

He sent his regards to his friends. "How is 'Doc' Maner, Curly Armstrong, Wally Wallace, Bill St. John, Forrest Wright and everybody in Cisco?"

Mr. and Mrs. Jewel Poe and their two daughters, returning from a ten-day vacation spent in Colorado state, do not like driving on mountain roads. There are too many steep grades and too many hairpin twists where one meets oneself coming back. To a driver used to the freedom and open spaces of the prairie lands with smooth, wide highways ribboning over the long easy swells, the nerve-on-edge tension of driving over mountain roads is exhausting. One who has been accustomed to lean back in the seat and leisurely accommodate speed to inclination and the admonitions of the back-seat driver, gets a good case of the heebie-jeebies when he sees only a few feet to his right or left a mile or so of vertical country. The awful flanks of sun-splashed, snow-streaked stone sheering up into the clouds make a beautiful sight for the tourist, but you and I, used to flat country, just can't get used to the feeling that only the twist of a wheel to one side would set us to exploring a lot of country that we'd never come back to tell about.

Jewel and his family, incidentally, returning to Cisco through the middlewest and Oklahoma City, met between that city and the little town of Paul's Valley the funeral cortege of Wiley Post, travelling from Maysville to the state capital for public services.

It isn't safe to mention K. H. Pittard's name in public, Henry Drumwright has concluded. He casually referred to him yesterday morning and promptly was seized by a couple and compelled to buy drinks for the crowd. Since that Henry keeps his mouth religiously shut.

We wish to express our thanks for the services and cooperation that made possible the success of the Daily Press' election party last night. The Lake Cisco Amusement company furnished the loud speaker system, for which we are grateful to Lloyd Hughes, manager. Lloyd also did the announcing. R. W. Mancill (He raised the devil because I had his initials R. E. the other day) supervised cutting and serving of the watermelons. W. H. Hayes installed the loud speaker system.

J. C. McAfee of the Oil Belt Advertising company furnished the blackboards on which the returns were posted. Thanks, also, to the police department for its services in roping off the street in front of the building.

Mrs. W. J. Harlan has returned to her home in Bartlett after a visit with her daughter, Mrs. Paul Woods, and Dr. Woods.

APPROVAL OF RESOLUTION RESCINDED

House in Tangle Over Amendments to Deficiency Bill

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 24 (AP)—The senate tonight postponed the adjournment of the congressional session until next week after rescinding its approval of a sine die adjournment resolution. Tangled up in an unprecedented wrangle over the third deficiency bill to which the senate added amendments calling for cotton and wheat loans, the house finally voted to return the adjournment resolution to the senate.

When the adjournment resolution was passed, President Roosevelt sent a congratulatory message to congress which was read in both houses.

"If the opportunity presents itself," Roosevelt wrote Vice President Garner, "will you be good enough to extend my greetings to the members of the senate and express my deep, sincere congratulations upon the work which it has accomplished. It has dealt, in a spirit of statesmanship, with matters of vital interest to the lives of our people."

TAX BILL GOES TO PRESIDENT

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24 (AP)—Tagged by republicans as a "purely political gesture" the $250,000,000 administration tax bill tonight smashed through its last congressional barriers and was ready for certain presidential approval.

ROOSEVELT SIGNS AAA MEASURE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24 (AP)—President Roosevelt today signed the bill strengthening the agricultural act. His signature approving the act was the signal for the department of justice to seek dismissal of more than five hundred temporary injunctions which have been granted against processing tax collections.

The enactment of this bill is the result of efforts begun in congress eighteen months ago to broaden the powers of the AAA and strengthen his legal position. It was pushed through this session after the supreme court killed the NRA codes and the supreme court test of the farm program this fall became a probability. Roosevelt signed the bill with the declaration that it would enable the AAA to "move forward in its constructive and essential work in behalf of agriculture."

Pioneer School to Open September 2

CROSS PLAINS, Aug. 24—Pioneer schools will open Monday morning, September 2, it was announced by L. C. Cash, superintendent. Preparations are being made for an enrollment of 300.

The faculty is now complete with the exception of a teacher to fill the vacancy by the resignation of Mrs. W. D. R. Owen. Plans are going forward toward the securing of a teacher who can replace Mrs. Owen in the history department as well as teach home economics, Cash stated. Other members of this year's faculty are: Cash W. Williams, E. J. Hughes, Miss Doris Pyle, Charles Rutherford, Miss Carline Gray, Mrs. Lillie Battle, Mrs. Ada Alexander, Mrs. Charles Ballew.

Clarence Purvis of Fort Worth is spending the week-end here with friends.

Roosevelt Urges Measures to Preserve NRA Benefits

Martin Named Acting NRA Administrator

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24 (AP)—President Roosevelt today appointed by executive order Lawrence J. Martin, of Virginia, acting administrator of the national recovery administration, succeeding James L. O'Neil, resigned.

Federal Rules Delay Season on Doves to Oct. 1

The dove season in the north Texas zone will not open until October 1 and shooting will be restricted to between the hours of 7 a. m. and 4 p. m. under federal regulation. The season of a month is spread over a period of three and a half months.

The federal regulations are in conflict with state regulations which allow shooting over a period of a month and a half beginning September 1.

State officials and sportsmen are protesting the federal regulations which will deprive hunters in this section of a reasonable opportunity to enjoy the sport, it was declared.

Most of the birds will be gone from the northern half of the state by October 1 and the 7 a. m. to 4 p. m. rule will mean that hunters will have to take "pot shots" at the birds as they roost rather than shooting them in a sportsmanlike way. Dove hunting should be done at sunrise and sunset to be sporty.

No likelihood of a change in the federal rules was reported by Chief Jay N. Darling of the federal biological survey to whom protest has been made by telegram from state officials, who urged that federal regulations be made to coincide with state regulations.

Miss Marie Qualls is visiting Miss Marguerite Barker in Sweetwater.

Mrs. Nick Miller and daughter, Bobbie Lee, will leave Sunday on a visit to Gatesville.

Selassie Orders Evacuation If Italy Makes War

ADDIS ABABA, Aug. 24 (AP)—Emperor Haile Selassie today ordered the civil population to evacuate the capital within a week in the event Italy declares war.

He acted on the belief that one of Italy's first acts would be to bomb Addis Ababa from the air. The emperor also ordered that all valuable property be hidden in subterranean caverns.

These orders aroused the capital's 120,000 residents, who, in evacuating, were ordered to avoid assembling in large numbers elsewhere, were told to scatter to distant points.

GATHER AT CANAL BRITISH WARSHIPS TO

VALETTA, Island of Malta, Aug. 24 (AP)—The cruise program which will bring the cream of the crack British Mediterranean fleet to within almost over night striking distance of the Suez canal by September 1, was announced officially here.

The warships will leave Malta August 29, and concentrate a tight small ring, ranging from actual entrances of the canal, and within the canal to points from actual entrances of the canal, and within the canal to points as far as four hundred miles from the Mediterranean entrance. The biggest concentration will be at Alexandria, Egypt.

Gas Engines to Be Installed in Vaults

Installation of gas engines in the vault cooling system of the West Texas Produce company will be done, it was announced Saturday by Simon Coplin, following a visit of Sam Lipshitz, Fort Worth, president of the company, here.

Contracts for the installation have not yet been let, Mr. Coplin said. There will also be some repair work done upon the vaults. The installation will involve an investment of around four or five thousand dollars, it was estimated.

Dick West of Dallas is spending the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. West.

COUNTY VOTES TO KEEP DRY AMENDMENT

Returns Complete From 22 of 27 Boxes Are Received

Returns to the Cisco Daily Press last night from all but five of the 27 county boxes gave definite indication of the attitude of the majority of the county's voters upon the seven proposed amendments to the state constitution.

Repeal was in disfavor, on the basis of these returns, complete from the 22 boxes, by a count of 1661 against to 1289 for. Other proposed amendments against which the county returned majorities were that to make possible submission of constitutional amendments at called sessions as well as regular sessions and that providing free textbooks for all children of school age, regardless of what schools they attend.

DRAWS BIG CROWD

The Cisco Daily Press election party drew a crowd estimated at easily 1,000 or more people, who heard returns from the state direct to the Daily Press from the Texas Election bureau, and from the county, ate watermelons and listened to music by Harry Schaefer, Ernest Hittson, Spurgeon Parks and Dick Thomas. Lloyd Hughes, through whose courtesy the amplifying system at the Lake Cisco Amusement company was made available for the evening, did the announcing. R. W. Mancill supervised the watermelon cutting.

The amendment providing for old age pensions was in heavy favor. The 22 boxes gave 2,589 for and 389 against.

The vote for repeal in Cisco was extremely close. By a margin of only 11 votes did the city stay in the dry column, a result that was surprising to many who expected it to remain dry by a heavy margin. The vote was 394 for the repeal amendment and 405 against. The east Cisco box gave repeal a majority, with 118 votes for and 104 against, but the west Cisco box overcame this lead.

Returns from the 22 boxes gave the following totals: (Legend—"Pensions," means the old age pension amendment; "Insanity" means the amendment to permit temporary confinement without trial of mentally ill persons not charged with a criminal offense; "Repeal" means repeal of constitutional prohibition; "Amendments" means the amendment to permit submission of proposed amendments by

Engineer for Parks Board Arrives Here

George Bringhurst, engineer with the Texas State Park board, arrived in Cisco last night to begin a survey of the 500-acre park site lying in the canyon section between the city of Cisco and Lake Cisco.

This site was deeded the state park board by the city of Cisco and Charles J. Kleiner.

Gold Clause Suits Bill to White House

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24 (AP)—Congress sent to the White House today the bill to forbid, after next January 1, suits against the government to collect any alleged losses caused by the dollar devaluation and abrogation of gold payments clauses in government obligations.

PENSIONS FOR AGED CARRY BY BIG VOTE

Free Textbooks and Submission Amendments Are Defeated

The old age pension amendment piled up a majority of over 260,000 and repeal more than 50,000. The amendment authorizing amendments at special sessions had the smallest adverse majority, around 12,000, and is the only one about whose fate there seems to be the possibility of a doubt.

Forty counties reported a complete cast of 82,935 votes as compared with 170,525 in July, 1934. Should the same ratio prevail in counties at present incomplete, the total would be approximately 486,000. Probability is that the total vote will not greatly exceed 500,000.

Amendments providing for repeal of the state's constitutional prohibition, for the temporary commitment of the insane without jury trial, old age pensions, suspended sentences and abolition of the fee system in counties of a certain size had piled up majorities at 11:30 last night when the Texas Election bureau tabulated 415,000 votes with indications that later returns would not

Neutrality Bill Is Sent to White House by Senate

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24 (AP)—Despite assertions it placed America in an "international straight jacket" and was only a "gesture toward peace," the senate today speeded to the White House the compromised resolution to bulwark American neutrality in any war. Final action came on the motion to concur in the house amendments to the original senate resolution.

The adoption of this resolution marked a reversal of traditional American neutrality policy of leaving such powers to the discretion of the president. The vote on the resolution was 77 to 2.

The compromise, among other things, places a mandatory embargo on munitions shipments to all belligerents in foreign conflicts, which is effective until next February 20.

REBELLION

WHEN Emily Felton was eight years old she ran away from home with the intention of joining a street carnival.

Her flight was not precipitated by neglect; at home she had every care and attention that a child of eight might expect of wish.

But the street carnival, which held forth on a vacant lot belonging to her father, seemed at a glance to be extremely gay and noisy and unrestrained, and Emily's home was none of these things. It was correct and luxurious, with a great deal of emphasis upon the loftier virtues, such as Duty to One's Parents, and Responsibility to the Poor.

Fortunately, or perhaps unfortunately, the owner of the carnival was not an opportunist. Instead of angling for a reward he immediately found out her name and conducted her back to the paternal roof.

Mrs. Felton was incredulous "Emily, how could you possibly want to leave your beautiful home and go away with those dirty vagabonds?"

In view of his sporting conduct, the owner of the carnival considered this a bit thick. He retaliated.

"If you ask me, there's worse things than dirt."

Frances Felton had the grace to look abashed, but his back was up. He continued his assault.

"Not bein' able to laugh, for instance; or to slip the leash occasionally."

Mrs. Felton bridled. She felt that he was presuming upon the obligation she was under. "You see what happens when a child of eight does slip the leash, as you call it."

"No'm. This is what happens when she don't slip it occasionally." He turned to the tearful Emily. "Did you ever steal green apples, or run away and go wadin' before the correct day to go wadin'?"

Emily shook her head. Until this recent revolt none of the extra-legal pleasures had seemed even a remote possibility.

"Then," he concluded, "that's why you ran away to join a street carnival. If I was you, ma'am," he suggested to Frances Felton, "I'd give her a little more rope."

Mrs. Felton's pretty chin looked stubborn. "I shall be the judge of that." She produced a bill and handed it to him "I'm really very grateful to you."

He took the bill and looked at it thoughtfully. "I wouldn't take this," he said at last, with a disrespectful twinkle, "if your husband hadn't charged us too much for that lot."

When Emily was sixteen the question of college arose. Mrs. Felton considered it judicially with her husband.

"Ardmore is really an excellent school"

Mr. Felton considered it too. Besides being president of the soundest bank in northern Alabama, he was big and shrewd and twinkling; but he was no match for his wife.

"Ardmore's no pink tea," he demurred.

"I'd like to go to Bryn Mawr," Emily put in, knowing quite well that she would go where Frances decided to send her.

"But Ardmore has almost as high a standard, and it's near enough for us to see you every week or so," Frances pointed out.

That, Emily thought to herself, was why she had put in for Bryn Mawr. Bryn Mawr was twenty-four hours from home, and she wouldn't have that uncomfortable feeling that her mother was apt to drop in at any time.

Her mother was wonderful, and Emily had no intention of doing anything of which she might disapprove, but college was supposed to foster independence, wasn't it?

Frances Felton didn't think so. Her idea of parenthood was careful supervision until the day when she could commit her daughter, in a state of pristine innocence, to the arms of some fine young man selected by herself. She was plump and pretty and deceptively soft; that type of woman who boasts of not cutting her hair or shortening her skirts because "John won't let me," thereby preserving her own illusion of complete submission.

She expected to rear her daughter in the same illusion; to hand on the torch to a young man of impeccable morals. A decade ago there were a great many women of her type; it is probable that there always will be. And Ardmore was chosen as her daughter's Alma Mater.

The next fall Emily entered Ardmore. She was seventeen, then; slight and dark, with a small, exquisitely chisled face that might one day flame into beauty. Mrs. Felton had selected her wardrobe carefully; excellent garments appropriate for a child of seventeen.

She herself had been married at seventeen, but the fact had escaped her mind, and Emily's clothes, although quite as expensive, were not at all those of a bride.

Edwin Barnes came over the night before she left to say goodby. She had played tennis with Edwin on the Felton court; had gone swimming with him in the Felton pool, but he had never so much as held her hand.

Although he would have enjoyed it very much, Edwin had no idea of holding her hand until he was in a position to ask her to marry him, a fact which had early marked him out as a possible successor to Frances Felton.

He was sober and very reliable. When other young men were drinking heavily and sedulously avoiding the mention of careers, he was quietly finishing up his course at business college and planning to enter his father's wholesale grocery business.

The boys didn't like him a great deal because he cramped their style; not intentionally, but thoroughly. He tried to laugh at their jokes, but it wasn't until everyone else had laughed that he realized they were jokes, and that made him difficult.

With Emily he felt thoroughly at ease, probably because Emily rarely laughed either. She had tried it once or twice with Edwin, but the result was discouraging, and she had relapsed at last into gravity.

They sat in a swing on the terrace, chaperoned by a flood of golden light from the living room window. There was a moon shining, and the air was heavy with the sweetness of a nearby rose garden, but Edwin manfully kept his head and talked about college.

"I understand that Ardmore has the finest swimming pool in the south."

"Yes," said Emily, without enthusiasm. She was watching Edwin's face in the luminous darkness and realizing for the first time that it had a certain delicate beauty. She wished, with a sudden thrill of horror at her own depravity, that he would quit talking about swimming pool and take her in his arms. She had never kissed anyone but her own family, but this sense of closing a door on childhood was doing something to her.

Edwin was watching the small quiet face near his own and longing to do the same thing, but the wholesale grocery business had been very uncertain of late, and the knowledge restrained him.

"Are you going to write to me sometimes?" he asked instead, with a wistfulness that might have betrayed a great deal to one who knew the signs.

Because she sensed that Edwin would never so far forget himself as to kiss a girl until he had proposed to her, and because tonight she was weary of caution, Emily's voice was sharp.

"What's the use? I'll probably be coming home every week-end."

He didn't insist. That was the worst of Edwin: he never insisted. He put forth a request or a suggestion as tentatively as an insect puts forth its feelers, and at the first sign of opposition snatched it quickly back. Emily wondered idly about the grocery business: surely it required more aggressiveness than that.

"And can I see you when you're at home?"

"Of course. You always have"

Edwin was discouraged. He rose slowly from the swing "Well, you'll want to get an early start tomorrow, so I'd better be going."

At the door of his car he turned and took her hand. "I—hope you enjoy it a lot," he said unsteadily.

She saw in his eyes that he wanted to kiss her, and her small face was suddenly alive and vivid. "I'll try."

He leaned swiftly towards her, and Emily's lashes dropped over shining eyes. Then as swiftly he caught himself and stopped. He pressed her hand, hard.

"Goodby," he muttered, and got quickly into the car.

In her own room Emily rested her forehead against the delicately carved bedpost and closed her eyes. "He's like everything else I've ever known," she whispered wearily. "Careful and safe." Her mouth hardened suddenly. "I wonder if all my life is going to be that way?"

Chapter Two

ARDMORE

Ardmore is not far from Elston, Alabama. It is near Birmingham; about two hours' drive, Emily noted, from her own front door. Although she had seen the college before, she was conscious of a vague disappointment as the car bore her and her mother towards main building.

Esthetically, the Ardmore of a decade ago was not very satisfying; it was too prone to ignore the amenities of living for the rigors of learning. There was no architectural unity in the buildings and exchange professors from Trinity or Edinburgh found themselves, to their surprise, quartered in rococo relics of the nineties which the campus, like an enormous amoeba, had absorbed as it grew.

Modernism, except in such courses as were necessary to maintain the school's standing, had not been allowed to rear its head; and its Bible professors taught a doctrine of fire and brimstone while its professors of science conducted discreet experiments with the Mendelian laws of heredity and expounded the Darwinian theory of natural selection.

Smoking went hand in hand with cheating as a capital offense, and automobiles were instruments of the devil for the furtherance of his private ends.

Before committing her child to the college's care Frances Felton had a long interview with the Dean which strengthened her own conviction of the rightness of her choice.

Dr. Markham was a fragile lady of the post-Victorian era who had grown up with the school, and who managed, through the sheer force of her convictions and her unimpeachable gentility, to control five hundred girls without raising her voice.

Freshmen trembled in her presence and were uncomfortably aware of their hands and feet; graduates saw her devotion to her school and her students, and paid her unstinted tribute.

She and Frances liked and respected each other immediately. They saw eye to eye in the matter of training young girls for life. Over a cup of tea in the Dean's immaculate parlor they discussed and settled Emily's future.

"I can't tell you," Frances assured her warmly, "what a comfort it is to know that Emily is in your care."

Dr. Markham smiled. "You are very kind. It is a great comfort to us to have girls like your daughter at the school. They make it what it is."

Frances shook her head. "Not entirely. No matter how fine a girl is, she needs to be directed."

Dr. Markham sipped her scented tea delicately.

"That is true. Our secret lies in directing rather than ruling. We give our girls more liberty than any other school in the South, on the assumption that they are capable of appreciating it. They know our high ideals and strive to live up to them. It has been very successful."

Frances glanced at her watch, rose and extended a plump hand. "I musn't monopolize your time. You have been more than kind."

It would be inaccurate to say that Dr. Markham shook hands. Rather, she allowed her hand to be taken. "I hope you will come and see us often. We like to feel that parents are interested in our efforts."

"Thank you, I shall," Frances assured her.

She went then to the Freshman Dormitory, an outmoded red brick building with rooms large enough to house a modern efficiency apartment and climbed two flights of stairs to her daughter's room.

Emily was arranging books and pictures. Her face was flushed and dirty and her eyes were shining. This, she had begun to realize, was more nearly freedom than anything she had ever known.

"Are you staying for supper?" she asked gaily.

Frances shook her head. "No. I told William to come for me at five and I fancy he's waiting now. You know I never like to leave your father alone for meals."

Jeffrey Felton was always "your father" when Frances spoke of him to Emily. It was as if she disclaimed any relationship with him outside the paternity of her daughter.

"Well, kiss him for me and tell him I'm expecting a visit as soon as he can get away. Dad, I mean; not William."

Frances looked at her thoughtfully. In her day a girl was pale and tearful over the idea of leaving her home. "You will remember, I hope, dear, that we're expecting a good deal of you?"

The brightness faded. "Of course, Mother."

"I'm sure you will." Frances kissed her with real tenderness and went to her waiting car.

Emily's roommate, whose name was Judith Carroll, arrived later in the evening. It was quite typical of Judith, Emily learned afterwards, to arrive everywhere a little later than everyone else. Her tardiness wasn't intentional: it usually resulted from an unwillingness on the part of other people to let her leave the place she happened to be.

She was tall and slender, with cloudy dark hair and ingenuous blue eyes that hid a knowledge of people and things that few individuals ever have the curiosity or the energy to acquire. She flung her hat on one bed, her coat on the other, took in the room at a glance, and held out both hands.

"How doth the little busy bee!" she chuckled.

Emily succumbed at once. Her smile was a reflection of Judith's. "How do you do?"

Judith flung herself full length on the unmade bed. "Oh, beautifully. I always do: it's a family failing."

Later, Emily came to know that, too. Judith's family were all fashioned from the same bright metal. "Is there anything I can do to help you unpack?" she asked a little shyly.

Judith ran a hand through the short, cloudy hair and stretched. "Thanks, no; there's nothing to unpack. I intended to get here in time to rescue my trunk from the maelstrom below, but David made me late, as usual. I'll have to sleep on the mattress, but I've fared worse before this."

Emily familiarizes herself with an entirely new type of person, tomorrow.

The Judge's Corner

By R. W. H. KENNON

VANITY OF VANITIES, ALL IS VANITY.

All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full, —Ecc. 1:7.

Neither is the desire of man filled. We may have riches, health, family ties that are most congenial, and the home comforts that would satiate the most fastidious, yet, in the language of the "Preacher," we are not satisfied. The maw of avarice is never appeased. We are constantly striving for those things we have not. If rich, we strive to increase our wealth. If wise, we strive to gain more wisdom. No, the heart of the material man knows no satisfying. Only to become acquainted with the true living God can there be found contentment and happiness. For spirit and flesh are at enmity.

We are wont to seek material pleasures, but these prove to be only vanity also. For as the "Preacher" admonishes us, "these too, are vanity."

I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasures of kings and of the providences: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as of musical instruments of all sorts. Then I looked on all the works that my hand had wrought, and all the labor that I had laboured to do: and behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.—Ecc. 2: 8, 11.

We are confronted daily with just such instances as is described above. Those who seek after worldly pleasures and rack their brain to devise something new from which they hope to extract amusement and pleasure, yet the heart of man is not satisfied.

From our labors we may amass great treasures in worldly goods, but the more we have the more our heart desires. We get us mansions and live in luxury, but we are constantly seeking larger and better sources to satisfy our desires; we "get men singers and women singers" in the way of securing costly orchestras, private theatricals, racing stables, yachts, high powered cars, but there is no satisfaction in them, for we find these are but "vanity and vexation of spirit."

Consider, if you please, the case of Samuel Insull. His was a miniature empire. His castle would house the population of a city; his grounds filled with the rarest flowers, plants and trees, terraced and cultivated by an army of retainers—in other words, his home was a paradise, yet he found little to satisfy his heart, and his last days must be filled with remorse, for his glory was built upon the life savings of thousands of credulous people who sought to lay aside something for their old age, only to see their savings dissipated in riotous living of the man whom they trusted. Then seeing his end sought refuge in flight, and became a fugitive that his ears might not hear the wail of his victims, and to be hunted down like a criminal.

But why should we strive for those things that perish. Nothing material is real. Substance are those things invisible to the material man, but rather spiritual things. So he that "layeth up treasures on earth" layeth up those things that are fleeting. But he that layeth up treasure in heaven has created a bank account against which there are no hot checks.

We are admonished in the Scriptures to "seek ye first the kingdom of God and all these things will be added unto you." This being true why need we worry over the material things when God is continually giving us more of the temporal as well as the spiritual things than we accept. God's riches are all around and about us. All we have to do is reach out and get them. This we can do if we will but keep his commandments and do his law.

I read a story years ago that I thought one of the best sermons I have ever read, and which illustrates the point above of God's riches being at our command if we would but reach for them in the right way. This sermon had to do with a derelict ship that had been through a severe storm. Its rudder was lost and its masts were broken and gone. For days it drifted just with the current of the sea. The crew was sick and demoralized, the passengers were starving for both food and water. Finally, when hope of rescue seemed gone and all were in despair, a ship was sighted in the distance. The signal of distress was hoisted, and the ship sighted changed its course to go to the rescue of those on the derelict. When within hailing distance of the rescue ship the passengers sent up the cry of "Water, water. For

POLITICS AT RANDOM

By BYRON PRICE (Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington)

There are at least a half-dozen reasons why history is likely to take special note of the 1935 session of congress.

Consider the ambitious proportions of some of the monuments erected in eight months of parliamentary struggle:

The social security program. The wealth taxes. The $4,800,000,000 relief appropriation. The stroke at the utility holding companies. The labor relations act. The prohibition against gold and processing tax recovery suits.

Unlike the temporary buttresses set up by the first Roosevelt congress, most of these monuments are designed to stand for all time. The President and congress have attempted to re-make America, nothing less.

Whether the accomplishments of the session mean the salvation of the country—as some say—or the ruination of the country—as others say—they still remain accomplishments of an extraordinary, perhaps of an epochal, calibre.

Aims of New Laws It is not easy to arrive at an inclusive phrase, which both sides will accept, to describe the general effect of this legislative program as a whole. Examining the measures one by one, however, certain common characteristics stand out.

One group of the new laws tends unquestionably toward greater centralization of power in the federal government. Another group aims frankly at a levelling of the economic structure, under that stronger central government, by taking away from those who have and adding to the security of those who have not.

To the first group belong the relief policy of this congress, and the policy of closing the door to recovery suits which might hamper the government in executing the economic changes it desires.

To the second group belongs the social security program, the wealth taxes, the utility act, and the New Deal for labor relations—which was urged by organized labor as a guarantee of greater security and better living for workers. It would seem beyond dispute that, by and large, congress has been moving toward a social and economic system closely governed by regulatory measures from Washington, and responsive in many ways to what President Roosevelt has called "the very sound public policy of encouraging a wider distribution of wealth."

A Precedent How such a venture turns out will be a matter for history, but it is possible that future generations may be interested in this session for still another reason. Besides passing laws, it set a precedent. Faced with a supreme court decision which struck at the supports of its legislative philosophy, congress went along with a Presidential leadership which advised passage of legislation regardless of doubts as to its constitutionality.

At a moment when even many friends of the administration felt sure AAA would be declared unconstitutional, for instance, a new law was passed enlarging and strengthening AAA. The precedent of bringing about such a situation may stand, in the end, as one of the most conspicuous of the session's monuments.

Advertising is not an expense—its the life blood of any business. Every successful business man is a constant advertiser—that's why he is successful.

9-Cent Cotton Loan

The nine-cent cotton loan plan announced by the department of agriculture last week demonstrates a timely concern on the part of the administration for the foreign markets of the American cotton producer. The nine-cent loan is considerably under the market price for cotton, but it is joined with government assurance that the difference, if any, between the average price of cotton on the ten spot markets from September 1 to January 1 and 12 cents per pound will be made up to the grower. Thus the farmer is assured of 12 cents per pound for his cotton, which, in effect, will mean a subsidy for all cotton that is sold on the foreign market if the price there is below the 12-cent level that is expected to be paid by the domestic market.

The loan and subsidy plan goes the domestic allotment plan, urged so strongly last fall, one better. That plan would allocate to each grower his share of the domestic market on which he would be guaranteed a certain price. Production would be unlimited and the cotton produced above the domestic allotment would be offered on the world market at whatever price it would bring in competition with foreign-grown cotton. Under the loan-subsidy plan, however, the farmer may receive the domestic price on all his cotton up to 12 cents, while still entering his production into the foreign markets to compete with foreign cotton at world market prices.

WHAT happens, then, is that the government subsidizes the farmer and lets him sell his production through the usual market channels instead of buying the cotton outright and dumping it on the world markets itself. The plan seems to have value in that it preserves a free market while at the same time it insures American cotton of a competitive place in the world markets, a place of leadership from which it was rapidly slipping because of the restrictive control of acreage invoked in an effort to bring production down last year in an effort to raise prices.

INROADS of foreign grown cotton into the field offset the benefits expected of the reduced production. The restoration of a foreign market for American cotton is essential to the prosperity of the cotton producers. The administration at Washington is cognizant of this fact, it is evident from the new policy.

Federal Interference

TEXAS dove hunters are vigorously protesting against regulations of the federal government restricting dove shooting in the north Texas zone to one month spread over the period from October 1 to January 15 and confining shooting to between the hours of 7 a. m. and 4 p. m. Texas officials have joined in this protest to the secretary of agriculture and the biological survey, requesting that the federal regulations be made to conform to Texas regulations and pointing out the injustices of the federal rules. Gov. Allred has joined the protest in a telegram to Sec'y Wallace of the department of agriculture and Wm. J. Tucker of the Texas Game, Fish and Oyster commission, has called to the biological survey's attention some pertinent facts of Texas regulation which demonstrate the earnestness of the state authorities and the efficiency of the state measures in conserving the game life of the state.

THE separate and independent regulatory efforts of the state and federal government are both confusing and unnecessary. One set of regulations to conform to the peculiar demands of an area and developed, if need be, by cooperative action, would be the sensible program. The zeal of the federal bureau for the conservation of the wild life of the state is commendable; its ignorance or unconcern for the peculiar conditions that affect Texas is neither commendable nor right. What is the need of two regulatory institutions, operating independently? There is none. Either the federal bureau ought to confine its activities to cooperating with and strengthening state regulation and to reconciling all state regulation into a national program of conservation, or it ought to leave regulation entirely to the states.

THE federal regulation which confines shooting of doves to the period between 7 a. m. and 4 p. m. cuts the average working sportsman out of the privilege of the sport. It is class legislation. At the same time those fortunate enough to hunt during that period cannot enjoy the sport because the time for shooting doves is around sunup and sundown.

TEXAS has placed restrictions upon dove shooting that meet the requirements of conservation with due regard for the peculiar characteristics and conditions that pertain to the state. Moreover, there are millions of acres of game preserves where no shooting is allowed at any time, and these preserves provide a great deal of ground for the breeding of wild bird life without interference from hunters. If the state were not taking care of the situation, there would be some reason for the federal bureau intervening, but even under such a condition the bureau should consult the state and endeavor to cooperate with state authorities.

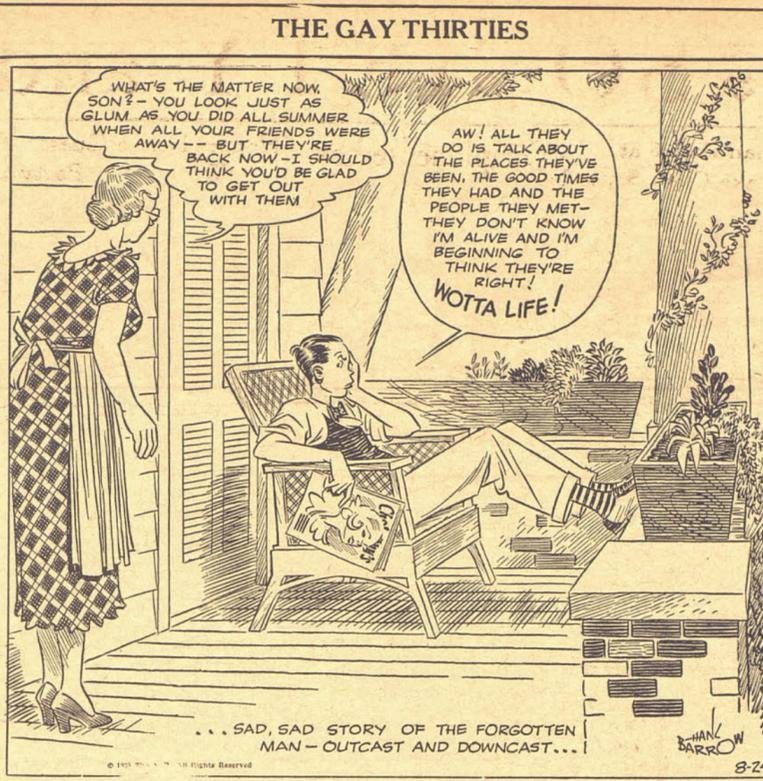

Gas Proration

SERIOUS interference with and, in some instances, complete stoppage of drilling activity is seen in the gas proration order of the Texas Railroad commission. Wells with potentials ranging up to 15 and 20 million feet have been cut to allowables of less than a million feet. The effect of this sort of regulation upon the natural gasoline industry and upon other industries which use large quantities of gas can be easily seen. Their operations must either be cut to a fraction of capacity or supplied with a drilling program that is entirely too costly for the amount of production allowed.

IT is not the theory and it should not be the practice of gas and oil production regulation to destroy industry. Its province is to prevent economic waste. So long as natural gas is being produced and used in legitimate industry, providing commodities and services, it is not being involved in economic waste.

THE needs of every industry which depends upon the production of natural gas ought to be considered as a separate factor in determining allowables. There is no justice in making the small producer the victim of schedules that are promulgated in a blanket form. A producer who uses gas for one purpose presents a different problem from another, and the peculiarities of his needs should be given consideration and allowances made for them in fixing proration schedules. Under the proration system as now invoked the large gas industries, through their nominations, can effectually control the production of gas in the state, with the small producer left to "root hog or die." If the state commission has the interest for the small, independent producer of gas at heart, as avowed recently by Chairman Thompson, it will provide a system of proration to take his needs and rights into consideration.

The terrific waste of natural gas in the panhandle of the state inspired the gas regulatory law. There was little waste of the resources in this part of the state. It would be interesting to know by what process of reasoning the allowable for the west central Texas district has been reduced to such a low point in comparison with the market demand for this gas, considering that the restrictions placed upon gas production have been effective in stopping the panhandle waste.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE COUNTY CLERK Matters in Probate

In re. estate of W. E. McCleskey, deceased. Application to probate the last will and testament of deceased was made by R. L. McCleskey, executor under the will. A rather nice point in law was raised when a protest to admitting the will for probate was filed by Mrs. Eddie Hurt, daughter of the testator to the will, who was joined pro forma by her husband, C. Hurt, whose protest was based on the grounds that the will bequeaths the estate to his wife, Mrs. A. E. McCleskey, and for the reason that the devisee had died several years previous to the demise of the testator, and to probate the will would serve to cloud the property of the estate. To which protest the executor demurred as being insufficient grounds to sustain the protest to prevent the probating of said will. This cause came on for a hearing August 23, 1935, and after proper proof was made of the authenticity of the will, and citation had been issued, it was the order of the court that the will be admitted to probate, and W. F. Creager, Preston Burks and Hall Walker were named as appraisers of the estate. After due notice had been made by posting of the hearing for probating the will, letters testamentary are hereby ordered issued to the said R. L. McCleskey as executor under the said will, after subscribing to the required oath as executor. At

A. D. Whitehead, individually and as next friend of Nick Whitehead, a minor, vs. The Panhandle Refining Co., damages. Lena Fox vs. A. E. Fox, divorce and custody of minor child. C. W. Hoffman vs. A. R. Eppenauer, conversion of pipe and debt.

Judgments and Orders

A. D. Whitehead, et al vs. The Panhandle Refining Co., damages. It appearing to the court that parties hereto had reached a mutual agreement to compromise the differences existing between them, contingent upon the orders of this court, the court hereby orders that the agreement be and is hereby the judgment of the court. It is further ordered by the court that the cost of the suit be taxed against the defendant for which execution may issue. By the terms of the compromise the defendant agrees to pay to the plaintiffs here-in $627, apportioned as follows: $427 to A. D. Whitehead and $200 to Nic! Whitehead.

Other vacationists who have returned home are District Clerk and Mrs. P. L. Crossley, who spent a brief vacation in New Mexico and El Paso. They came in Friday evening.

Human and Other Nature

By W. F. BRUCE

It is worth something to be a good "right hand man." It may be second honor; he may be playing "second fiddle." But oftentimes he is more useful than his chief. Barnabas was a man whose noticeable characteristic was helpfulness. When the early churches were trying out the plan of having all things in common, he promptly sold what he had and turned in the proceeds. He befriended Saul when as a bold enthusiastic young convert he encountered the doubt and suspicion of the Jerusalem church. He was thought of as the most likely counsellor to send down to Antioch when the disciples heard for the first time that Greeks had been included among the recipients of the gospel. He was a good man, is the brief biographical comment of Luke, full

Man About Manhattan
By GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—Dawn in the vegetable belt! Crates of tomatoes, celery, potatoes, onions, cranberries, and cabbages line the sidewalk. An embankment of honeydew melons bulges over the curb. One breaks, and a half a dozen melons roll into the gutter of West street.

Like two kingfishers after a piece of bread two hoodlums crack heads going after them. A swathy Greek in a long white coat dashes out, hurling epithets in his native tongue. He kicks one of the hoodlums in the pants and misses the other with a right uppercut.

"Jabber-jabber-jabber!" bawls a lieutenant of the man in the white coat. He, too, plods out upon the sidewalk. "Jerkyultpot, hythill gy-qawtz," he cries. At least it sounds like that. Then one of them whips a long knife from his belt, but he doesn't cut his companion's throat. He whacks a melon in two and they share it there on the curb, scooping out the seeds with their hands.

Suddenly one of them exclaims something in excited tones. He is instantly gone one better by the other who yells his head off. Meanwhile they continue to cram melon into their mouths.

They fling down the rinds at last and yell even louder. They are standing close. I expect one of them to clout the other any minute but they laugh suddenly and move back into the shed. One of them begins to make blue crayon marks on crates of peaches. The other is leafing through something that looks like an order book.

"Those fellows were fighting mad," I ventured to a truck driver who was standing by. "What was the argument?" "They no mad. They just go to it lak dat any time. But some day they goin' bust one another. The big one say Babe Ruth no longer a great ball player and the odder he no lak dat."

I mosey on down fifty or sixty feet where an Italian is opening his barber shop. He says, "Ha, you early," to a huge roustabout who comes in and deposits a gunny sack on the floor. He is about to climb into the barber's chair but the Italian stays him. "You gimme first," he demands.

"Sure," the roustabout agrees good naturedly. He opens his sack and dumps out a dozen ears of fresh corn. To this he adds a couple of cucumbers and an eggplant. "Good, you like?"

"That is nice," the barber tells him.

Outside trucks of every conceivable size are rumbling into the narrow street. How they back into place is more than I will ever be able to understand. Waiting crews toss crates of greenstuffs into this one, consignments of grapes into that one, oranges and onions into the other. They creek out and disappear into the myriad streets that lead to hotels, restaurants, and homes. There goes your breakfast and maybe mine. Anyway, that's dawn in the vegetable belt.

Victor Gilbert of Austin is visiting relatives in Cisco.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. McClelland and Durward McClelland are spending today in Abilene with friends.

of the Holy Spirit and of faith. These traits allowed him to fit into most any niche when he was needed.

Barnabas was indeed a right-hand man for Paul. From what happened to be a period of marking time at his old home in Tarsus Paul was brought over to Antioch by his friend and set at his missionary work that ended only at his death. It was Barnabas and Saul who carried aid from Antioch to the famine-stricken church at Jerusalem, and who at a later time carried the problem of circumcision over the same route. The abundance of talent in the Antioch church enabled them to spare workers to other fields. Then the Holy Spirit chose Barnabas and Saul. We talk of the missionary journeys of Paul but this first one was as much the missionary journey of Barnabas. At first the older disciple took the lead. It was after the incident with the proconsul in Cyprus that Saul is given the name Paul and begins to be named first in reference to the pair. But over every step of the journey Barnabas goes with him and stands by him.

At the conference on circumcision the disciples "hearkened unto Barnabas and Paul," as if they still remembered Barnabas who had been one of their members in other days as the leader. When Barnabas disappears practically from New Testament history it is as a defender of his sister's son, young Mark, a loyalty that seems justified by Mark's later career which was commended by Paul. The little we know of Barnabas shows him to have been a good stand-by.

Helvey Got Shave and Pitching Job in Same Season

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug 24 (P)—Shaving and professional baseball came into the life of Robert Helvey almost simultaneously.

Helvey, listed in organized circles as the game's youngest player, pitches for the Tallahassee Capitals. He is 15 years old, weighs 195 pounds, stands six feet two inches, and wears size 13 shoes.

He had never shaved or played professional baseball when he came here last spring from Toledo, O., for training with the Nashville club of the Southern Association.

Free Shave!
Soon afterwards, a barber gave him a free demonstration of the art of keeping his beard under control. The Nashville Volunteers gave him a baseball and told him to see what he could do with it.

At the end of the spring training, he was farmed to the Capitals for the newly-formed Class D Georgia-Florida league. The strapping young hurler had pitched in 25 games by mid-August, winning nine and losing nine. He has a hefty delivery and swing, twice winning games by slashing out hits in the last inning.

Back To School
This fall Helvey will take up his studies in a Toledo high school where he left off to play baseball. He is a sophomore with three athletics letters in baseball, basketball and football. His next birthday is September 6.

When the bats start cracking again next spring, Helvey says he may stick to his books instead of going back to the diamond.

Meanwhile, he is trying to save the soles of his shoes while he pitches because one of his greatest difficulties is finding shoes large enough for his feet.

Nothing arouses a professional ballplayer, or any professional athlete for that matter, quite as much as a lusty wallop in the pocket-book.

That $50 fine which Manager Casey Stengen slapped on Stanley Bordagary can be put down as a mighty cheap lesson if it stirs the Dodger outfielder to play the brand of baseball he is equipped to produce. Bordagary has a world of speed and no one knows it better than the stocky little French-Basque.

So confident of his speed was Stanley in a recent game with the Giants that he failed to slide into home plate when hitting the dirt might have added another run to the Brooklyn's team's total and prolonged the rally. Casey Stengel was sure it would have done both. And just to show Bordagary how certain he was he fined the outfielder for lack of spirit.

Stan Takes A Hint
Apparently Bordagary can take a hint, especially when it costs him $50 for he has shown a new dash and spirit in recent games. He hits the dirt on the slightest provocation. His spectacular work in the outfield has saved the Dodger pitchers no end of embarrassment and he has added greatly to his general usefulness by coming through with telling blows at the plate.

There are plenty of regular big leaguers who have not the natural talents of the French-Basque but they get along because the realize their shortcomings and work hard to eliminate them. But Bordagary isn't very keen on such dull subjects as morning workouts to polish up on minor failings. He likes to play ball well enough but prefers to spend his energy only in a real contest.

He has speed to burn, a powerful throwing arm and is no easy mark at the plate. His main weakness is in running the bases. Many times his blinding speed afoot covers up his mistakes on the paths but there are too many instances when his desire to flash his speed gets him into serious trouble.

Only 23!
If he would apply himself seriously to the task of ironing out his faults Stanley would be certain of a long stay in the big show. He is only 23 years old and has plenty of color, something no amount of coaching could give him. If he continues to move along at the pace he is flashing while the memory of the fine still lingers in his mind he won't have any cause to worry about being shipped back to the minors.

A Constant Victim
Marshall fits his feet into the stirrups, takes his full nelson grip, and "goes to town." The full nelson grip is generally taken while on the mat, but Marshall, with the aid of "Sandowstein," has perfected a standing full nelson, pulling his opponent off the floor and shaking him while applying the pressure.

"Training with Sandowstein is no cinch," Marshall says, "but he's a constant effective and uncompromising training partner. His sharp edges and unyielding body make him a tough opponent at times, but at that he's the only man I ever wrestled whom I could always pin when I wanted to."

Since starting to train with the wooden monster, Marshall has developed muscles in his forearms which stand out like biceps. His legs are also benefitted as a result of the pull from the springs leading to the stirrups.

Gadget Helped "Strangler"
Years ago Sandow designed his first wooden gadget. It was a wooden head, constructed in two parts with powerful springs separating them. It was designed to add muscular power to "Strangler"

Rasslin' Robot Trains Champion

'Sandowstein,' Evolved By Billy Sandow, Is Always Subdued By Marshall, However

By FRITZ HOWELL
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

COLUMBUS, O. (P)—And now we have the "wrestling robot!" Billy Sandow, who piloted Ed (Strangler) Lewis to the top of the heavyweight grappling ranks a few years ago, and then repeated a few weeks ago with Everett Marshall of Columbus, is the inventor. The new gadget, a wooden body filled with springs, has been duly christened "Sandowstein," after the renowned "Frankenstein," but Sandow says his creature will be a disciple of good, not of evil.

Marshall, the blond gladiator of the mat who recently shoved Jim Londos off the wrestling peak, is using the "wrestling robot" to perfect his "full nelson" grip—his main stock in trade.

"The legs of 'Sandowstein' are a series of straps, turnbuckles, springs and stirrups, while the upper portion of the body, with movable arms and head, is made of heavy wood filled with strong springs.

Training with Sandowstein is no cinch, Marshall says, "but he's a constant effective and uncompromising training partner. His sharp edges and unyielding body make him a tough opponent at times, but at that he's the only man I ever wrestled whom I could always pin when I wanted to."

Since starting to train with the wooden monster, Marshall has developed muscles in his forearms which stand out like biceps. His legs are also benefitted as a result of the pull from the springs leading to the stirrups.

GAME MONDAY DECIDES SOFT BALL CHAMPS

Championship of the second half of the city soft ball league will hinge Monday night upon the game between the Nance Motor company team and the Community Natural Gas team.

Each of these teams with six victories and two defeats has a standing of .750. The game will be played at 8 o'clock at the Humble lighted field at A and 16th.

John H. Garner's team, victors in the first half of the season, will meet the winner of the Monday night game in a series of three to determine the season champions. The Garner team has been strengthened by the return of Coach Dexter Shelley who has been at Austin attending summer school.

The first of the three-game series will be played Tuesday evening. Others will be played on Friday and the following Monday night.

Eventually south had to lead a losing diamond, which east won. A spade was returned and the defense took a heart, a diamond and three spades to set the contract one. South could not get into the north hand.

North, Mrs. Louise Peavey, made no point about the bidding in the post-mortem, but did reprove south for the way the hand was played.

"All you had to do," she pointed out, "was to cover the queen of spades with the ace, then play the ace, king, queen of clubs, then the ace, king and low heart. West would have to take. The king of spades would be an entry to the north hand and the hearts would be set up.

"The chances are that west in desperation would lead a diamond up to your ace-queen. If he led a spade, the king north would take, two tricks would be won with hearts, the last club would win another trick and then you could make a successful finesse of the diamond queen and play the ace of diamonds for a total of 12 tricks. But by winning the first spade in the north hand you blocked yourself from getting to the north hand later, risking everything on an unnecessary finesse."

Miss Catherine Collins has as her guest this week, Miss Gertrude Allaire of Kilgore.

Planting and Watering

Willy Nilly planted the seeds although Top Notch and the bears helped. Christopher took some too in his beak and spread them along the rows Willy Nilly made.

"Now I'm not doing anything," bleated Sweet Face. "Here! Let me help."

The lamp jumped about with happiness to see the meadow being made for him.

"Watch out, watch out," called Willy Nilly. "You are stepping on the places where we've planted the seeds."

"Dear me, dear lamb me," said Sweet Face. "I'm afraid I'm only getting in the way. I'm so helpless. You are all so kind to me."

"Helpless," thought Christopher. "Is not the word for it. That lamb is clever enough to know if you act helpless everyone else will do your work."

"Now we must water the meadow," said Willy Nilly.

"Oh, I'll attend to that," bleated Sweet Face. "you have all done so much to help me. Now just how much water should I use?"

"I'll show you," said Mrs. Quacko Duck. "I'll get my little watering pot at once."

She waddled back in a short time and began to water the field: "You do it so easily," bleated Sweet Face, the lamb, to Mrs. Duck.

"That's good of you to say so, quack, quack," answered Mrs. Quacko.

Before long the watering was finished.

"Why I wanted to do all that," bleated Sweet Face.

"I'm not so sure," cawed Christopher to himself.

bol of the vengeful hatred of a whole class. In the stage version of Dickens' story she is omitted entirely, but in the picture they have made her a powerful symbol."

WOULD LIKE MORE

Miss Yurka is frank in admitting that she will be interested in further film opportunities. She would like to be Nancy Sykes in the projected "Oliver Twist"—in fact, she would enjoy a film career alternating with stage appearances.

"Undoubtedly I shall be heartily hated as Madame De Farge," she says. "As Nancy Sykes, I hope, I should be pitied as well as scorned. And perhaps after that I could do a character that might even be loved."

Miss Yurka, tall and regal and blonde, is American by birth and Czech-Slovakian by descent. Her most successful box-office play was "The Squall", but she boasts a great many successes—and failures—in more artistic plays. Her especial favorite among dramatics is, of course, Ibsen, and "The Wild Duck" her favorite play. She is planning to present it to Los Angeles theatergoers soon.

Talks to Parents

GRUDGING GIFT

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH

The Smiths were not well off and rearing two children was a good deal of a strain on their resources. They managed, however, to put them both through high school, and felt that their duty as parents was done.

When their older son decided that he would like to go further and take a college degree they objected. They had pinched and saved long enough, and felt that the children should now take on the burden of their own support. When the boy insisted that he needed further training to do the work he had chosen his father replied, "I had to get along without college and see no need for you to go." It never occurred to him that had he been more adequately trained he might have gone farther and not in middle life have been facing the consciousness of failure.

Such behavior is unworthy of a father. If Mr. Smith had the money, he should have made no conditions when he used it for the boy's training. As soon as he put the matter on a cold and impersonal business basis, he wiped out the father-son relationship and made a division between his son and himself. The boy started life under a handicap or debt aggravated by his father's threats. He felt no obligation to repay, no affection and gratitude toward his parents.

Parents are not obliged to give their children higher education. But the fact that they themselves had no such advantages is no reason for denying it to their children, nor is a grudging gift or a threatening loan of any value.

Tarzan

by EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

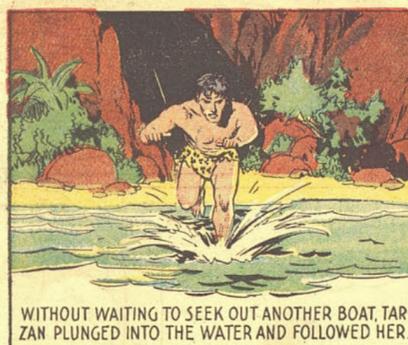

AT TARZAN'S FIRM DEMAND, THORIK EXPLAINED THE WAY TO THE LAND OF CANNIBALS, WHITHER SIGREDA HAD FLED.

"I SHALL GO WITH YOU," THORIK PLEADED; BUT TARZAN SHOOK HIS HEAD. "I TRAVEL MORE QUICKLY ALONE."

SWIFTLY HE TOOK UP THE TRAIL AND CAME TO THE INLAND SEA, WHERE HE SAW SIGREDA, FAR AHEAD, IN A SMALL BOAT.

WITHOUT WAITING TO SEEK OUT ANOTHER BOAT, TARZAN PLUNGED INTO THE WATER AND FOLLOWED HER.

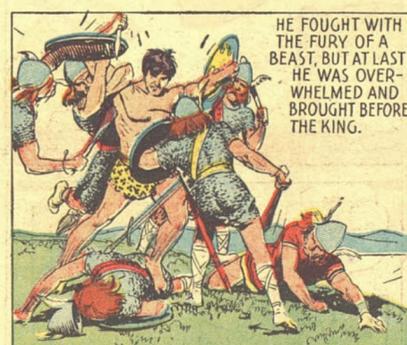

THE DISTRAUGHT MAIDEN LANDED ON THE SHORES OF THALGAARD, WHERE HER FATHER RUVALD RULED AS KING.

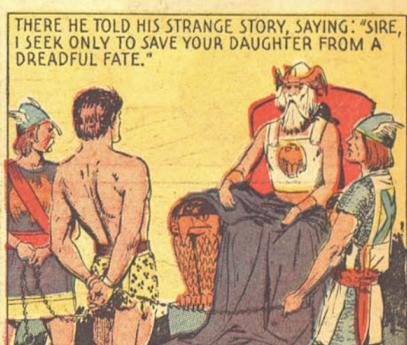

STEALTHILY SHE TRAVERSED THE TOWN, SLIPPED PAST THE FRONTIER GUARD, AND VANISHED INTO THE DARK JUNGLE!

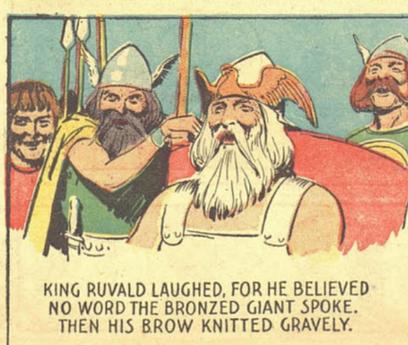

IN THE HASTE OF PURSUIT, TARZAN IGNORED HIS CUSTOMARY CAUTION AND RAN AFOUL OF A THALGAARD PATROL!

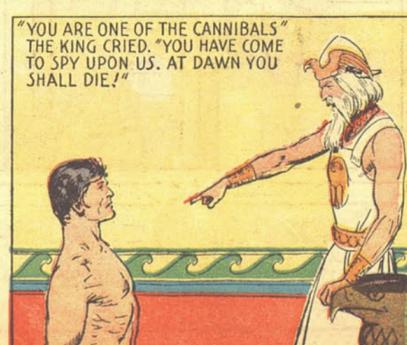

HE FOUGHT WITH THE FURY OF A BEAST, BUT AT LAST HE WAS OVERWHELMED AND BROUGHT BEFORE THE KING.

THERE HE TOLD HIS STRANGE STORY, SAYING: "SIRE, I SEEK ONLY TO SAVE YOUR DAUGHTER FROM A DREADFUL FATE."

KING RUVALD LAUGHED, FOR HE BELIEVED NO WORD THE BRONZED GIANT SPOKE. THEN HIS BROW KNITTED GRAVELY.

"YOU ARE ONE OF THE CANNIBALS" THE KING CRIED. "YOU HAVE COME TO SPY UPON US. AT DAWN YOU SHALL DIE!"

TARZAN KNEW THEN THAT THE KING HAD PRONOUNCED DOOM NOT ONLY UPON HIM, BUT UPON SIGREDA, HIS OWN DAUGHTER!

WHAT'S THE IDEA OF GIVING THE BABY A QUARTER TO PLAY WITH CHRIS? DON'T YOU KNOW MONEY HAS GERMS ON IT?

HE'S A PEST!

THE MAN NEXT DOOR WANTS TO SHOW ME HIS TROPHIES. HE DOES A LOT OF HUNTING AND HAS EVERYTHING STUFFED!

EVERYTHING HE SHOOTS HE HAS STUFFED AND MOUNTED! HE EVEN HAS A LITTLE SQUIRREL AMONG HIS TROPHIES!

I SHOT HIM WHILE HE WAS ASLEEP. HE'D HAVE GIVEN ME A TERRIFIC BATTLE IF HE'D BEEN AWAKE! IT COST ME $15 TO HAVE HIM STUFFED!

DON'T FOOL YOURSELF, A GERM COULDN'T LIVE ON MY SALARY!

I GET MY GREATEST PLEASURES FROM HUNTING I'VE KILLED THINGS ON EVERY CONTINENT! TAKE THIS PORCUPINE, FOR INSTANCE!

NO, YOU TAKE IT!

I SHOT HIM WHILE HE WAS ASLEEP. HE'D HAVE GIVEN ME A TERRIFIC BATTLE IF HE'D BEEN AWAKE! IT COST ME $15 TO HAVE HIM STUFFED!

AND THIS BOAR WAS PLENTY TOUGH! I SAW SOMETHING MOVING IN THE BUSHES AND FIRED. WHEN I APPROACHED THE SPOT I STUMBLED OVER HIS DEAD BODY!

HE HAD A SLUG IN HIS HEAD FROM THIS GUN! I RAISED IT CAREFULLY WHEN I SAW HIM AND ---

WHAT DID HE DIE OF?

HE HAD A SLUG IN HIS HEAD FROM THIS GUN! I RAISED IT CAREFULLY WHEN I SAW HIM AND ---

WHAT DID HE DIE OF?

BANG

GEE, I DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS LOADED! THERE'S THE PHONE - WILL YOU ANSWER IT?

R-R-R

IT'S MY SISTER! SHE SAYS THAT BULLET TORE THROUGH THE SIDE OF OUR HOUSE!

HA-HA - THAT'S A GOOD JOKE!

SHE SAYS DARNED RIGHT YOU DID --- THAT BULLET RAISED CAIN WITH OUR BEST MATTRESS!

ASK HER IF I HIT ANYTHING THAT I CAN HAVE STUFFED!

ASK HER IF I HIT ANYTHING THAT I CAN HAVE STUFFED!

ENOUGH TER JOLLY WELL PUT US ON HEAVY STREET!

ENOUGH TER JOLLY WELL PUT US ON HEAVY STREET!

I KNEWED OLD PLUSHBOTTOM KEPT PLENTY O' JACK IN THE HOUSE, BUT I DIDN'T EXPECT NO SUCH A HAUL, TOBY!

YOU SAID IT, PROFESSOR - THE HAUL YOU'RE GOING TO GET IS TO HEADQUARTERS! YOUR PAL, TOBY, IS ALREADY TAKEN CARE OF! YOU SEE I OVERHEARD YOUR PLANS TO DRY AT YOUR HANG-OUT!

OKAY HAWKSHAW - THE PATROL IS HERE!

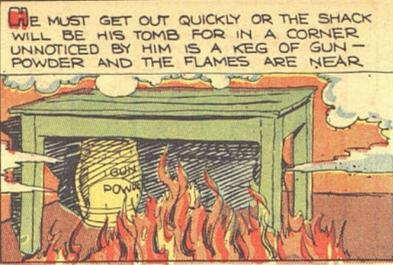

Broncho Bill by Harry O'Neill

WHILE RAWLINS HURRIES BACK TO THE MASKED RIDERS' CAMP TO REMOVE HIS YOUNG CAPTIVE, BILL IS HAVING A NARROW ESCAPE IN THE BURNING PRISON SHACK.

HIS ONLY THOUGHT FOR THE MOMENT IN THE SMOKE-FILLED HUT IS FOR A BREATH OF FRESH AIR BUT—

HE MUST GET OUT QUICKLY OR THE SHACK WILL BE HIS TOMB FOR IN A CORNER UNNOTICED BY HIM IS A KEG OF GUN-POWDER AND THE FLAMES ARE NEAR.

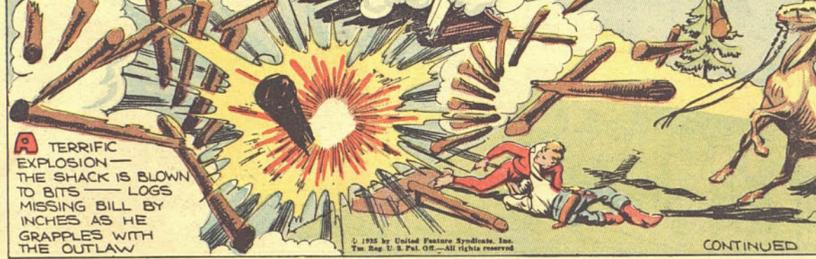

MEANWHILE A LONE GUARD OF RAWLINS' STOLEN CATTLE HAS SEEN THE FIRE.

BUT BILL HEARS HIS APPROACH AND STILL IGNORANT OF THE GREATER DANGER CLIMBS TO THE ROOF OF THE BURNING CABIN.

DOWN UPON THE GUARD'S BACK HE LEAPS BENT ON GETTING POSSESSION OF THE MAN'S GUN— BUT THAT INSTANT—

A TERRIFIC EXPLOSION— THE SHACK IS BLOWN TO BITS— LOGS MISSING BILL BY INCHES AS HE GRAPPLES WITH THE OUTLAW.

BUMPS

SPIKE, JUMP OFF THAT STEP LADDER ONTO THIS TEETER BOARD AND I'LL SHOW YOU HOW I TURNED SOMERSAULTS IN THE CIRCUS. OKAY!

BUMPS I'LL BE NEEDING YOU TO HELP SHINGLE THE ROOF TODAY.

BRING UP THE BUNDLES OF SHINGLES WHEN I CALL FOR 'EM. HOLY SMOKES! I WAS JUST PRACTISIN' MY ACROBATICS!

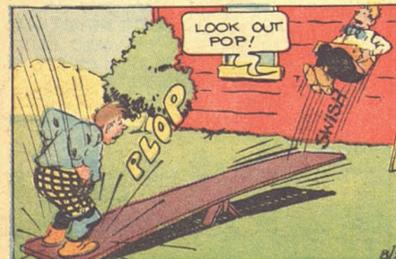

I'M READY NOW! GEE! DO I HAVE TO CLIMB AWAY UP THAT LADDER WITH EACH BUNDLE?

STOP ARGUING AND HURRY! CERTAINLY YOU MUST CLIMB THE LADDER YOU CAN'T FLY— CAN YOU?

FATS YOU JUMP TO THE TEETER BOARD FROM THE FIRST LIMB OF THE TREE. HERE ARE SOME SHINGLES BUMPS!

LOOK OUT POP! POP!

COMIN' UP!

HERE'S THE FIRST BUNDLE!

Joe Links

JOE'S GOLFING REPUTATION HAS GONE SO HIGH THAT HE'D HAVE TO BE BORN QUIN-TUPLETS TO ACCEPT ALL THE OFFERS FOR PERSONAL APPEARANCES THAT ARE FLOWING IN.

MORE JOE!

"WORLD'S GREATEST GOLFER," OR NOT, YOU CERTAINLY SHOULD BE ABLE TO STAY HOME ONE DAY IN THE WEEK!

BLANCHE YOU KNOW BELONG TO MY PUBLIC.

WHAT DO WE DO TODAY, J. WELLINGTON BUNK?

WE'RE GOING TO THE ULTRA-EXCLUSIVE WOWSER WOMEN'S CLUB— IT'S THE FIRST TIME A MAN'S EVER BEEN ALLOWED IN THERE!

NOW YOU TAKE THE CLUB LIKE THIS.

OH MR. JINKS, YOU'RE SO SMART.

IT GIVES ME THE GREATEST PLEASURE TO PRESENT YOU WITH THIS CUP, MISS PEACHY.

OH THANK YOU, MISTER JINKS.

ONE AT A TIME, GIRLS—I WON'T SKIP ANY OF YOU!

ALL THOSE SWELL GIRLS AROUND AND US THE ONLY GUYS THERE— WHAT A BREAK?

YEAH, AND WHAT A SCOP?

I HAD A NEWSREEL CAMERAMAN IN A TREE JUST OUTSIDE THE GROUNDS AND HE GOT PICTURES OF THE WHOLE THING... THE FIRST ONES EVER TAKEN!

BLANCHE!

BLANCHE, YOU'VE BEEN LOOKING KIND OF PALE LATELY. I THINK YOU OUGHT TO TAKE A MONTH'S VACATION AWAY FROM ALL THESE BRIDGE PARTIES, TEAS, AND MOVIES!

WHY JOE!

WHY JOE!

DIVOT DIGGERS

FRIENDS, ROMANS AND GOLFERS, MEET HENRY HAZARD, GOLF INSTRUCTOR TO HIS MAJESTY, KING BOZO OF BOZONIA!

HOORAY! LIVE LONG HENRY HAZARD!

COME CLEAN, BILL WHAT'S THE BIG JOKE?

JOKE NOTHIN'! HERE'S HIS CONTRACT AND LOOSE CHANGE IN ADVANCE!

10,000 BUCKS!

BUT HENRY, YOU MAY BE A WIZARD, BUT NOT AS A GOLFER!

SHOW YOUR STUFF!

WITH YOUR KIND ATTENTION I WILL ENDEAVOR TO SOCK THE BALL FROM TREE TO TREE, TO ROCK TO CUP! AT LEAST, I'LL TRY.

POOR HENRY!

PLAIN CLUCKO!

JUST FOLLOW TH' DOTTED LINE!
