SMITH STATEMENT OPPOSED IN SOUTH

Chinese Warn Invasion of Settlement May Be Necessary

JAP PROPOSAL IS REGARDED SKEPTICALLY

War's shadow lengthened over Shanghai today as shots struck within the international settlement in the continued Japanese Chinese battle and Chinese forces warned they might invade the settlement if they deemed it necessary to pursue the Japanese attackers.

To this new threat against the foreign colony in Shanghai, Brig-Gen. George Fleming, Britisher, in charge of the settlement defense forces told the Chinese such a course would bring from the defenders the word to shoot down the Chinese pursuers.

Meantime Japanese still hammered to loosen the Chinese grip on the mud forts of Woosung.

On the diplomatic front the Washington government was known to view with mixed feelings of skepticism and concern a Japanese proposal for establishing neutral zones around the main Chinese cities. Without officially commenting, government sources expressed amazement at the Japanese maneuver which was frankly viewed in the light of an attempt to partition China contrary to previous assurances against such a course.

The John Tarleton basket ball team comes to Cisco tomorrow evening for a return game with the Randolph college Badgers at the college gymnasium. The Tarleton team were basket ball champions of their loop last year and have made a good record this season.

In the first meeting between the Plowboys and the Randolph quintets at Stephenville a few weeks ago an extra period was necessary to determine the winner. The Badgers had lead most of the way but were beaten out in the extra period after a hotly contested struggle.

Next Friday evening the Badgers go to Abilene for a game with A. C. C.

Meanwhile the Randolph Kittens will entertain the Fort Worth Bordon Ice company at the high school gymnasium Thursday evening and the Dallas Shoe company team, captained by Thelma Russell, Saturday evening at 3 o'clock at the same place.

Theater Man Is Kidnaped, Robbed

LUBBOCK, Feb. 8.—C. C. Lindsey, manager of two theaters here, walked five miles back to town today and reported to police he was abducted and robbed of $1,029 and his car last night.

Lindsey said an armed, unmasked bandit, came to his home, robbed him of $29, then forced him to drive to one of the theaters where Lindsey was forced to open the safe and yield $1,000 in cash.

Lindsey then was forced to drive his own car five miles north of Lubbock where he was released.

The bandit left in Lindsey's car.

DIVER SEES BODIES MOVE IN SUBMARINE

PORTLAND, Eng., Feb. 8.—Francis tugging at the signal lines brought a veteran British diver to the surface off Portland today almost overcome by witnessing an apparent movement of bodies aboard the submerged submarine M-2.

The diver said bodies of two senior officers, trapped beneath the half-open hatch of the conning tower, appeared to move toward him. Almost overcome he signaled for a quick return to the surface.

The discovery confirmed the view of naval authorities that the door of the sea plane hangar aboard the M-2 was opened as the submarine dived and that the consequent rush of water caused the disaster.

MOST TEXAS CONGRESSMEN ESCAPE RACES

By GORDON K. SHEARER (United Press Staff Correspondent)

AUSTIN, Feb. 8.—Most of Texas' eighteen congressmen face the prospect of escaping a race for reelection — thanks to the failure of the legislature to redistrict the state.

Three congressmen will be elected at large. The result is that most candidates with an urge to go to congress announce for the general race rather than match a single handed fight with the home congressman.

Tentative announcements of candidacy are being made so rapidly that a list scarcely can be kept up to date.

Congressional candidates and candidates at large from the existing districts include:

First district — Congressman Wright Patman, of Texarkana. J. H. (Cyclone) Davis, is a candidate for Congressman at large.

Second district — Congressman John C. Box, of Jacksonville, opposed by George B. Terrell, of Alto, former state agricultural commissioner and state representative.

Third district — Congressman Morgan G. Sanders of Canton, apparently is so far without a local opponent and none from the district has announced in the race for congressman-at-large.

Fourth district — Congressman Sam Rayburn, of Bonham, has been relieved of threatened opposition from State Senator J. J. Loy who, it is now said, will run for district judge.

Fifth district — Congressman Hatten W. Summers is without a district opponent, though three likely candidates for congressman at large have been mentioned from the district. They are Jed Adams, national democratic committeeman; State Senator George Puri and Sterling P. Strong, all of Dallas.

Sixth district — Congressman Luther Johnson, of Corsicana, apparently has a district with no aspirants.

Seventh district — Congressman Clay Stone Briggs, of Galveston who was recently opposed by Senator T. J. Holbrook, of Galveston, may see Holbrook entered in the race for congressman at large, this time, close friends of Holbrook say.

Eighth district — Congressman Daniel E. Garrett, of Houston first went to Washington as congressman-at-large, being elected to that place in 1912 and 1916. After redistricting he has been the uninterrupted congressman from the eighth district. He is a relative by marriage of Jess H. Jones, member of the federal reconstruction finance corporation. Former Mayor Oscar

FORMER DALLAS SHERIFF STARTS LEGAL BATTLE

WAXAHACHIE, Feb. 8.—Schuyler B. Marshall, Jr., former sheriff of Dallas county, Monday will open his legal fight which he hopes will vindicate him of charges that he attempted to rob the F. & M. State bank at Ferris last Nov. 17.

His case is the first called for trial here, while three of his alleged accomplices also have their cases set for trial. They are Robert Seales, Dallas clubman who formerly was a favorite among Dallas society girls; J. Robert Kelly and H. W. McBride. This quartet also is charged with robbery growing out of the alleged kidnaping and robbery of Bob Cunningham, night watchman at Ferris, the same night.

Both prosecuting and defense attorneys have announced they are ready to proceed with the case of Marshall.

As the former Dallas sheriff has claimed the charges are "trumped up and resulting from a political frameup," it is expected the trial may reflect a decided element of Dallas county politics.

Special arrangements have been made to accommodate a large crowd in the courtroom of District Judge Tom Ball. Trial of the colorful sheriff is expected to last four or five days.

The state, in its attempt to convict Marshall, will rely greatly on the testimony of alleged accomplices.

Gang Leader Slain By His Own Men

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Vincent Coll, 23-year-old gang leader, reportedly to have a $50,000 price on his head, was shot and killed today, apparently "put on the spot" by his own body guard.

Coll recently was acquitted of a charge of murder in connection with the killing of a five-year-old child in Harlem during a gang shooting.

REPUBLICANS MORE HOPEFUL OVER CHANCES

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—A quick shout of opposition from the south has greeted Alfred E. Smith's statement that he was willing to run again for president if the party desired.

The theme of this opposition is that Smith had his chance in 1928 and should now step aside and give someone else a chance. The danger of the party's committing "political suicide" was suggested. Smith's move is viewed here as directly menacing the chances of his old friend and political ally, Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York.

Many democrats, foreseeing a catastrophe if such a situation develops, are coming to favor elimination of both principals.

This development already has privately given tremendous encouragement to friends of Speaker John N. Garner, of Texas, and Newton D. Baker, of Ohio. All of which is being watched with not very well concealed glee by the republicans. They have been depressed over their chances of late, now they are beginning to be hopeful that their old slogan "We can always count on the democrat to help us," is about to hold true again.

Republican National Chairman Fess, commenting on the Smith statement, predicted the democrats would "provide a show worth seeing." It was the most cheerful Monday morning the republicans had had in months.

DAILY BIBLE THOUGHT

FAITH AND WORKS:—Trust in the Lord, and do good: so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.—Psalm 37: 3.

WE LEARN HARD.

Taxpayers, indifferent as they are at times, have been spurred to action during the present dilemma through organizations which have sprung up all over the state in protest against the high cost of government—taxation to be more explicit. Taxpayers associations have been formed in every section of the state. This is a period of organized protest.

During times of prosperity, when people are busily engaged in making and spending money, little or no attention whatever is paid to the functions of government. Costly and wasteful practices are allowed to creep in unnoticed. Once established, they are hard to correct. Unless something goes radically wrong, people seldom think of the governmental machine and the men they have.

But when a period of adversity is upon us, when penny-pinching is a necessity, we begin to think, to express our indignation.

We find, for instance, that the public money is used to pay "traveling expenses" of state employes as is paid in salaries; we find department heads and employes riding around in expensive cars furnished by the state. Yes, we find the government is virtually "on wheels." We find other things, such as duplicative offices which could and should be abolished. We find many employes working at jobs which serve no useful purpose.

And we rise in protest, demanding new economies in the administration of government. These demands—some of them at least—will be carried out. Economies will be effected that will carry over into the prosperous years.

We have learned much in the past few years; we will learn much more in the next few years. We learn hard, but we do learn, and that is important right now.

LET'S SMOOTH THE WAY.

It is generally agreed that the depression has touched bottom; that from now on out things will improve—or at least they should.

Much has been said and written about present-day conditions. The President of the United States has called upon the people to cease hoarding money and to put some of it into circulation as an aid to recovery.

People who have money have been afraid to turn it loose, there is no doubt about that. They have put off buying the things they really need because of a feeling of uncertainty. Fear and lack of confidence have been the forces which have delayed the return of normalcy more than anything else.

Right now the need is for a return of confidence. No other agency can do so much to allay fear and restore this confidence as a well planned advertising campaign. After almost two and a half years of reluctant and fearful buying wardrobes have depleted and property is deteriorated to an unprecedented extent. Advertising can, and advertising should, strike a note of confidence—confidence that this is the time to buy, confidence that more has never been offered for so little, confidence in the wisdom and the economy of buying now.

Fill the papers of Texas with advertising of a constructive, confidence-building character, and the way will be smoothed for economic recovery. There is money to be spent in Texas; there is merchandise to be sold. Advertising must prepare the grounds where the two may meet.

PAYING THE FIDDLER.

Agriculture is being hailed as showing some of the most definite signs of returning health displayed by any industry in a long while. Perhaps agriculture is recovering sooner from the depression because it has had it longer.

Agriculture is literally the business bread and butter of our country. If the farmer isn't getting enough for his products to pay for the feed he must use, the machinery he must buy, to have anything left over to replace these things and a surplus to provide comforts and clothing for his family, who is going to support the local merchant—to say nothing of the banker, the baker, and candlestick maker?

A newer and more dangerous development of the situation in which we find ourselves is evidenced by such outbreaks as milk price wars which have been raging around large city markets. It is in times like these that the consumer is able to appreciate the value of a great stabilizing force, such as the Dairywomen's League Cooperative Association of New York. The lower drops the price of a commodity like milk—the more imperative quality control methods, as practiced by organized dairymen, become.

No one benefits, in the long run, from profitless prices for farm products—and organized effort through strong, loyally supported cooperatives has proven to be the farmer's best economic ally.

OTHER OPINIONS

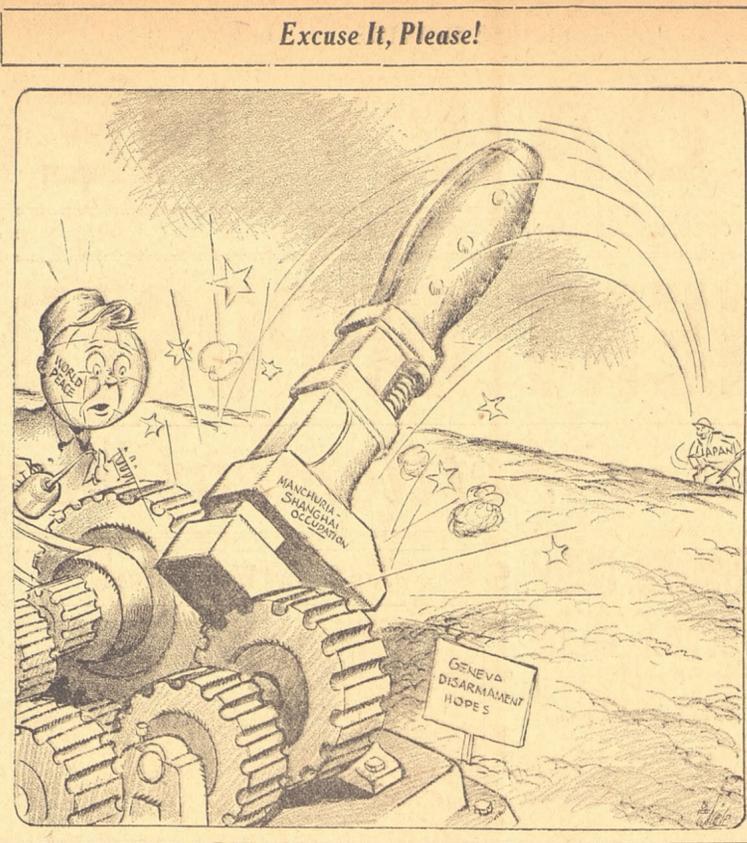

UNSALEING THE GREAT SALT LAKE

Shall Utah's famous Great Salt Lake lose its saltiness? A news report says a plan to convert part of this inland sea into a freshwater lake is being pushed by the Utah Society of Engineers and other organizations. The project had its origin with Count Ferdinand de Lesseps, the energetic French engineer who built the Suez Canal and started the one in Panama. By building dikes across the huge saline pond in the Ute country the principle of the lake into which the principal tributaries flow could be walled off and would become fresh the Count calculated. Subsequent investigation points to two possible locations for the dike. When one contemplates such projects, the dikes that keep Holland dry, the ditches that drain the Everglades, the dredging and dumping that filled the Chicago lake front, the levee building that disciplines the Mississippi river, the construction of harbor works such as those of the new port, Gdynia, in Poland, and the piling up of concrete that is to make Boulder Dam cannot but be impressed with what a large volume of human activity is concerned with removing portions of the earth's crust from where they are to somewhere else.

Early there has been more inclination than formerly to question each such project, and especially many smaller ones, to determine whether their usefulness justifies the expenditure. In the western United States certain lakes have been drained for "reclamation" only to find the original lake with its wild life was more valuable than swampy "farm" land. No doubt the Great Salt Lake project will be carefully scrutinized. Presumably such a reservoir would provide a water supply for city uses or irrigation not now available.

The builder of the long railroad trestle across Great Salt Lake which is quite an engineering marvel, is related to have said to a younger engineer: "There is practically nothing that is impossible from an engineering standpoint; the question is whether a project is economically feasible." In other words will the return justify the outlay. With the conveniences of modern invention at their hands, men are asking this question about many other interest besides construction—in recreation, transportation, production education, and so forth. Of the many things that men know how to do, which are most worth the doing?—Christian Science Monitor.

TEXAS TOPICS

By RAYMOND BROOKS

AUSTIN, Feb. 8.—Cone Johnson of Tyler, one of the state's outstanding constitutional lawyers, a man familiar with the primary election law and its growth from the day it saw light, has investigated the question of a free-for-all congressional scramble, and has reached a definite legal conclusion.

Here it is:

The state executive committee can file the candidates for numbered places.

It can require them to run that way, and to run in second primaries for plurality nomination.

It not only can but must set up rules to bring this election in harmony with the spirit of the primary nominating system.

If it doesn't number the places and require definite filings, somebody will outsmart it and win a nomination with maybe 30,000 out of the 700,000 to 800,000 primary votes.

And it would have to set aside the whole election, go through a lot of court procedure, and maybe deprive the state of part of its delegation.

Mr. Johnson is convinced that the executive committee will agree to require filing for numbered places. If so, he is certain all the candidates will comply with this, even if the requirement hasn't been tested in courts.

For this reason:

No candidate could afford to take a chance that the committee would be wrong. Those who could get a high vote could have no objection, since if the numbering plan were brushed aside they still would be the nominees, if they complied.

The numbering system could do the candidates no harm, but failing to comply with it they might hurt themselves, or failure of the committee to follow it might invalidate the whole attempted nomination of the three congressmen-at-large.

Texas will elect three congressmen-at-large, not by virtue of its own action, since it failed to pass any sort of a redistricting law; but only by the congressional act that said in the event of redistricting, there could be three congressmen elected for the entire state.

Importance of this is that no special statute governs the election of these officers. They are to be elected under general provisions of the state primary law. And that law provides that where more than one officer of a class is to be elected, they shall be elected for numbered places—as legislators in a district having more than one seat.

And elsewhere, Mr. Johnson pointed out, the general statutes require in any race for a nomination, the two highest candidates are required to go into a second primary and run against each other for the nomination.

Upshot of failing to comply with this, as he sees it, might be that out of the free-for-all the two highest candidates could run for a nomination; and then the state committee either would have to set the whole thing aside and start over, or else, with just one nomination, go about some other way to set up the other two.

Mr. Johnson is not a candidate for congress.

Dolphin Sub

For Polar Work

PARIS, Feb. 6.—Captain Sloan Danenhower, commander of the "Nautilus," has returned here to continue his study of arctic exploration possibilities. He made the prediction to the United Press that within two years some explorer will have attained the North Polar regions in a submarine.

The successful polar sub must be built to withstand the terrifically cold waters under the 16-foot ice shelf which is to be expected to dive like a dolphin, instead of sinking by the gradual filling of ballast tanks, and to navigate in open seas with speed and comfort.

"When we went to the northern seas last summer we were going to school," Danenhower said.

"We have the satisfaction of having made successful scientific observations however, and attained soundings and sample of sea-bottom which will permit us to start an accurate chart of the polar seas."

"Unlike the muddy seas off the coasts of the United States and France, the water around the pole is unusually clear. Even under the ice we were able to see 40 yards ahead of the ship, so that the next voyage under the ice will not be a blind dive in the dark."

Grand Prairie — Grand Prairie State bank acquired lease of building on corner of Main and Center streets and will soon move to new location.

Georgetown — Construction to start immediately on extensions to water mains in city.

The dime-a-dance girl

BY JOAN CLAUTON

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Beautiful Ellen Rossiter, who works by a day as a salesgirl in Barclay's Department Store, lives with her mother, Molly Rossiter, her elder sister, Myra, and her 12-year-old brother, Mike, Ellen's dead father, a younger son in a titled English family, left a comfortable fortune to provide for his wife and children, but irresponsible Molly soon went through the fortune. Since then the support of the household has developed upon the two sisters.

Molly foolishly spends the precious rent money to buy unnecessary clothes for Mike. At her mother's suggestion Ellen decided to work at night as a dance hall hostess until the sum is made up. She goes to Dreamland and interviews Jacob Salomon who offers her a job on condition that she supply her own evening dresses. She has no evening dress. Bitterly disappointed, she breaks the news to her mother.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Ellen had her feet planted firmly in her small world by the time she had seated herself. She had seen other girls pay the swift penalty for some inconsequential fault. She was prepared to pay it herself in dignity and in pride. She thought dimly that the important thing was to maintain her own course.

Never before had she exchanged a word with her employer. In her six years of service she had seen him no more than half a dozen times. Steven Barclay spent only two or three months a year in the store which bore his name; the other months he wandered restlessly about Europe adding to his collection of jewels. But Ellen had assumed, as her working mates had assumed, that he was responsible for the strictness of the store, the countless, fretting rules, the rigid discipline. She had youthfully hated him for that.

Barclay left her sitting at the rosewood desk, long and flanked with thin, slender vases of roses while he turned to close the door opening into his secretary's office. Ellen's heart took another downward dip. Her hands, folded in her lap, ached from their tight grip upon each other.

When Barclay sat down opposite her she raised her frightened eyes. She had been too really terrified before, too appalled, to attempt to draw any hope of a possible second chance from Steven Barclay's face or manner. But now, as she looked at him, she saw all at once that she had been wrong.

"This man did not intend to dismiss her. He leaned forward, his fine, lined face grave with sympathy.

"I hope," he began almost apologetically, "that you won't think I'm interfering in something which does not concern me. I am, of course. But perhaps you'll forgive me when I tell you that I can not seem to see an employee — to see someone so young as you are — in such trouble without attempting to learn if there is something I can do. Some way that I can help."

Ellen had been prepared for dismissal. She was not prepared for sympathy. For a moment revulsion of feeling made her actually dizzy. Her heart was suffocating her and she felt she could hardly breathe. But she forced herself to answer him.

"It's — it's nothing important," she managed at last to say that. It probably would be nothing to me. Obviously it's not that to you. But I do think it's something that can't be solved. Won't you tell me?"

At any other time Ellen would have withdrawn into the fastnesses of the Rossiter pride. Just then she had such an overwhelming need for sympathy, such an overwhelming need for the advice of someone older, someone responsible, that the whole story was out before she could check the rush of words. Myra and Bert, her mother and her disastrous shopping tour; Mike, delightful baby Mike, who should have his chance; the Brooklyn apartment and the countless harassing worries that beset two girls trying to balance on their slim shoulders the burden of a family all that and more she poured forth. She stopped at last in consternation. What had she said, lured by this man's intent interest? What had possessed her?

"So you see it's really nothing," she concluded stiffly. "Only the lack of an evening dress. I'm afraid I've drawn a dreadful picture. It's not a fair or truthful one. We have lots of fun. We love each other. Anyone would say that an evening dress wasn't important."

"I wasn't going to say that," Ellen felt suddenly annoyed with herself annoyed with Barclay, as though he had taken advantage of a moment of weakness to force an unwilling confidence. What real interest could a man who sailed for Europe to buy a single piece of jade feel in the petty, financial difficulties of one of his minor employees? Her cheeks grew hot.

She remembered that Jenny Elkins below in the basement had promised to care for her counter only for 10 minutes. She glanced toward the door, longing to rush from the room.

Barclay noticed her restiveness and suspected her attitude. "No, I wasn't going to say that," he repeated. "I was going to tell you something about myself, something that might help you. Or I hope it will. Are you bored?"

Ellen quickly assured him she was not. She felt again and unwillingly his quiet spell, felt his lack of condescension, his simple assumption that they were equals and as equals, could solve her problem. But how? What possible help could she accept from him?

"Don't think of me as a rich man," he was saying. "Think of me as I was at your age, trying to support a young wife and a young baby on $15 a week in the days when $15 a week meant more than it does now but not enough more. My wife wanted a dress too. She wanted a pink dress with ribbons. She looked a little like you, had that same quick way of turning her head. And they were wearing silk and ribbons when she wanted the dress."

Ellen forgot Jenny Elkins in the basement. She had not known that Barclay had been poor. It was hard to imagine that distinguished gray man who wore clothes so carefully cut, so indicative of wealth in such a role. But she could visualize clearly the young wife who had wanted a pink dress with pink ribbons.

"No one offered to give her that dress," Barclay continued. "If anyone had I'm sure we both would have refused it. — We were proud you understand — proud as you are proud. I was going to become a rich man — going to buy her dozens upon dozens of dresses." He hesitated and added almost roughly "She was dead — dead with my young son before she ever had a pink dress."

Ellen gave a distressed little cry. "We had fun too," he told her. "Much the same sort of fun you and your brother, Mike, and your sister, Myra, are having now. But if we'd only been less stiff-necked, less afraid of the motives of other people, how much easier it would have been."

"Afrald?" The heavy Rossiter brows rose in two peaks.

"Young people haven't changed much in spite of all the shouting," Barclay observed obliquely. "They're still afraid, aren't they, to accept a favor to do a greater favor? They're just as suspicious, just as conventional and every bit as proud. You I'm sure, would never allow me to give you a lift. You wouldn't allow me, would you, to give you one dress from a store which has hundreds of them? You'd rather hug your troubles to yourself, worry yourself sick, wouldn't you? You'd rather be selfish."

"I'm afraid I would," Ellen admitted. Barclay's smile was rueful. He made one more attempt.

"You know, of course, that you are depriving me of a great pleasure. Are you sure you have that right?" Ellen felt confused. Was it possible that she was too stiff-necked as he had accused her of being, too conventional, too careful, entirely? Then she decided, as quickly as there was almost no pause before she answered, that even if she were it was too late to change.

"I'm sure I have that right," she said. Her tone was resolute but she softened it with a glance of shy merriment.

The man considered a moment. His face cleared and when he smiled almost as he had looked to his young wife. She had thought him handsome and distinguished before but separated from her by miles of spiritual distance, separated from her by many years and by great wealth. For the first time she saw him not as her employer but as a man.

"Well, if you want, you won't!" he said decisively. "It may be that young girls should be suspicious of older men bearing gifts — I don't know. But I've thought of a compromise. Surely you can't refuse to borrow a dress!"

"Certainly. Don't look so astounded. We seldom sell the gowns that the models wear. You'll borrow one of them and return it when your engagement is over."

as ringing a bell, Steven Barclay had settled the problem of where the Rossiter rent was to come from. With the help of a borrowed dress it was coming from Dreamland.

A few minutes later a saleswoman arrived with a lovely cargo of evening dresses. Steven Barclay had dipped away. Ellen was alone in the office. She appreciated the department store owner's tact and his wisdom. Barclay's was notoriously a hothead of gossip. The tiniest incident that involved Steven Barclay was always of abnormal interest to his employees. Fortunately the saleswoman who brought the gowns was placidly incurious.

The next 15 minutes were sheer heaven for Ellen. She had never owned an evening gown, evening gowns being one of the items invariably missing from Aunt Myra's boxes. She had not known it would be such fun to select a gown only because it made her beautiful.

She stood before a long mirror and held up before herself, one by one, gowns that she was convinced were the loveliest in the world. It was pure bliss to see that, although line and color seemed almost to change her personality as they did change her appearance not even the trying burnt orange or the deep tawny could down the triumphant flush of her clear skin or deafen her bright hair.

When she came upon the gown of ivory taffeta she knew she had found her dress. It did not make her a duchess. It did not make her mysterious. It only made her Ellen Rossiter, a girl of 20, clear-eyed and clear-skinned, a girl with slender hands and slender feet, beautiful but more than that, a girl who was genuine and secure in her own personality.

There were no ornaments, no frills on Ellen's dress. It was only white taffeta falling to the floor. But it had been made in France by a great couturier who called his creation "Jeune Fille."

Barclay returned after Ellen had seen the other gowns carried away.

He glanced at the ivory taffeta over her arm. He hesitated and then said:

"I'm glad you selected that one." As Ellen looked into his eyes she saw with a little shock, half of fear and half of strange pride, that life was suddenly becoming exciting. (To Be Continued)

POCKET WAR SHIPS IDEAS FOR TANKER

LONDON, Feb. 8. — Utilizing some of the lessons learned in the construction of the new German "pocket battleships," British naval designers have constructed a small oil tanker which experts claim may revolutionize tanker construction.

The experimental tanker is the Ben Sadler and she has been built by the Rowledge Iron Works for the National Benzole company.

The peculiarity of her construction is that her tanks for carrying oil have been built separately from the hull and the plates comprising both the hull and the tanks have been welded together instead of riveted.

The designers have thus put into practice a system of welding such as was used in the construction of the German "pocket battleships." It is estimated that by welding instead of riveting the designers have saved nearly 30 per cent in weight.

Not only has there been a great saving in weight, but it is claimed that by building the tanks separate from the hull the life of the hull can be doubled. This is due to the fact that in the ordinary tankers the gasoline is in direct contact with the hull of the vessel. Gasoline causes rapid corrosion. In many tankers it has been found that after 12 years the corrosion has been so great that the hulls have been so weakened as to be dangerous, while the rest of the vessel still is good for long service.

BEWARE THE COUGH OR COLD THAT HANGS ON

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action: it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the infected membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

DECLINES ARE EXPERIENCED BY LEADERS

In its weekly review of business and financial conditions The Wall Street Journal says:

In the absence of any encouragement regarding business prospects the leading stocks experienced general declines during the past week. Reports from the steel industry showed that production was losing ground following last month's moderate upturn.

Freight traffic figures, electrical consumption statistics, and other reliable trade indexes, reflected a business movement that was running consistently below the corresponding period last year. Advances from the heavy industries, and from lines producing capital goods were unenthusiastic, and this situation reacted unfavorably on stock market sentiment.

Probably the principal influence actuating selling in the main body of stocks was the feeling in speculative quarters that advancing tendencies would be restrained by existing economic conditions until an opportunity had been afforded to determine the effectiveness of the Reconstruction Finance Corp., in restoring public confidence. However, considerable optimism was entertained by important banking interests regarding the outlook in this respect. Influential accumulation was expected to come into the market on any indications that trade was responding to the stimulation of credit supplies from the new government agency.

Developments in the steel industry were disappointing to those who were looking for some early manifestation of buying against spring requirements. Operations for the industry at large dropped to 26 1-2 per cent of capacity, compared with 28 per cent in the preceding week. The decline reflected irregularity in demands from the auto makers who have been the chief sustaining influence in the market for the past month.

It is obvious that until Ford's plans are known the other low-priced producers of cars are not going ahead with operations in the face of present uncertain prospects in the business situation. Some tapering off in steel buying has developed out of this hesitancy. In the meantime, railroads, now that they have obtained their wage cut are not opening up with anything but minor orders. Until carriers can see signs of a small increase in traffic they are not prepared to give away the advantages they have obtained by making large scale improvements to their property, and this weakening their current financial position.

With these two major lines following a cautious policy, smaller consumers of steel can see no incentive for making speculative commitments and, like the larger consumers, are adopting a waiting attitude. The price situation in the steel industry naturally has grown no better, and concessions are being granted where volume justifies it.

BRUSHING UP SPORTS . . . By Laufer

THEY ALL LAUGHED WHEN FLINT RHEM vowed that his affection for a teammate caused him to break training rules. Old Grover Alexander, star pitcher of the Cardinals, had the habit of nightly meandering and Rhem always kept him company. Alex evidently could stand up under more pressure than Flint—and when Flint came to the park in no condition to pitch, he said he had kept temptation from Alex by consuming it all himself. An even louder laugh was afforded by Flint, when shortly before the 1930 world series, it was reported he had been kidnaped by mysterious strangers and forced, at the point of a revolver, to imbibe that which does a noble athlete no good. The Cardinals were in the stretch drive for the pennant and it cost Manager Gabby Street restless hours. It cost Flint a stiff fine, but he got a chance to pitch in a world series game.

"Keep Kissable" Girl Is Texas Lassie

TEMPLE, Feb. 8. — The "Keep Kissable" girl of cigaret advertising is a Texas lassie, according to Southwest Advertising, a trade magazine.

The January issue of the magazine said Miss Ariane Jeannett Allen, of Temple who attended the University of Texas in 1930, is the "Keep Kissable" girl who is pictured in advertisements as having preserved her osculating abilities through smoking a brand of cigarets.

Miss Allen is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Allen. She is 19 and had never posed for an advertisement illustration until she was persuaded to pose for the "Keep Kissable" picture.

As a result she has had many girl-show stage offers but she has turned them down, choosing to continue her studies for the dramatic stage.

ILLINOIS PLANS COURT TEST ON HORSE RACING

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 8.— Future of horse racing in Illinois is at stake in litigation organizing in the Madison county circuit court at Edwardsville and which seeks to test the validity of a state law which permits pari-mutuel betting.

The test case was brought by State Senator James O. Moore, Collinsville, who recently pleaded guilty to four counts in connection with the alleged violation of the racing law and was sentenced to four days' imprisonment. He has appealed.

Monroe was tried on charges of staging a horse racing meet after the regular Fairmount meeting at East St. Louis and of holding one of the races after sundown.

Illegal Operation.
 The law which Monroe seeks to test is the one which permits the operation of pari-mutuel betting systems. If the statute is found to be invalid it will mean that the tracks will be unable to operate legally with the betting machines.

Abolishment of the betting machines would end the wagering side of the racing game, legally at least, and would remove what is perhaps one of the most attractive features. With the betting angle outlawed it is freely admitted there would be little left to draw the crowds as it is the wagering that lures fans to tracks. And without the wagering the track management would be shy those substantial commissions it collects from the betting pools.

Horse racing is "big business" in Illinois with millions of dollars invested in six tracks through the state. One of the most expensive is at Arlington Park, near Chicago. It is estimated this track represents an expenditure of $3,000,000. Several other parks in the metropolitan area and the Fairmount oval at East St. Louis also represent huge outlays.

Fair Aided.
 To date no test has ever been made of the racing law which was enacted several years ago. Under the law state revenue derived from the operation of tracks is distributed to county fairs for premium funds.

That the supreme court is interested in the case is seen in its recent action in which, though it permitted the Thornton Dog Racing Club, Chicago, to withdraw an appeal in the case originating in Cook county, it declined to allow withdrawal of records and briefs which had been submitted.

Test of the law will be based on the ground that it is discriminating, being the position of those who support dog racing that it is just as fair, to race dogs as it is to race horses.
