THE POPULAR NEWSPAPER.

There has just been received with the compliments of its publisher, William T. Dewart, a copy of the 100th anniversary edition of the New York Sun, the journal which Charles A. Dana took with him to fame and which is credited with having been the first successful popular priced newspaper in the United States. Prior to the foundation of the Sun in 1833—the first issue appeared September 3, 1833, to be specific—newspapers were a luxury, beyond the economic reach of the common man.

Because we are such a nation as we are today is mainly due to the fact that the popular newspaper, developed over the past 100 years, has given the average citizen an enlightened opinion. That is not sum of the contribution of journalism to the world that has developed about us, but it is the most important contribution. American newspapers have played a vital role in the shaping of American institutions by giving the principle of free speech and enlightened public opinion an effective and immediate application.

GIVING COMMUNISM A MARTYR.

A member of the communist party, arrested and confined in Fort Worth jail on a minor charge, was unfortunate enough to sustain a fractured skull under circumstances that required explanation, and died. Had the prisoner been of another and more popular political faith the incident would have been confined to the attention of the delegated authorities with scant interest among the reading public. As the case is, "capitalism" is constrained to bestir itself vigorously with regrets and excuses for having permitted the little tin god of circumstance to provide a smoldering cause with a martyr under its collective nose.

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

I am going to show my colors today and be publicly partial on the topic of football. The reason is that yesterday I opened these columns to a fledgling newspaperman from down Austin way who was camp cast an insinuation at the Ponies. It was a mighty good article down to that point but his selection of the adjective "lucky" to describe the Ponies' 1931 defeat of the Steers was unfortunate.

Of course Dick knows better than that. But he is in the position of the Jew who is to keep German. As sports editor of the Daily Texan heavy, heavy hangs over his head unless he can keep the boys and girls thinking that the Steers would be the eighth wonder of the world but for the hard luck that seems to always be camping on their trail.

Everybody knows that the Steers were darn lucky to get their hands on the ball that day. As a matter of fact, Mr. Morrison was compelled to run in his understudy boys so the visiting lads could score as a dictate of courtesy.

Now and again those Ponies get cocky over making some national sensation and lose their shirts in their own back yard. But you can always count on them to give the ears-tomers a thrill. Last year their ears were whipped down a plenty, but it will do them a world of good. Perhaps it will bring them back to their senses. When a team gets so cocky and smart sleek that it thinks it can coast along on its reputation and wear silk togs for playing gear it is time for an inventory. If that gang of Ponies doesn't get down to business this year I hope they are licked by every sand lot outfit they meet.

But, one thing is a fact. The Ponies are the only team the South-western conference can risk with its reputation away from home. When those boys go travelling they start something. You can tell what the rest of the loop thinks about them by the fact that whenever Texas, or T. C. U. or Baylor, etc., wallops them the date is put down on the calendar as an institutional holiday for the next generation. Every time some Texas writer writes about the Steers prospects he's certain to digress about three paragraphs and ring in the 27 to 7 licking that the bovines handed the Mustangs several years ago. That's the biggest day on the Texas campus—the anniversary of that victory, I mean. But let some of the other teams take a walloping and the fact isn't remembered by anybody except the teams and the statisticians who are trying to figure out who won the flag.

Why, up north they rate South-western teams by how they stack up with the Ponies. The Ponies are the measuring rod. The Frogies have a good rating because they've been fortunate enough to meet the Ponies in the mud two years out of the last three and the Ponies haven't beaten them in that time. That's the way the sports writers estimated them when there was talk of an inter-sectional game for the Ponies.

One thing I'll admit, though. The Ponies were lucky to come off with as light a licking by the Frogies last year as they did. Those Fort Worth boys were a real football team as power teams go.

Back in the primitive days of the daily newspaper, when all the pro-perty required of an editor was a celluloid collar and a nitric acid vocabulary, and issues were settled more frequently with horse pistols than anything else, there wasn't any such thing as libel. So I gather from examining a facsimile of the first edition of the New York Sun, the newspaper that Charles A. Dana made famous. The facsimile was published with a mammoth 1933 edition to celebrate the 100th birthday anniversary of the paper.

In those days the editor said what

The Eagle's Brood

Courtesy Philadelphia Public Ledger

he pleased and let the journalistic chips fall where they would. And there were "chips". The figurative phrase meant something.

Suppose today a newspaper should print this story as a news item: "SHOCKING MURDER—A most outrageous and cold-blooded murder was perpetrated in Columbus, O., on the 15th of August last, by Col. John Milton. As Major Joseph T. Camp, a distinguished citizen of that place, was passing the store of General Howard, Col. Milton stepped to the door with a double-barrelled gun and fired one charge, and four shots entered the region of his heart, he fell without a word, resting on his hip and elbow, and in that position the cowardly assassin, etc."

They didn't use circumlocution to surround a libelous issue. Consider the following extracts from the "Police Office" news column of the 1833 edition:

"Harriet Shultz, charged with committing a violent assault on the person of Henry Shultz, one of her husbands (My own comment: Notice the "one of"). Was polyandry permitted in those days?), who appeared against her as complainant... he stated that his wife was generally pretty clever to him, but by some means or other she was more ill-natured than usual last night, and took occasion to give him something of a flogging—the food on the desk when his wife made the attack, but finding himself unable to cope with her in the matrimonial combat, he bawled "murder", which brought a watchman to his assistance. The injured husband, with the assistance of the watchman, succeeded in capturing his tyrannical rib, and brought her a prisoner, to the watch-house. On their promising to live together peacefully for the future, they were discharged."

Evidently 1833 had its Maggies and its Jiggies, too. Another: "John McMan brought up for whipping Juda McMan, his darling wife—his excuse was, that his head was rather thick, in consequence of taking a wee drop of whiskey. Not being able to find bail he was accommodated with a room in bride-well."

Here is a prize item: "Wm. Scott, from Centre Market, brought up for assaulting Charlotte Gray, a young woman with whom he lived. The magistrate, learning that they never were married, offered the prisoner a discharge on condition that he would marry the injured girl, who was very willing to withdraw the complaint on such terms. Mr. Scott cast a sheep's eye toward the girl, and then looking up at the window, gave the bride-well a melancholy survey; he then gave the girl another look, and was hesitating as to which he should choose—a wife or a prison. The Justice insisted on an immediate answer. At length he consented that he "might as well marry the critter," and they left the office apparently satisfied."
