BONDHOLDER GROUP COMING TUESDAY

Man to Direct Trades Day Movement Due to Be Chosen

APPLICANTS TO BE HEARD AT 4 O'CLOCK

The central committee in charge of arrangements for Cisco's projected Trades Day campaign announced this morning that in all probability a man for the promotion of the project would be employed at 4 o'clock this evening. At that time the committee will meet to consider several applications for the post which have been made in person.

Applicants have been interviewing the five members of the committee during the day. The committee consists of H. S. Drumwright, W. K. Johnston, W. H. LaRoque, Nick Miller and W. J. Leach.

If a promoter is employed this afternoon he will begin work upon the campaign tomorrow morning.

The first Trades Day will be held Saturday with similar programs on successive Saturdays. Entertainment, free to the world, will be presented from 7 o'clock to 8 o'clock each Trades Day evening and wide and intensive publicity will be given to each event so as to draw the largest possible attendance.

The merchants in their meeting Thursday, when the program was initiated, were more enthusiastic than they have been at any similar affair in several years and adopted the program with an evident determination to put the movement over in the biggest possible way.

It was pointed out that other towns in the vicinity of Cisco had gotten the jump on local merchants and boosters and were already taking away from Cisco sections of its rightful trade territory.

To offset this condition the merchants adopted plans for employing a specialist in the promotion of such movements, underwrite his salary expenses of the movement and named a central committee instructed to work with the promoter and to insist upon a program of entertainment that will be novel and attractive.

The committee immediately set plans on foot for the employment of the proper man, and by Tuesday morning Cisco will have its Trades Day program definitely under way.

Five Negroes Held As Attack Suspects

FORT WORTH, Sept. 14.—Police today held five negroes for questioning in connection with the murder of Ted Nureff, 30, and the attack on his fiancée Miss Vera Smith, last Wednesday night at Wichita Falls. More than 100 negroes have been arrested as suspects in the case.

Threatened Prison Riot Is Quelled

JOLIET, Ill., Sept. 14.—A threatened riot at Statesville prison was quelled by guards, it was reported today, after two of them were beaten by six rebellious convicts.

THREE HURT IN ACCIDENT MAY SURVIVE

Three of four members of a Stephenville family are expected to recover from injuries which Saturday evening proved fatal to one woman when the car in which they were riding overturned on Highway 23, twelve miles north of Cisco.

The four people were en route to Albany when the touring car in which they were riding either blew a front tire or struck a small pile of chat, distributed along the highway in readiness for paving work, and plunged into the ditch. The four were Mr. and Mrs. H. M. McIlroy and their two daughters, Altha, 20, and Marian, 17. The accident occurred at 7:30 Saturday night.

Mrs. McIlroy, 53, succumbed to a crushed skull, crushed shoulder and internal injuries at 3:30 a. m. Sunday. She had been virtually scalped when the car overturned on the coarse stone laid for paving. Altha, the older daughter, and her sister, Marian, are suffering from fractured skulls. Altha, in addition to this injury, sustained a fractured shoulder, numerous lesser soft tissue injuries and bruises and abrasions of the body and limbs. Marian suffers from a dislocated fracture of the left wrist, a puncture behind the left shoulder, innumerable bruises and lacerations.

Eardrums of both girls were ruptured. The father, of the girls sustained scalp and facial lacerations and numerous bruises and cuts over the body. He was the least hurt of the four.

The injured recovered consciousness during the night after they were brought to Cisco and reacted well to treatment, attending physicians said. Hope for recovery of all three was expressed.

The four were en route from Stephenville to Albany where it was reported the elder girl, Altha, was to join the faculty of the Albany high school as instructor in art. Another daughter and son-in-law of Mr. McIlroy live at Albany.

The accident was first discovered by Charlie McClelland near whose home it occurred. L. E. DePew, employee of the Lone Star Gas company, drove back to his plant a mile and a half from the scene of the wreck to summon an ambulance from Cisco. The injured reached the hospital here shortly before 9 o'clock where medical aid was administered. Mr. DePew had applied first aid treatment while waiting arrival of the ambulance.

DAILY BIBLE THOUGHT

STEADFAST STANDING:—O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard; Which holdeth our soul in life, and suffereth not our feet to be moved.—Psalms 66: 8, 9.

LANDOWNERS VICTIMIZED.

The capitol has been assured its periodic "startler" in astounding disclosures dealing with the fate of several hundred East Texas landowners in the fabulous oil field that took military control to curb it.

Before the legislature is over, the people of Texas have been promised one of the most surprising accounts of the wholesale exploitation of a whole group of people.

The landowners, many of them simple country folk who knew nothing of the grief of troubles of riches, nothing of the devious ways of business and speculation, have not only failed to make advantageous leases, but in scores of cases have failed to collect any part of the money due them as royalties, it has been officially ascertained.

The whole disclosure will break during this season, it has been indicated.

Testimony has been put on record. The name of shoe-string operators, fly-by-night oil manipulators and speculators, oil producers in legitimate and semi-legitimate operation, some of them of considerable size; have been listed. Many of these operators have kept the books for the landowners. Some have produced and sold the oil, pocketed royalties with the rest and made away with the money, so that the ignorant East Texas landowner, thrilled by the belief that he is wealthy and will get uncounted riches, actually will find that he has given away his oil, and that the people who got the benefit of it have put their money beyond reach of his lawful claim.

It is said that in no other field in Texas has the exploitation of the settlers been so widespread or so complete. Hundreds of individuals who, according to normal business would be entitled to sums aggregating hundreds of thousands of dollars still are waiting for their first nickel's royalties, and stand a good prospect of getting nothing at all, it has been said.

Because of the wholesale nature of the exploitation, it has been said the state may step in to take charge and adjudicate the claims of a whole class of its citizenship.

The state is interested, in that it collects 2 per cent oil royalties on the production. It has records of the production, as claimed by the operators and as checked by its own officials. In this way, it has the basic record on which the landowners' claims may be computed.

The shutdown under martial law, and the presence of the troops, welcomed by the citizenship of East Texas, gave the landowner a chance to come out of the dizzy dream of riches, and to find out in what cases he has been denied his due.

State action to settle the claims, or otherwise to take possession of the properties for future operation on behalf both the state and the landowner's interest has been hinted as a possibility.

For the operator who has failed to keep faith with the man whose property he has exploited, such a promise means a day of accounting and a scramble to meet the long-past-due claims against the properties for unpaid royalties.

Disclosure of the situation is not new. Many complaints have been made to Governor Ross S. Sterling in individual cases. While the individual case is one for adjudication as a civil action, a wholesale policy of doing the owners out of their rightful share of the new wealth may be taken up as a challenge of the power of the state to protect its people.

CAN THE LAW MAKE A MAN'S RELIGION?

Mustapha Kemal gradually is junking the customs and century old traditions of the Turks for the modern civilization of the Western world. First he unveiled Turkey's women; he introduced the modern dance; he substituted the dress suit and the high topped hat for the ancient Turkish garb and the fez; then he widened his program to take in other reforms.

His name was in the headlines and his picture on front pages. This week Mustapha made the news again with his reforms. This time he took a broader step. The Moslem clergy owned a vast part of the country's wealth; it held full sway over the minds of the nation's youth and no other primary schools existed. Kemal snapped its control of the state, the army and the masses with his reforms.

He hasn't won the battle. The economic woes of the masses are hindering the plan and keeping the Mosques full of the faithful seeking consolation. To this powerful and rich energy the Moslem Turks always have made bequests.

Will Kemal be able to break this tradition as he has the other ancient customs, or will the people have to come to religious reformation themselves as did the Western world in years back? Truly Mustapha took a big bite this time.

REED'S TAX ON SALES.

David A. Reed, republican senator from Pennsylvania, is advocating a one per cent tax of all commodities to help meet the nation's deficit.

Reed is a member of the senate finance committee, and close to Andy Mellon and President Hoover. He thinks this tax would go a long way toward eliminating the $900,000,000 treasury deficit of last year and the anticipated $1,300,000,000 one of this year.

From the other end of the capitol Representative Isaac Sacharach of New Jersey proposed a drastic tax revision program, echoing the Reed proposal with sales levies confined to luxuries and non-essentials. Doubtless there'll be other echoes, wails and moans over the question and congress will be stirred to a merry muddle.

Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt says there are too many calls on the tax-payer already and too many way-stations in government at which to pay. It resembles the feudal days when a man had to pay a tax every time he crossed another's land until by the time he got to market he had nothing to sell. Governor Roosevelt would slice off many of the way-stations.

Year after year more taxes have been added along the route from the county to the federal government but still there remains the increasing deficit. Why not change the order and take a fling at Mr. Roosevelt's plan?

OTHER OPINIONS

"QUITTER BELLYACHING"

We have made a solemn resolution to quit lamenting the "repression," the hard times, and the status of the cotton industry, for several reasons, and the first reason is because it has not, and is not going to help the situation one bit. We have all talked about our troubles, and we do admit that conditions are not like we would like to have them, but we do not admit, after really considering everything, that they are as bad as most of us picture them.

We have all talked about hard times until we think they are worse than they really are. We do not believe that talking good times makes times better, but we do believe that talking hard times makes folks think more about them than is good for them. And right here let us say something else — how many of us ever remember folks talking about "good times" except for a year or so after the war, when everything was above normal? All of us have heard the desire expressed that the country could get "back to normal," when as a matter of fact the situation which we now discuss is really the one caused by the process of returning to normalcy.

The second reason that we have decided to quit "bellyaching" is because, in looking about, we can find so many more things for which we should be thankful and appreciative, than we can lament. We acknowledge the low price of cotton and the world's unemployment, but let us think of our own condition in Honey Grove and Honey Grove territory. We have a larger cotton crop than for several years. It's a fact that the price is low, and that wages for gathering it are low, but has not the crop been made cheaper than for some years? We are told by a local business man, who has kept his finger on the pulse of conditions, that it is his honest opinion that the crop this year will pay the greater part of the debts incurred this year and in the words of Amos and Andy, "that's sumthin'," and means more than most of us think it does. Back debts are of course a source of worry, but we must remember that "normal times," as we have all hoped for, are not times that pay past accumulated debts. There has been less borrowed money, fewer charge accounts and fewer unnecessary expenditures this year than in the past decade or more. We have all lived—economically, to be sure but stringent times can be forgotten when debts are paid as a result of those trying months.

And these things are not the only ones which are proof that this section is much better off than it has been for years. The largest feed crop in years has been produced, and is still in the hands of the farmers, who can make better use of it during the coming winter and spring than had they been able to sell it when harvested. Every barn is filled with oats, and the fields are loaded with corn and row crops waiting to be harvested. The hay crop was fine, and nine out of every ten producers have sufficient feed to run them until another crop is made. When has such a condition existed here before? And another thing — one of the greatest blessings this country has this year is the unusually large amount of home canned and preserved foods that have been put up for winter use. Every family has without a doubt this year canned more vegetables, fruits, meats, etc., than ever before, and every pantry is loaded to capacity with wholesome canned products, and many of those living on the farm as well as in town will be able to live high this winter by purchasing only such necessities as flour, sugar, salt and coffee. This one condition alone places the country in better shape than ever before, and it should not be overlooked when we are complaining about "hard times." When we are prone to lament conditions that exist in our nation, why not in our mind's eye see the really staggering conditions that exist in China and Russia. Reports tell us that there are literally millions starving to death in China for lack of sustenance, not especially because of the lack of finances to buy it, but because that nation does and cannot raise sufficient to feed its population. They have no food, they have no clothing, and living conditions are hundreds of times worse than in the pauper sections of our larger cities. Think of these things and then think of what we have, and let all of us quit complaining. While we do not attempt to try to make ourselves believe that everything is rosy in our nation, just remember that there are many things that could be worse than the low price of cotton, when we really consider the other blessings that we have this year.

Food prices are down, clothing prices are down, and many other living necessities are reduced in price. And with these reductions as accepted facts, why should not wages be down, as well as the products we have to sell. The "good times," as we speak of the months immediately following the war, the like of which was never experienced before in this nation, were not normal times, and this period of high prices has resulted in the condition from which we believe we are now emerging. Why spend our time fussing and fuming over conditions when we apparently have more than we have had for years? Why take on the attitude of bolshevism when we have no reason for so doing? Why get out on the streets and tell sordid tales of hard times when as a matter of fact the period of depression has opened our eyes to the possibilities of living at home, raising sufficient feed crops, and has awakened within us the desire to prepare for the coming winter? Let's quit "bellyaching" about what we haven't got and give thanks for the many blessings which we do have this fall. —Honey Grove Signal.

TEXAS TOPICS

By THE POLITICAL ANALYST
AUSTIN, Sept. 14.—Faces about the legislative cotton session don't all remind you of farmers.

There's many a banker 'twixt the hall and the gallery.
And lawyers galore . . . There's W. D. Cope, former lawmaker from Childress and ex-adjutant general . . . Capt. J. H. "Dad" Walsh of the Southern Pacific. He's grown more miles of railroads than bales of cotton . . . W. P. H. McFaddin, the Jesse Jones of Jefferson county, who is a farmer, banker, ranchman, miller and capitalist.

Homer Wade, executive secretary for a commercial organization in Dallas where railroads cluster . . . A. A. Allison, Corsicana, a real farmer who lives in a $15,000 city home . . . Thomas B. Love, Dallas lawyer, who never picked cotton, but has plucked the wings of many a rival politician; Former Senator W. R. Thomas of Bell county . . . he's author of the state electrocution law, though this may not be appropriate to the present situation; another rotunda visitor is W. T. Wheeler, executive secretary of a highway club . . . was it he who wanted to know what the railroads think, after a bill was passed to keep trucks from hauling cotton (and there isn't going to be any cotton)?

Former Representative R. M. Johnson of Anderson county. There are three other Representatives Johnson now.

Former Governor James E. Ferguson is about the capitol of course. He is a farmer . . . He is . . . And there also was Stuart R. Smith, Beaumont, one of the ablest lawyers on Southwest Texas.

And more and more. Farmers? Well, the farmers had their day in this session. And it was one day other than they have had at any other session.

And the oil men are clustering around too, just watching to see. The usual county office lobby has been otherwise occupied, with so much work of the fee committee.

GUILTY LIPS

by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN

Author of "MAD MARRIAGE"

BEGIN HERE TODAY
 Pretty Norma Kent, 20-year-old secretary in a law office, marries Mark Travers, son of F. M. Travers, millionaire real estate dealer, after the father has sworn to cut Mark off without a penny if the marriage takes place. Norma has known Mark only a few weeks, did not know during the courtship that he was a millionaire's son.

The story opens in Marlboro, middle western metropolis. Christine Saunders, with whom Norma shares an apartment, and Bradley Hart, Chris' employer, are witnesses at the wedding. Before she has refused to marry Bob Farrell, young lawyer of whom she is fond as a friend.

Mark sells his expensive roadster to get money for the honeymoon. He and Norma go to fashionable Blue Springs, where the young man takes delight in the young bride with expensive luxuries. He introduces her to Hollis Stone, an old friend, and it is evident from the girl's discomposure that she has known Stone before.

One night Mark loses heavily in a card game. The young couple face the problem of getting enough money to pay their hotel bill and buy railroad tickets. Mark gives his mother but when the answer comes it is a curt refusal from his father. Mark borrows $500 from Hollis Stone and he and Norma return to Marlboro. There Mark insists on stopping at an expensive hotel. He spends more time with his wealthy friends than he does hunting a job. As their money dwindles the couple move to a furnished apartment. One evening Mark meets Natalie Price, a debutante who has long hoped to marry him. She professes admiration for his independence in breaking with his father. A little later Natalie telephones Mark's mother to confide "something important."

NO WGO ON WITH THE STORY
 CHAPTER XXII
 Norma poured the steaming, fragrant coffee into a yellow cup. She held it across the breakfast table toward Mark. "You'll feel better after you eat some of this," she said brightly. Norma's tone was a little too cheerful; she was so obviously trying to be encouraging.

Without reply Mark took the cup and put it down. He was restless. He had shaved and brushed his hair. He wore a fresh shirt but no necktie, and his collar was open.

Mark frowned at his plate—the perfect picture of a young man who has undertaken to prove sleep an unnecessary evil.

"Cream?" Norma offered the pitcher. She was still determinedly cheerful.

"Don't want any!"

"That was definite enough. The three words implied utter disgust with the breakfast, the clear bright morning, the world in general, even Norma."

She understood and was silent. They sat at the gate table which had been pulled out before the living room windows. Norma resembled a little girl playing at housekeeping. Her rose-colored cotton frock was sleeveless, made with a short, full skirt. There was a crisp yellow-checked cloth over the table and the yellow dishes (bought at the five-and-ten) were Norma's pride. There was a plate of golden-buttered toast, marmalade, bacon and an egg boiled the exact four minutes which Mark insisted upon.

"Good Lord, Norma!" The exclamation was sudden and violent. "Do I have to face a soft-boiled egg every morning of my life? Is there some kind of law or something that if a guy doesn't eat seven soft-boiled eggs a week—?"

"But I thought you liked them!—oh, I'm sorry! The other day when we had sausage you said you'd rather have eggs. Why didn't you tell me you were tired of them?"

"Anybody'd be tired of them if they never saw anything else!"

"You don't have to eat it. There is oatmeal—I can fix that for you." "Never mind! As long as it's here I'll eat it. Don't fix anything else! Just because a person likes something once in a while doesn't mean they want the same thing every day, you know." Mark's tone was easier. He was trying to excuse himself for the tiny wrinkles reappeared in Norma's forehead. "Working in his father's office is about the only real job he's ever had. We wasn't there very long and anybody that was mostly getting acquainted with the people in the organization and seeing how things were done."

"Don't I know! Rich men's sons. Inherit the business some day—come in and see how the faithful slaves keep it going."

Swiftly Norma took the defense. "But it wasn't Mark's fault! That was what his father wanted him to do. And besides it's different now. Mark really wants to work. He wants to work hard and he's been through college and he's so clever. Oh, I know he'd be a big success if he could just get a chance!"

While she was still speaking the other girl's hand had tightened. "Listen!" Chris exclaimed dramatically. "I've got an idea! Do you suppose Mark could sell advertising?"

"Of course he could!"

"Well, I just remembered something. Bud Jamieson's getting Saturday and Brad hasn't hired anyone to take his place. Brad doesn't ordinarily take inexperienced salesmen but he likes Mark—I'll tell you what you do—"

Casually that evening Norma spoke of meeting Chris. She added in an off-hand way. "Chris said Mr. Hart's been wanting to see you. Asked if you could stop in his office tomorrow morning."

"What's he want to see me about?"

Dark fringed lashes fluttered faintly. Then the better part of valor won a victory. "I don't know," the girl said. "She told me Mr. Hart's always in about 11 o'clock. Chris is looking awfully well. Mark, I don't believe she's putting in as much overtime as she did."

Shortly before noon next day Norma was called to the telephone. A jubilant-voiced Mark almost shouted the glad tidings: "Brad Hart's got a job for me! Wants me to start right away. Do you hear that, Baby? I said Brad Hart wants me to work for him—selling advertising. Sure I can do it! Why, of course. Everybody knows advertising's a good thing! It'll be a snap! Hart's taking me around to meet some of his customers this afternoon. I'll tell you all about it when I get home. See you later, Baby. Bye!"

They celebrated by going to the neighborhood motion picture house that evening and holding hands throughout a talking drama which was neither very funny nor very moving emotionally. To Norma the picture glowed with a haze of romantic beauty that was to make it memorable.

For a week thereafter Mark Travers arose to the clangor of the new alarm clock, downed his breakfast and sprinted for the 8:15 car. Each evening he reappeared between 5:30 and 6. After dinner he read a volume Norma had unearthed in the public library. "Psychology in Selling Advertising" was the title of the book.

Norma got out the paper notebook containing her much-thumbed budget. Forty-five dollars a week was the sum Mark was to be paid. Pitifully small to a young man of Mark's financial standards but there would be commissions and raises. Norma remade the budget sheet so that it totaled $45. There was a column headed "savings," too.

Saturday noon—Mark's first pay day—he waited impatiently for his arrival. She waited until frigid tremors coursed her spine and her hands were clammy. She tried to invent excuses; even invented reasons to believe the excuses. She waited and waited—and at 4:30 there were steps on the stairs.

"Is that you, Mark?" Norma cried, running into the hall.

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

By EDSON R. WAITE
Shawnee, Oklahoma.

W. O. Smith, editor of the Punxsutawney (Pa.) Spirit, says: "The psychology of effective advertising is to create a congenial atmosphere between buyer and seller—one of mutual confidence. The reaction of many toward radio and billboard advertising is one of resentment. The commercializing of an instrument from which edifying entertainment only is expected, or the obscuration of roadside scenery which the autoist is seeking to enjoy, is not calculated to create a sympathetic attitude toward the advertiser. He is looked upon as an impudent interloper and trespasser who has sneaked into the company through the back door."

"The home newspaper is the friendly guest whom you have invited to your home because you have confidence in its integrity, and which will not intrude anything upon you that you are not in the mood to accept. It does not roar advertising into your ear when you want to read the news or editorials. It is silent and courteous, acceding deferentially to your slightest wish. Hence the home newspaper has no rival for effective publicity."

"But the radio is seeking to invade a field in which it is not welcome and for which it is not adapted. When your soul craves music the radio bawls and chatters about soap or toothpaste, and thus destroys the rhapsody of your mood by arousing a feeling of antagonism.

"Not only does the radio advertising broadcaster intrude something on the radio owner that he does not want, but he impudently asks the newspaper, whose advertising account he has usurped (to advertise his program).

"That so fine an instrument as the radio should be degraded by cheap and lawdry advertising programs is not fair either to the radio manufacturer or to the buyer. In Great Britain radio programs are financed by a public fund, and he people would not tolerate the intrusion of a lot of trashy programs by advertising agencies bent upon commercializing even the air we breathe. Newspapers that encourage this sort of thing by advertising their advertisers are not only injuring themselves but inflicting an intolerable nuisance upon the public at large."

sins for Christ's sake, and thus saved you from eternal damnation. You should now be prompted by great gratitude to go out and tell others about this salvation, that they too might learn to trust in Christ as their only salvation and thus be saved.

An informal song service was conducted at the church in the evening. A number of familiar hymns were sung by the audience that assembled there. At this occasion Rev. Peiman spoke about mission work among the negroes. Rev. Wagner also spoke a few words about our missionaries in China. He remarked especially that the guiding hand of God can be seen in this, that the missionaries were spending their summer vacation in the mountains during the time of the great flood in that country, and were thus saved from drowning.

In the Political Arena

By RAYMOND BROOKS. AUSTIN, Sept. 14. — While the state tax rate has been held back so far unfixed, Governor Ross S. Sterling has prepared to submit to the legislature the whole subject of revenue, members of the house have ascertained.

Whether and when he will send up the new subject remained to be seen. He probably will wait until a definite indication is given on the tax rate, and if the "miracle" of a quick enactment were to develop, it is entirely possible that the revenue and taxation subject will not be submitted at all.

House members are ready to implement appropriations under the subject of taxation, on the specific ground that cutting appropriations will affect the state taxation rate, and thereby constitutes merely the reverse of affirmative taxation.

A strong sentiment has shown itself for cutting the salaries of judges and others in the brackets above $3000 or $3600 a year.

A possible cut in excess of $1,000,000 would be attempted, according to house members. This would embrace $126,000 reduction per year in the salaries of the district judges; approximately $60,000 at $1500 apiece in the appellate judges' pay, and possibly $600,000 in educational salaries, the rest to come from departmental and institution salaries.

Another way in which revenue and taxation was expected indirectly to be opened up is that a majority of the legislators present have signed a petition for shifting part of the gasoling taxes into assumption of county and district bonds. A bill on that subject is assured of passing the house, whether submitted or not, since the same majority has signed it as signed a petition for its submission.

There will be an income tax bill in the house before three days have passed, whether or not the revenue subject is submitted.

Constitutional arguments will be submitted to validate action upon it in the absence of its submission by the governor. There does not seem a prospect now that the legislature at the special session will get far with an income tax bill.

Moratorium and tax postponement bills, already on the calendar, deal directly with taxation.

Now that the Scripps-Howard newspapers, after an investigation satisfying themselves, have made the flat charge that President Hoover, or his secretaries, misstated facts to the White House news-writers, Texas newspapermen are taking stock of the difficulties and problems of getting full and truthful news out of the state departments and officials.

Governor Sterling recently complained that the newspapermen should ask him about martial law and its adjustment to fix the railroad commission's oil orders. At the same time he "had nothing to say," and declined to comment on a report that he objected to. The report proved to be exactly and fully correct.

That is the only really unsatisfactory episode at the Texas capitol in recent times. The newspapermen have not had all the cooperation from his private-life position as a newspaper publisher.

The writers' main difficulty at the executive office is that of getting to see Governor Sterling, in the daily coverage of news and in response to the outside "break" of things which make the getting of the executive's comment or answer imperative. Often they fall throughout a half day to break through the group of secretaries, and get past a constant overflow of private visitors in seeking Governor Sterling. They feel a much greater facility could be afforded them.

The callers on Governor Sterling are of three main classes—legislators, discussing official matters; families and lawyers seeking clemency or persons wanting appointments to jobs; and the social and political callers who just want to while the time away with the governor.

During sessions, legislators properly have the right of way over all other callers upon the executive. The newspapermen seek no personal benefit, but visit the governor in the course of duty, and their service is not to an individual client.

but to the entire people of the state. Governor Sterling would facilitate their "covering" the rest of the capitol, would give the public of Texas more quickly the benefit of knowledge of what he is doing, what he plans and wants and thinks, and knowledge of official acts, not only of his, but of the rest of the departments of government, by improving his office procedure in dealing with the newspapermen.

In general, there is none of the suppression and unreasonable difficulties in the way of the press at Austin, such as most bitterly condemned at Washington.

MANY BIG MEN CHURCH STINGY PASTOR SAYS

"A lot of big business men will stand by civic propositions and business interposes and be little and stingy with the church," Rev. H. D. Tucker said last night at the First Methodist church in his message on "The Doom of the Self-Centered Life."

A large crowd heard the message and a special feature of the service was a solo by Mrs. Olin Pierce. Continuing his message Mr. Tucker said, "The church does not need more people nor more money but a better brand of people and the right attitude of people toward money."

"The self-centered life is doomed here and hereafter," the Rev. Mr. Tucker declared during his message. "No matter how much influence a life may yield if it is self-centered it is doomed," he continued.

"A life will either be self-centered or God-centered" the speaker said. "A God-centered life will be a success in the eyes of God," he said.

"A lot of people today turn God's plan around and reverse the order," Mr. Tucker said during his message. "Jesus says to seek first the kingdom of God and many of us seek other things first and if we have anything left we give it to God," he declared. "No wonder we are in a depression," he added.

"If you are going to make a difference in your Sunday and Monday living, you had better live better on Monday than on Sunday," the speaker told his audience. "People are watching your business life more closely than your Sunday life," he said.

Next Sunday will be rally day in all departments of the church, Mr. Tucker announced.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—One of the most extraordinary things about this government is the great number of important issues which must be fought out over again, year after year, with each new session of Congress.

It does seem as if nearly all the old familiar issues, some of them more flourishing than ever, will be right back with us when the new Congress meets in December. And there are enough new things to fight about so that, when the issues are considered along with the almost even political lineup and the assured fact that the whole session will be surcharged with 1932 politics, many persons are predicting a perfectly terrible state of affairs.

Congress will pass some legislation—it never fails—but the complete absence of control in both houses and the prospects of a bad legislative jam make it difficult to guess what the legislation will be. One general belief is that President Hoover will be making frequent use of the veto power.

Only the Omniscient Being has an idea how the two houses will organize, how long it will take them, which party will win technical control and how the congressional action to legalize the Hoover moratorium can be put through between the date Congress meets, Dec. 7, and the date payments are due, Dec. 15.

THE farm situation is much worse than ever, especially in wheat and cotton, and the export debenture and equalization fee plans are coming up more urgently than before, after they were once supposed dead. Many bizarre remedies probably will be proposed for the first time and there will be loud demands for curbing grain and cotton speculation.

The fight for federal aid to relieve distress due to unemployment will be far more acute than last year because the distress will be so much greater. Appropriations for direct relief are likely to pass and be vetoed, after a terrific battle led by the Progressives and opposed by administration forces which will shout against what they call the "dole." There will be talk about unemployment insurance, but presumably no legislation on it.

Taxation promises a bitter fight because of the great treasury deficit and the demands for increasing income and inheritance taxes. In a campaign year there is great prejudice against any tax increase, but that won't prevent one of the noisiest battles yet on the old issue of taxing the rich.

VETERAN relief has been a live issue here in nearly every Congress since the Revolution and veterans will have a program calling for widows' pensions, cancellation of interest on bonus loans and cashing of the adjusted compensation certificates. Ordinarily Congress gives the veterans what they want, but the treasury deficit has led to a noticeable stiffening on the part of some administration members and there is reason to suppose that the contest will be prolonged and bitter.

Congress passed a tariff bill not so long ago, but the rafters are going to ring with tariff speeches again. The Hawley-Smoot act will not be revised no matter how vociferously the Democrats assail it, but it will be used for political purposes and in addition everyone expects the strongest campaign yet for a tariff on oil.

And then there's the World Court fight again. Your old friend, the prohibition issue, seems almost shunted away back behind the stage door and admittedly there will be no serious attempt to pass any important wet or dry legislation. But every wet or dry member who thinks his constituents would like a nice red hot speech on that subject is going to see that they get it.
