THE DEATH PENALTY.

For the first time in history a Stephens county district court jury has resorted to the extreme penalty in punishment of a crime. Twelve good men and true Saturday afternoon decreed that Doye Arnold, young and handsome slayer of his ex-wife, should die in the electric chair for the deed.

To kill a person for murdering another is a serious thing; but murder itself is a serious thing. An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth was the old Mosaic law, and two thousand years of Christian civilization have not been able to supplant that sanguinary penalty.

We sympathize with the young man of whom this penalty has been demanded, but we remember the deed and the young woman who died needlessly. Perhaps she would not have died had the society among which the condemned man grew up taken more seriously the ultimate responsibility it has in invoking capital punishment. We are prone to be mighty serious about a punishment, but mighty negligent about those factors and tendencies that lead to the necessity of punishment. Until we begin to pay careful attention to the kind of soil in which the roots of crime breed we can never get away from the crudeness of the old Mosaic law.

If Doye Arnold's life is carefully traced backward we should probably be impressed by the fact that he himself is not entirely responsible for his crime. We should probably find that responsibility resting upon shoulders which would deny it in righteousness indignation. The responsibility of dealing with that results of its negligence cannot be evaded by society, but is it not a fact that we should begin to be more concerned for the neglected ground that produces crime?

No amount of capital punishment can offset social negligence.

NOW ENGLAND ASSURES DOLLAR WHEAT.

John Bull has his won price fixing for the farmers of the tight little island. Dollar wheat, we are told, is assured in England by parliamentary action taken recently.
Growers of home wheat in England will be entitled to another 50 cents from the government. Why and how? It will be paid by a tax on the miller, who of course, will add it to the price he gets for flour and the public will pay it eventually. To ward off home overproduction, the subsidy will apply to only 50,000,000 bushels of wheat, England's normal crop.
Growers must register in order to get their proportionate part of the subsidy.

This comment by the Wheat Grower's Journal: "We do not know whether this plan will work very satisfactorily in the long run, but it is obvious that the British are striving desperately hard to bring about justice to all classes of their population. The present British government is supposed to be very conservative, but it is apparently more concerned about doing something definite for the welfare of British farmers than our government is about doing something equally definite for the welfare of American farmers."

BERKELEY THROWS HAT IN RING.

Sen. Benjamin F. Berkeley of Alpine, in the Big Bend country, has announced his candidacy for lieutenant-governor in the election two years hence. He has been a senator eight years; he is the author of the present state cigaret tax law, and he will demand recognition in the allotment of offices to the people in that vast territory known as the land of the open spaces. Ken Reagan of Pecos will take over the Berkeley senatorial desk in the coming month of January.

WYOMING WILL HOLD REFERENDUM.

Wyoming as a territory gave woman the ballot. Wyoming for years has been dry in statute and as wet as a river bottom in the distribution of illicit booze. Now a referendum on repeal of the 18th amendment will be submitted to the Wyoming voters in the general election, Nov. 8. John B.
Hendrick is the democratic leader in Wyoming state. He is a native Texan. He has never met defeat in his race for office. He served as governor two terms. He is serving his third term as United States senator. He predicts that Roosevelt and Garner will capture the Wyoming electors in November by a sweeping majority.

To Be, or Not to Be

be further glorified after a couple of their namesakes finish

Port Richmond, N. Y., who claims direct descent from Bill, the Bard of Avon. Smith is shown on left and Shakespeare on right.

OUT OUR WAY

In the Political Arena

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD

Franklin D. Roosevelt and Alfred E. Smith, life long friends for 30 years are democratic brothers in harmony and in political purpose at least until the November election tells the story of a battle which will be won or lost by the followers of Thomas Jefferson. Democrats of New York, leaders of all factions at the 11th hour tossed aside their tomahawks, threw their knives in the scrap pile and named a ticket of candidates for the major and minor offices in the empire state of the East. Gov. Roosevelt and "The Happy Warrior" are the close friends and political backers of Lieut. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, an outstanding representative of the democracy of Jefferson, a man of distinguished ability and wealth, a humanitarian widely known, who has served his people with signal fidelity. Smith and Roosevelt won. Lehman was the unanimous choice of the convention for governor.

Outstanding men were named for the minor offices. Judge Cuthbert F. Found, one of the outstanding jurists of America, was nominated for appeals. Robert F. Wagner was re-nominated for United States senator. It was a tremendous gathering of New York state democrats as well as a harmonious gathering. All the leaders declared not only for harmony but for active work all along the line, down state and upstate. Delegates and spectators yelled themselves hoarse in their outburst of applause for the New York governor and "the Happy Warrior" of at least three national convention and one of the outstanding leaders of American business and political life.

It goes without saying that the national standard bearer and "the Happy Warrior" were acclaimed the idols of the vast gathering. They were all smiles. Delegates and visitors and spectators were all cheers. Not only this, but a resolution was adopted giving sweeping approval to Roosevelt and Garner and the national platform and the stern command to each individual democrat voter that this was the year the state of New York should be placed in the democratic column for all the nominees from president to village constable.

Pres. Hoover was given a magnificent "welcome home" by the regulars of the republican party of Iowa. There was a nine-mile long parade in his honor. His speech was one of the most adroit he has ever made. He modestly admitted that as the leader of his party he had saved the American world as well as all the other worlds from plunging headlong into the ditch of destruction and complete final disaster. He claimed all the credit for all the relief legislation. He soundly berated Speaker John Nance Garner for legislative policies of government said to have been sponsored by the distinguished Texan.

Well, Speaker Garner has a head of his own. He has a well balanced vocabulary of his own. He has a tongue of his own. He has been able to handle himself very successfully for 40 years. He has been able to handle the keymen of the republican party, including Andrew W. Mellon, Ogden L. Mills and all the sharpshooters as well as the pin shooters of the party of the elephant. He will take care of the Moses of the republican party when he embarks on his speaking campaign tour of the Middle West and the West and the Pacific coast and the Puget Sound section in the very near future.

As for Ogden L. Mills, by all odds the most dangerous as well as the most formidable of the republican spellbinders, he is doing the Pacific coast country, addressing the bankers of America in convention assembled wherever he finds them, and is carrying the heavy load of the administration in this remarkable campaign which will be fought to a finish from coast to coast from this time on. All the commonwealths have named their candidates for office. All the conventions have declared the state policies as well as given their endorsements to the national platforms of the major parties.

New Yorker republicans named Ccl. William J. Donovan as their candidate for governor. He was not only the strongest but their best bet in the coming contest for the control of the empire state of the East.
Fitted against him is Lieut. Gov.
Herbert H. Lehman, a Jeffersonian democrat of the best type, a power in the business and financial and legal world and a man of outstanding accomplishments and achievements. Donovan was given as running mates on his ticket republicans of ability and character as his aides in the fierce contest for the control of the pivotal state. All in all the political leaders of New York, democrats as well as republicans have placed on their state ticket their ablest and best and most popular men.

Here at home democrats in every precinct the state over are organizing for the final finish in November.
District Judge W. F. Robertson of Travis county dismissed the contest case of Sterling vs. Ferguson for want of jurisdiction. This was the plea of the lawyers for the House of Ferguson. Their contention was that it was the province of a legislature and not a court to thrash out and return a final verdict in a contest seeking to establish fraudulent voting or violation of election laws.
They won. Now where do we go from here? Regardless of where, the political pot in Texas will continue to boil until it slops over until — all the votes have been cast and counted in November.

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

By EDSON E. WAITE
Shawnee, Oklahoma.

Harmony can do wonderful things
for some cities.

Advertising a city is a business —
not child's play.

People will go miles to get to a good, live city to trade.

No advertising gives as quick returns as newspaper advertising.

Business comes where it is invited and stays where it is well treated.

The city which does not seek something better than it now has is going to lose out.

A glance through the advertising columns of your newspaper enables you to tell in a few minutes all you want to know, and where to get the service or articles you may need.

Some cities are order takers; they take what comes to them. Other cities are order getters; they make up their mind what their city needs and then go after it until they get it.

I note in many Oklahoma papers,
according to a statement by J. F.
Owens, president of the Oklahoma City chamber of commerce, that a paved highway belt line circulating that city will be a reality in a few years. This should make other cities

CALL of the WEST

BY R. G. MONTGOMERY

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Stan Ball accuses Asper Delo, timber king of crooked practice and of ordering men shot who try to check up on his activities. Ball says he is making a check and Delo tells him he will personally prevent it. Upon Delo's office Ball saves Dona Delo's daughter from kidnapers. He slips away when he finds who she is, telling her he is Stanley Black.

Dudley Winters, in love with Dona goes with her to Three Rivers to get Delo to give up his mad fight with Ball. They find Ball accused of killing a ranger. Dudley has secured a license and has had a marriage certificate filled out to marry Dona. She uses the certificate after Delo is ambushed and wounded to keep him from taking any more part in the hunt Ball is caught by Swergin. Delo's timber boss, while listening to Dona tell of her marriage. He escapes but believes her married. Dona rides out to find Stanley Black, who she believes is in the country. She meets Ball and thinks him Stanley Black. He promises to rid the range of Ball. Valuable records are stolen from the office and Swergin's man insists Ball wound him and took them. A posse surrounds Ball, Dona escapes out and sees Ball escaping. She shoots at him and he takes a wound capturing her and taking her to a cave. Asper learns of her capture and heads a posse but fails to find her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXVIII

Dona sat huddled on the stone couch her jacket pulled around her and her eyes blazing. "Take one step toward me and I'll—" Dona's words tumbled out in an angry torrent.

"Scream?" Stan was smiling now. "I'll do more than that!"

"You might let me have one of the blankets from that bed. There are five on it. Stan stood with his hands on his hips a wicked light in his gray eyes.

"Help yourself. Suddenly Dona realized that she had been making an unnecessary fuss. Her anger did not abate, however. She had been fooled and that in itself was an insult.

Stan took his blanket and wrapped it into a little roll. "You may turn the light down and blow it out," he said as he turned toward the opening. "Good night."

Dona refused to answer. She was sitting on the bunk thinking deeply. The scraping of Stan Ball's boots died away outside and the girl was forced to believe that he had gone. She got up and walked to the entrance. Ten steps down the stone corridor showed her what she wanted to know. Her captor sat with his back against the cliff, his long legs stretched out across the entrance. He was smoking, drawing in slow deliberate draughts of smoke and letting them curl upward of their own fancy. The black mare stood with her muzzle against his arm.

Dona watched this silhouette for a full five minutes then she crept back to the bunk and lay down. She had had to admit that Ball was a complex person. His lean jaw, his steely eyes and his tight mouth spelled all that she knew him to be but on a half-smiled and the gray eyes lightened deep down. The hunted challenging wariness of his manner was the tell-tale trait that marked him for what he was. Dona had met Ball's kind before.

Her musings led her nowhere and she fell to planning how she could escape. Getting up, she examined the supplies. There was enough water for another day and possible enough food for three meals such as they had eaten that night. Dona made up her mind to play Ball's game and see if he would not slip away on a foraging expedition.

She returned to the bunk and slipped off her boots and jacket. Without hesitation she slid into the bunk and snuggled down. She thought with grim satisfaction that she would spend a much warmer night than her captor. The cave was high up on the rim and the night would be cold to the point of frost.

Out at the entrance of the cave Stan Ball sat and berated himself for taking Dona prisoner. It had been a wild fancy, a decision of a second's consideration. He was always making them and afterward paying for his blunders. All he could hope to do by this step was to rouse the posse to renewed vigor and add more men to the already overrun woods. He had deliberately lessened his chances of escape.

But the thing that made him feel most guilty was keeping the girl overnight in the cave. On the way up the mountain it had seemed an excellent way to arouse Dona's husband from his complacency and force him to realize that he should be more attentive to such a wife. Now Stan was not so sure all this would work out as he had intended. Winters might turn out to be the wronged and enraged husband.

He tossed aside his third cigaret and arose. Patting the black mare's neck, Stan walked to the edge of the shelf and looked down below. His cave rose like a little balcony above Pass Creek. Down in the canyon he could see lights moving and the night breeze carried the rumble of machinery to him faintly. Stan watched the scene grimly almost sadly.

He came back and made a bed in the mouth of the cave, away from the chill wind of the upper hills. And he slept soundly, his six gun tucked under his leg and his hat laid across his face. Daylight was an hour old before he woke. Sitting up he listened for sounds from the cave. None came and he ventured inside.

Dona was still sleeping soundly. Her trim shoulder was exposed and it rose and fell gently with her breathing. Stan smiled a crooked smile and retreated to the bench outside. He was sitting in the sun when she finally made her appearance.

"Good morning," he greeted her, without moving.

She gave him a cold stare, and flexed her arms.

Stan got to his feet and faced her. "We'll retire to the breakfast room at once. I've been starving for two hours."

Dona re-entered the cave without a word of protest. She had a plan and she intended to carry it out step by step. She sat down on the slab and watched Ball prepare breakfast. If she had expected him to be sparing of the thin slab of bacon she was disappointed. He cut it all up and spread it in the skillet.

The fire roared pleasantly and the bacon, and coffee gave off an aroma that made Dona's mouth water. Stan produced a bit of flour and made four griddle cakes. He browned them to a turn and flipped two of them on Dona's plate. Then he smothered them with strips of crisp bacon. A steaming cup of black coffee completed the fare.

With a satisfied feeling, Dona devoured the cakes and bacon. At this rate they would be out of food with another meal. Nothing was said. Stan had dropped back into a moody silence. He was watchful listening and always his hand was near his belt. He was typically the outlaw. Ball from Blind River.

After breakfast Stan let the dishes stand dirty. There was not enough water left to wash them. He sauntered out into the sunshine and stood watching the blue haze in the canyon below. Dona finally came out and sat on the other side of the entrance.

Noon came with a pleasant heat that was not oppressive but that warmed deeply. Dona had busied herself with a careful check of the country below. She was sure she had spotted the Pass Creek trail and that she could go to it if she escaped. Ball had stayed close enough to her so that any attempt to slip away would have been foolish.

He halted in making a turn across the little shelf and stood looking down at her. His eyes were expressionless and his lips formed a straight line.

"I'll make a bargain," he began. "And I won't listen," she cut in.

"I have food cached down the trail a half mile. I'll get it and replenish our supply of water. You need not go if you will promise to be here when I return. If you do not care to promise I'll take you along." His eyes searched her face rapidly.

Dona met his gaze squarely there was a chance. She did not owe this killer a promise kept. He did not deserve it. She got to her feet slowly. "I'll stay here," she answered.

"But I will get you if I can." "You will be here when I get back?" Stan held her eyes with his level gaze.

"I promise," Dona met his challenging glance fairly.

Without another word he saddled the black mare and rode out through the cleft of rock. Dona ran inside the cave and began to look about for any article she might need. Her eyes fell on the picture in the rock niche. She pulled it down and stuffed it under her jacket. Suddenly a thought struck her. Suppose Ball was only testing her and would be hiding just off the ledge? Then, too, she had promised him that she would stay. Her pride and sense of sportsmanship made her hesitate to slip away by breaking a promise. She wanted to capture Ball by her own efforts. If she slipped away he would leave the cave and make his escape fearing she would lead the posse to it.

Dona walked slowly out into the Third Attack Group at Practice Gives Spectators Rare Thrill in Flying Tactics

By STUART E. JONES
United Press Staff Correspondent
GALVESTON, Oct. 17.—Motorists driving along Galveston's broad West Beach at certain times often find themselves flagged to a stop by soldiers and given their choice of waiting 20 minutes or turning back to the city.

Those who wait find it worth their while. Pretty soon there will be a roar to the east and down along the water's edge will swoop three airplanes, traveling three miles a minute.

They may scare the motorists to death, but they won't hit them. Their business lies a few miles beyond, where cardboard silhouettes representing marching troops have been set up on the sand.

As they approach the targets the planes belch forth a hail of machine gun bullets picking up little puffs of sand. In about two minutes they have disappeared, soldiers have rushed out and set up more targets, and three more planes are roaring up.

Only One of Kind
These planes make up the Third Attack group, stationed at Fort Crockett, the only unit of its kind in the world. To the wary gentlemen in many nations who make a business of conducting the world's wars, the swift biplanes are of major importance.

Attack aviation is the latest addition to the science of military flying the other forms being observation, bombardment and pursuit. Attack planes zip along a few feet above the ground, "strafing", damaging or demoralizing troops on the march, planes not in use and anti-aircraft guns which are menacing their left-brethren.

This kind of flying saw little use in the world war. Occasionally a pilot, out of a lack swooped down and peppered the enemy trenches. The effect was so tremendous the general staff after the war put the air crop's best minds to work on the idea. The Third Attack group is the direct result.

The planes at Fort Crockett—54 when they are all in the air—are the product of 13 years of such planning. Lieut. Col. Horace M. Hickman commands the group. The groups pilots represent the pick of the entire air corps.

Galveston, which has grown fond of the group, soon must part with them. This section's extremely salt air has worked so harmfully on metal parts the group is to be transferred to Shreveport, La., where better facilities are to be had.

Big Spring—New $200,000 municipal building and auditorium opened recently.

Crosbyton—C. L. Dyer making improvements to interior of his grocery store.

Mexico Plans to Advertise Scenery

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 17.—Automobile owners in the United States next year may expect to receive many a beautiful picture of Mexican scenery. The department of industry is now receiving from chambers of commerce and similar organizations throughout the country photographs of the most attractive scenes in each community. Of these the best are to be included in booklets to be broadcast, especially in the Southwestern states of the United States, so that tourists may know something of what awaits them below the Rio Grande.

The first booklets probably will be sent out early in 1933 in anticipation of the formal opening of the Laredo-Mexico City highway scheduled for next July.

Hamlin—Johnson building being repaired.

Port Arthur—Plans made for erection of bridge on State Highway No. 87 across Keith Lake.

The Eyes of the Nation Are Turned Toward Texas

Three hundred Texans, battling against a thousand Mexican regulars, fought their way, inch by inch, for four days (Dec. 5 to Dec. 9, 1835), into San Antonio. The gallant Ben Milam was killed, but the victory was complete.

Let's Hold "Open House" and Invite the World in 1936

Texans have a right to be proud of the heritage of heroic tradition which is theirs. And they justly take pride also in the record of progress which Texas has made since its independence was established on the battlefield.

The events of the Texas Revolution stirred the hearts of all Americans a hundred years ago. Today the whole nation is turning its eyes toward Texas because of the remarkable growth it has been achieving.

The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Texas independence provides a fitting occasion to invite the world to visit us and see what we have done with our freedom and to behold the immense resources which still remain to be developed.

The Centennial Exposition will leave many permanent and worth-while monuments. The roads which will be laid to conduct our visitors over the State will endure for years to come. The buildings and grounds themselves will doubtless remain as public parks and community centers. And the visions of Texas' splendid future will bring us a rich heritage of men and women moving here to become adopted Texans in a State of so heroic a past and so glorious a future.

MARKET ENDS WEEK WITH SHARP RALLY

In its weekly review of business and financial conditions The Wall Street Journal says:

Rapid price swing and abrupt reversals of trend characterized last week's stock market, but the week ended on a dynamic rally. Pessimism was prevalent as the week started, and stocks reacted to new lows for the current reaction. At their bottom prices, the Dow-Jones rail and industrial averages showed the market, as a whole, had retraced about 50 per cent of the ground gained in the sparkling recovery between early July and early September.

So far as news was concerned the week's gist of developments affecting the markets was not unfavorable. Railroad loading reported by individual carriers like New York Central, Pennsylvania, Atchafalaya and others, were somewhat more favorable than anticipated. They all reported loadings for the week ended October 8 slightly better than for the week ended October 1, contrary to the usual seasonal decline. September earnings reports, which are to be made by the end of the month, are bound to be strikingly better than the August statements. The railroads, generally, are still a long way from earning anything on their junior securities, but the upturn in traffic has benefited all carriers substantially.

Electric output figures, for the most recent week, were slightly above those for the week ended October 1, and the decline from the similar week of 1931 showed no change. Utility stocks, in Friday's rally, staged good gains, partly at the expense of the shorts.

The Texas Railroad commission in ordering a drastic reduction in crude oil output, to take effect October 15, brought about a complete change in the picture presented by the oil industry. Whereas a cut in the price of crude oil in the area had been threatened, the commission's action was followed by price advances, strengthening the industry's price structure.

The steel industry started the week operating at 18 1/2 per cent of capacity compared with 17 1/2 per cent in the preceding week. The United States Steel Corp. was credited with a rate of 19 per cent with independents a fraction over 19 1/2 per cent.

The real support for expanding operations continued to be the small user of miscellaneous products. Automobile companies and railroads, despite the promise of more business, failed to enter the market in an important way.

The week's range of the Dow-Jones averages was:

High	Low	Close
30 Industrials	$63.84	$57.67	$63.84
20 Railroads	27.71	23.38	27.71
20 Utilities	25.16	25.25	27.68
40 Bonds	80.14	79.32	79.67

LOBO PASSING GAME CLICKS FOR 16-6 WIN
By FRANK LANGSTON
With the air full of footballs, the Cisco Lobos downed the Daniel Baker freshmen here Saturday night, 16 to 6. It was the first game of the season in which the Big Dam team has taken to the air on the assumption that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points, but this time they seemed to complete passes at will.

The Lobos were using Elkins' new single wingback and a short punt formation for most of their gains. Besides the forward passes they used a number of laterals and double passes with success, showing more than in either of the two other games of the season that they are an offensive as well as a defensive team.

The first score came in the opening quarter when Rutledge made a beautiful catch of McCall's pass, placing the ball on the Hill Billies' 8 yard marker. On the second play McCall carried it over for a touchdown. Garrett's kick was wide but Daniel Baker was offside and Cisco was awarded the extra point.

In the second period Barker took a punt on the Daniel Baker 45 yard stripe and returned it to the 17. McCall lost a yard at left end and Barker failed to gain. Then Daniel Baker drew a 5 yard penalty and Barker slipped through a hole in the line and needed a foot for first down. Caffrey placed the ball on the 7 yard line for first and goal, and on third down Van Horn took McCall's pass in the corner of the end zone for a touchdown.

The Lobos added two more points to their score in the last quarter when Daniel Baker's punt was partially blocked and then rolled backwards over the end zone for a safety.

The lone score for the visitors came when Snodgrass, Hillbillie back, took a pass from behind his own goal for 97 yards and a touchdown. It was a beautiful catch and a run of 65 yards. Whitehead's kick was weak.

After going all the first half without either a forward pass or a first down, the freshmen tried desperately to overcome the Cisco lead in the last quarter, and with the Lobos' second and third stringers in the game, were able to score one touchdown just before the game closed.

A review of the game shows that the Cisco team attempted 13 forward passes of which 6 were complete for a total of 53 yards. Five were incomplete and two were intercepted. This is gratifying to those fans who have looked for a spectacular offensive team.

Penalties.
Cisco also owes a part of the ground gained to penalties. The freshmen were penalized seven times for a total of 75 yards. Two penalties were for 25 yards each. Cisco was penalized 6 times for a total of 40 yards.

Early in the first quarter Cisco threatened to score, going to the Daniel Baker 13 yard line, only to lose the ball on downs.

In the second period the boys in gold took the ball down to the enemy 16 yard stripe, passing over the goal line for a touchdown.

Throughout the game play was in the Hillbillies' territory. Once in the second half a Lobo punt was grounded on the goal line, which put the visitors in a bad way for a while, for their kick was straight up and gave the ball back to the Lobos on the Daniel Baker 10 yard stripe.

Coach Elkins has brought his team along slowly, teaching the boys until he was hurt in the second quarter and had to be taken out. O. Adams at center was valuable in backing up the line.

Following is the starting lineup:
Brownwood. Cisco.
3—Brown. Rutledge—28
19—Perry. Left End. Latch—48
6—M. Adams. Left Tackle. Garrett—34
21—O. Adams. Left Guard. Cearley—56

Stronger This Week.
With Ray back in the game this week end the backfield will be considerably strengthened, and the whole club should click together better. In Ray's absence Saturday Barker ran the team well and was good on running plays and in returning punts. Although he started somewhat slowly this year he has improved rapidly and is now a valuable back.

McCall showed real form in passing, as did Bill Rutledge in taking his heaves. Rutledge appears to have settled down to steady playing and made several good tackles Saturday, as well as doing good offensive work. The entire line worked well in opening up holes for Lobo backs and in keeping Daniel Baker's total yardage from scrimmage down to a 31 yard loss. Which may mean that the Big Dam is not applied to the Cisco forward wall very badly after all.

For the visitors Snodgrass, who scored the touchdown, was the outstanding man, although he did not start the game. Sullivan was good in three at one time — two males one a big fellow, and one female.

He said he got a real kick of catching the three. "But I get the greatest kick out of the benefit it is to the farmers and ranchmen," he said. He estimates that he has saved the county thousands of dollars worth of fowls and small livestock that would otherwise have been destroyed by these wolves.
