Deafness For Thought

It was a well known fact that Thomas Edison was almost stone deaf many years before his death, but it is an astonishing bit of news to many that he was deaf from choice.

Offered the chance of restoring hearing a few years ago by a great surgeon, and with an appointment made for the simple operation required, Edison refused to have it performed. He had much important work to do and said he thought he could do it better deaf.

"I have learned," he explained, "to think by being shut away from sound and confusion. And I have a lot more to do before I die. If they fix up my ears I'll have to learn to do it all over again. I haven't the time to lose."

Here is a remarkable sacrifice for constructive thought and the service of humanity. Also an impressive indictment of our civilization. What a comment on our modern life, that a genius should find his deafness an asset rather than a liability!

But many great thinkers have been at least partially deaf and some have been known to remark that they could think others because of the quietness that reigned about them. Many others try to shut out the confusion of the world about them by closing their eyes when endeavoring to think out a proposition. Some smart traders do the same thing when trying to get the better end of a bargain. Evidently the Maker compensates us for the loss of any of our facilities.

Self Service Proper and Dignified

Many good folk are lamenting the passing of the era when men and women consecrated their lives to unselfish service and prepared themselves to become ministers, missionaries, teachers or country doctors that they might administer to the spiritual, mental and physical needs of humanity without thought of large worldly gain. They are not in error when they charge that modern men and women are choosing vocations today in which they can do the greatest service to themselves.

People today are coming to the belief that the best way they can help others is to produce much, that their profits shall be large and that they shall never become dependent upon society. The old idea of service was direct. The new service is indirect. Twenty years ago it was still thought that only ministers, doctors and teachers served humanity. Today every workman who carries his whole day's wage home is known to have earned that wage in service to society.

Elbert Hubbard's version of the Golden Rule was, "Do unto others as though you were the others," but an even more up-to-date version is "Do yourself much good and no bad to others." Getting something for yourself is reprehensible only when it is gotten at the expense of another.

There is dignity in serving oneself, was a favorite remark of P. W. Campbell, former superintendent of the West Texas Utilities company of this district. Many of the modern mechanical devices are founded upon the principle of being able to serve oneself, easily and completely. The car is almost foolproof so that we may do without a mechanical minded chauffeur, electric refrigerators, radios and other such household helps enable one to be more or less independent of services from others in the everyday affairs of life.

Insanity, Male and Female

Are women "weaker mentally" than men? There has always been a tradition to that effect. Women have been supposed to become mentally unbalanced more easily than men, and in larger numbers.

This tradition is now upset by statistical facts, along with a lot of other rubbish about women. Figures gathered from 46 state hospitals for mental diseases show that in one year the average number of men and women admitted to these hospitals per 100,000 population was as follows: Male, 114.5 and women 101.1.

On the basis of these figures, it looks as if about eight men go crazy to seven women. From which men may derive what poor satisfaction they can by pleading that it's the women's fault, always, because the men so often go crazy about the women.

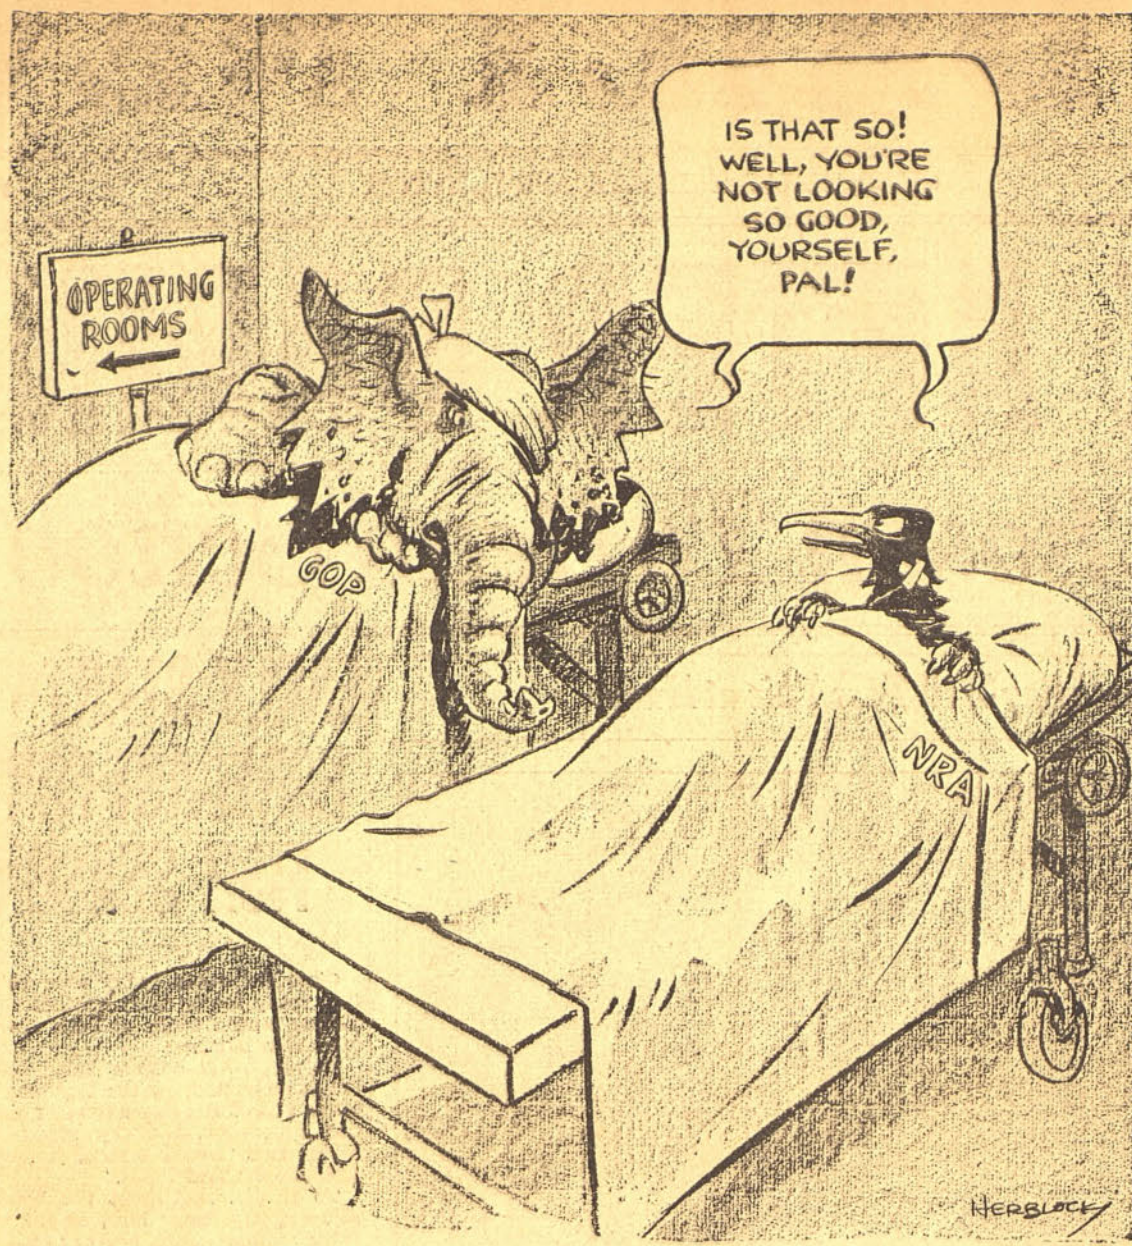

Sen. Carter Glass Given Black Eye

Sen. Carter Glass of Virginia is a diehard, as well as an unreconstructed rebel and last ditch fighter. A sub-committee of the senate banking committee recommended the confirmation of nomination of Mariner S. Eccles of Utah as governor of the federal reserve board.

The vote was 6 to 2 for confirmation. Sen. Glass would not announce a roll call. Eccles is a westerner. He is a liberal and was one of the leading bankers and financiers of the Rocky Mountain country. Sen. Glass is the reputed author of the federal reserve act which was given to the American people and the banking world when Woodrow Wilson was president.

His colleague, Sen. Harry Byrd, is as loyal to the veteran Virginia leader as it is possible for a brother-lawmaker to be. But just now it is said the New Deal has the upper hand and the protests of Old Virginia and its senators will be tossed into the waste basket. This is the same old world but it has a new civilization. And the famous 76-year-old battler of the 'Old Dominion realizes it but he is going to die with his back to the wall hurling chain shots at all comers. Some men are built that way.

History Of Wines Traced by French

PARIS, April 30 — That wines and the cultivation of the vine have been known to men for 12,000 years has been brought to light recently by Albert Mauray, Paris savant and cellarman, who has just published the results of years of research on the history of wine.

"Thousands of documents show," writes Mauray, "that the cultivation of the vine existed 10,000 years before Christ. This does not prove that it does not date back farther than that." He continued to say that the God who gave wine and corn has been venerated from one century to another since the time of the Hittites, whose civilization antedated that of the Phoenicians. It was believed that Osiris protected the vines of the ancient Egyptians, and according to Herodotus the Egyptian Bacchus is older than that of Greece.

"All early religions celebrated the cult of the vine," according to Mauray, "and the Christian religion is no exception. Numerous parables of the Holy Scripture cite wine—in the books of David, Joshua, Ezekiel, Isaiah, Jeremiah, while St. Matthew, St. Mark and St. Luke report the parables of Jesus in which the vine and wine have an important place. Christ's first miracle, at Cana, and the Last Supper are characteristic examples.

"Popes have been great propagators of wine, such as Alexander V. Sixte V. Boniface and notably all popes who sat at Avignon. When Gregoire XI re-established the pontifical seat in Rome, he had Burgundy wines brought there."

SAY OIL MEN HAVE WASTED 62 MILLIONS

By TED H. MALOY, United Press Staff Correspondent. LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 30.—Careless and ruthless oil men have wasted $62,877,000 worth of Arkansas' oil and gas supply, Dr. George C. Branner state geologist has computed.

The orgy of waste began when the Dusey discovery well was drilled in west of El Dorado in 1921. Operators went wild with the boom town mania and worked feverishly with but one objective—to get oil out of the ground as fast as possible and on the way to market.

No one cared how many thousand cubic feet of natural gas it took to raise a barrel of oil through the casing to the surface. That disregard appeared with wanton sameness throughout the 10 production areas discovered around El Dorado up to 1928.

Then came the day of reckoning. No new sands could be discovered, natural flow stopped in the wells and the fields "went on the beam." Each stroke of the pumping beams has punctuated a rebuke of wasteful operation.

Huge Losses Incurred. "It is difficult, if not impossible, to calculate with any degree of accuracy the losses incurred by the wasteful operation," Dr. Branner said, "but they may be classified as follows: (1) Loss of the gas itself; (2) the loss of the gasoline vapor carried by the gas, and (3) the material reduction in the quantity of oil recoverable from the oil sands by present production methods due to the reduction of gas pressure in these sands."

The latter is the greatest loss. South Arkansas produced 407,881,000 barrels of oil during the period 1921-1934 inclusive. Dr. Branner computed. Ultimate economic production under present methods is 480,000,000 barrels. If the gas had been conserved, he said, the recovery might have been increased 10 per cent, or about 48,000,000 barrels with an estimated value of $43,900,000.

Dr. Branner's records indicate 227,000,000 cubic feet of gas taken from Southern Arkansas fields during the same period. He believes a fourth of it was wasted during the flush production days. Assuming the wasted gas had an average content of 2.5 gallons of gasoline per 1,000 cubic feet and the gasoline were worth 8 cents a gallon a mere $11,350,000 was blown into the air. Add to that the value of 45,400,000 cubic feet of commercial fuel gas after the gasoline was extracted and the loss is increased another $7,627,000. That's where $62,877,000 worth of gas and oil went.

THE NEW DEAL IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Staff Correspondent. WASHINGTON—If you can forget the grimmer aspects of it, there's a laugh in the recent rerearings of Secretary Wallace and the AAA.

Only two or three months ago they were merrily kicking the consumer—who pays the processing taxes and the farmer's entire income—in his threadbare pants. Today they are dashing tearfully and repentantly to the consumer's arms, hoping he will open them.

"We are not interested in the price spread between producer and consumer. Our interest is in getting more money for the farmer."

That was after AAA's Assistant Administrator Victor Christgau, General Counsel Jerome Frank, and Consumers' Counsel Fred Howes—who were intensely interested in that "spread"—had been booted out in accordance with the quaint theory that the farmer's interests lay with his pal the "middleman" and it was just too bad about the consumer.

Then the food industries which the "purge" was designed to propliate began to snap at the AAA hand like so many wolves, lobbying vigorously against the AAA amendments necessary to its future operations.

Consumers, now convinced AAA had no thought of protecting them, and angry at high prices, added to the din of a farflung attack against AAA.

TODAY you find Wallace pleading with consumers to stand on "common ground" with farmers.

Instead of asking cynically, "who is the consumer?" and insisting as he once did that the "middleman's spread" was an inconsequential factor, he is saying:

"The farmer and the consumer have common interests which far outweigh any temporary diversity of objectives. Each has to protect the other to protect himself.

One-third of the consumer's dollar is spent for food. But only about 13 per cent of the consumer's cost of living goes to the farmer. The joint interest of farmers and consumers is to see that the share of the cost which they pay to processors and distributors is reasonable.

The exploiters . . . are making desperate efforts to prejudice farmers against consumers, and consumers against farmers, so as to destroy their new-found sense of unity . . . It is easy to imagine Mr. Christgau, Dr. Howe, and Mr. Frank yawning in unison: "Ho hum!"

There are many instances, but for example one may cite the case of Congressman Samuel B. Pettengill, who sits on the House interstate commerce committee, now considering the Rayburn holding company bill—one of the few measures Roosevelt has personally urged on Congress.

Pettengill has begun to take the lead in the fight against the bill in committee, co-operating with Republican members such as Cooper of Ohio and Wolverton of Michigan. (Copyright, 1935, NEA Service, Inc.)

The DARK BLOND

By CARLETON KENDRAKE. © 1935 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY. MILLICENT GRAVES, secretary to GEORGE DRINGOLD, had her employer in his office dead. JARVIS HAPP, a stranger, offers to help her. He sends her to a beauty shop where she is transformed into a brunette. Then takes her home, introducing her as his secretary. She meets Happ's son, NORMAN; his stepson, ROBERT CAISE; Mrs. HAPP; DICK GENTRY, Happ's partner; VERA DUCHENE, Mrs. Happ's maid.

"NORMAN!" Millicent called. "Where are you, Norman?" There was no answer. Millicent groped for a light switch, found it, snapped on the lights.

The apartment was in the greatest disorder. Chairs were overturned. The table had been tipped on its side, a leg smashed, and Millicent was horrified to discover several ugly dark spots on the carpet, on the furniture, and even on the wall itself. Evidently there had been a terrific struggle. She flung open the door of the closet and looked inside, hoping yet dreading to discover some trace of the man she loved.

The closet was empty. She rushed to the kitchen and here, again, the result was the same. There was no trace of Norman Happ.

She stood undecided, wondering what could be done, hardly knowing which way to turn. As she stood there she heard a sharp knock at the door. Millicent stood perfectly still. Then, sure that Norman could not be in the apartment, and hoping that the person at the door might provide a clue to his whereabouts, she ran to the door and opened it.

A man stood in the doorway—a thick-set, beefy individual with a very red face, who gave every evidence of having dressed hastily. His coat was open, showing the upper part of a suit of silk pajamas. The lower part of the pajamas protruded, Millicent noticed, beneath the bottom of his trousers. She noticed, too, that he wore shoes such as she understood policemen usually wore.

"What's going on up here?" he demanded. Millicent said, "Who are you?" "I'm the man who lives in the apartment down underneath you."

"What do you want?" "I want to know what's happening up here. There's been a hell of a commotion. You can't put on a party like that in a respectable apartment house. My wife is sick and I was taking a bath. I had to get out of my bath, throw on the first clothes that came to hand and come up here."

"How long ago was it you heard this noise?" Millicent asked. "You ought to know," he said. "You live here, don't you?"

MILICENT hesitated for a moment and then, deciding not to admit or deny anything, said, "Will you kindly tell me what right you have to ask questions?" "Don't get high hat with me, sister. It won't work. You know what's been going on here."

He tried to push the door open and enter the apartment, but Millicent held it firmly, so that he could not see into the place. "Don't you dare come in here," she said.

"Listen, lady, what kind of a party has been going on here? You seem quiet enough now, but you certainly made a hell of a commotion a few minutes ago."

"I'm sorry," she told him, "if your wife is ill. There won't be any more disturbance."

"Everyone gone home?" he inquired. "I'm the only one here, and there will be no more disturbance."

"I'm on the force," he said. "It sounded to me as though there was a fight going on up here. Are you hurt?"

"No." "Anyone hurt?" "I tell you I am the only one here."

"O.K.," he said grudgingly. "You don't look as though you'd been beat up, but it certainly sounded to me as though someone had popped you a couple on the jaw. You're sure you ain't been in a fight?"

"Certainly not."

"Sister, wouldn't I look cheap if it should turn out there'd been a murder committed here and I came up to the door and let you talk me into going back and letting you make a get-away?"

"Why, what do you mean—a murder committed! The very ideal!"

"Yes," he said, "very not! Eff you're not fooling me any, and all of this talk isn't getting you anywhere. I'm coming in."

She tried to stare at him in blazing indignation, but knew that the fear which gripped her heart was showing in her eyes. This man was an officer. If he would enter the apartment, he would see those bloody dark stains. He would insist on calling the police. Millicent hadn't told him that she was Phyllis Faulconer. On the other hand, she hadn't denied her identity. She would never be able now to back up, change her story and tell him that she had merely come to the apartment to see what had happened to her friend. Even if she told him that much he would insist that she accompany him to headquarters to make an explanation.

THESE thoughts raced through her mind and she realized that she could not extricate herself from the predicament into which she had placed herself.

Suddenly she decided to try a ruse. She knew now that Norman was not in the apartment, and she wanted most desperately to be free to find him.

"Oh, well," she said, "come on in, if you've got to. One of the boy friends got in a fight with a man who was calling on me and knocked him out."

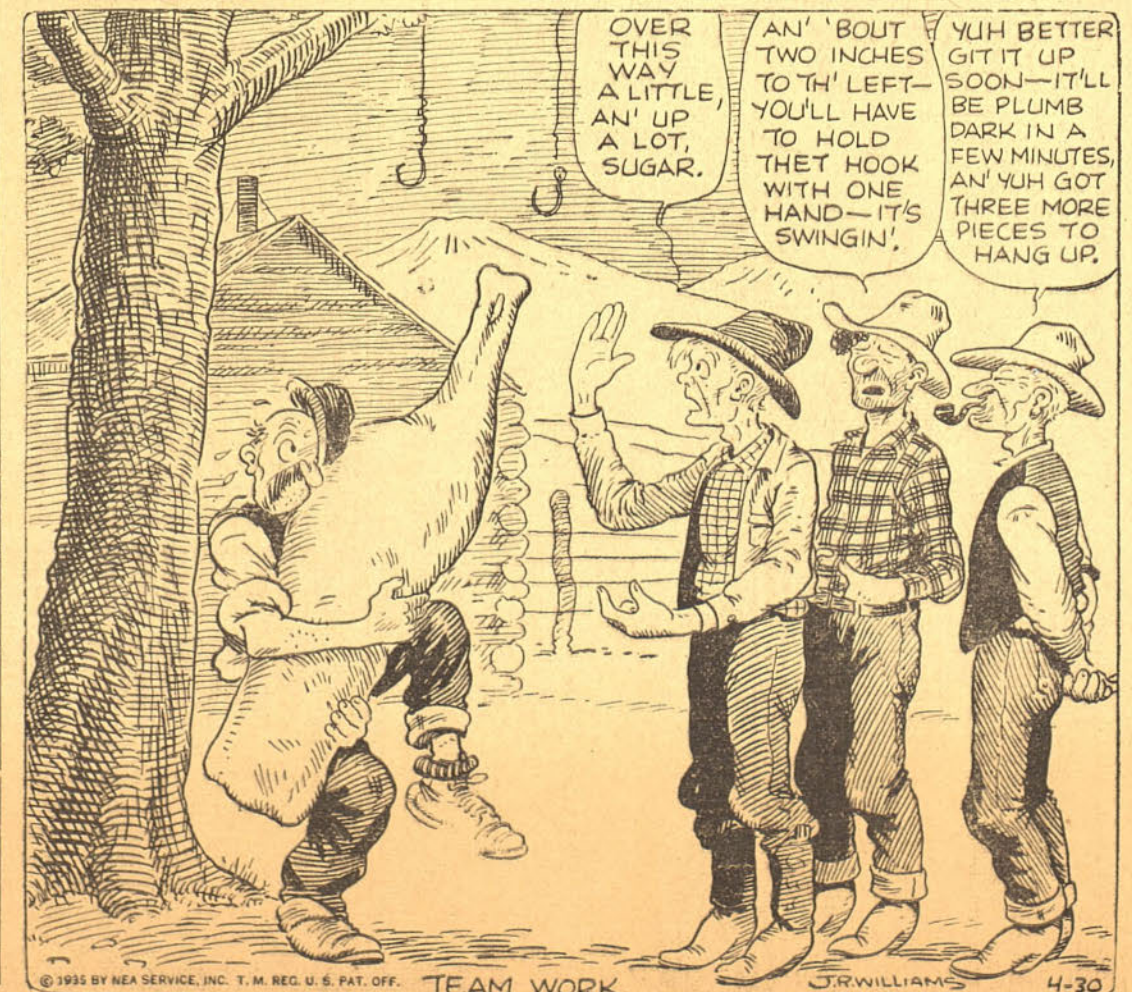

She flung open the door. The officer entered the room, appraised the wreckage of the furniture with a practiced eye and said, "A sweet little scrap, all right. Where's the boy friend?"

"Out in the kitchenet. I don't think he's hurt badly but he's unconscious. I'm afraid to go near him for fear he might be . . ."

She let her voice trail away to significant silence. "Like that, eh?" her visitor remarked. "Where's the guy that popped him?" "He ran out."

"What did he hit him with, his fist?" Millicent, having embarked upon a career of fabrication, decided to make her story sound plausible. "He hit him with everything in the apartment," she said. "Out in the kitchenet, huh?" "Yes."

Public-testing demonstrated that Humble Motor Fuel definitely delivers smoother performance.

time to time continued to invite our customers to make a public-test of Humble Motor Fuel in their own automobiles. The results are recorded on thousands of check cards in our files: these say, Humble Motor Fuel is second to none, that it fills a definite public need.

Since then, Humble Motor Fuel has been changed and improved to keep pace with the changes and improvements in automotive design. This is in keeping with Humble's policy to give Texas motorists the right product at the right price. And to confirm our own laboratory results, we have from

With confidence that you, too, will like the performance of Humble Motor Fuel, we invite you to test a tankful in your car and to compare performance with any gasoline sold for regular price you have ever used. Test it in traffic, test it on the highway, test its pick-up and the way it starts. Public-testing is a more powerful argument than any we could use.
