MANY SERIOUS DISEASES DUE TO HOUSE FLY

Continuing its campaign against flies the city health department today issued a statement in which it pointed out that many of the most serious diseases with which science has to fight are spread by house flies.

"Of the diseases which may be transmitted by flies," said the statement, "the following are worthy of our consideration: Typhoid fever, diarrhea, enteritis, cholera, dysentery, paratyphoid fever, tuberculosis, intestinal parasitic infections, sleeping sickness and trachoma.

"It is now believed that trachoma and other eye diseases may be transmitted by the fly.

"The natural enemies of flies are wasps, lizards, toads and spiders. These natural enemies are not capable of keeping down the fly menace because flies are extremely prolific. The life cycle is but a few days and maturity is from three to four days from date of birth.

"Flies feed and propagate in filth. The range of flight is usually not great, about two or three hundred yards from the place of origin. Therefore, if flies are found in a particular neighborhood it is fair proof that they developed in the immediate vicinity. Cow lots poorly fed, unscreened dry toilets, wet garbage, decaying vegetables or other filth such as unscreened dry toilets.

Over $15,000 Relief Distributed by Red Cross in Eastland County

A total of $15,350 was distributed in the form of relief to needy persons in Eastland county by the Red Cross during the four months just ended, a report of the group relief activities of the Eastland county chapter just released by J. E. Spencer, chapter chairman, reveals.

This relief was extended to 1,000 families numbering 5,528 persons and was made available by the branch office of the Red Cross at St. Louis and its distribution supervised by Mr. Spencer and carried out through the organization of community committees.

As chairman of the Eastland county chapter of the American Red Cross, and in view of the fact that the drought program administering relief to drought sufferers has just been closed, I deem it entirely appropriate and advisable to submit at this time at least a brief summarized report of what has been done in our county during the past four months by the American Red Cross in the hope that our citizenship as a whole will not fail to take proper cognizance and fully appreciate the relief work done throughout this county by this, the world's greatest humanitarian and disaster relief organization.

The inefficiency of the relief program carried out in Texas and in this county occurred in December, 1930, at which time the Southwest branch manager, Wm. M. Baxter, Jr., of St. Louis, realizing the general distressed condition throughout this area due to the drought, and from information already obtained as a result of the seed distribution program carried on by the organization during the early fall, anticipated that relief might be needed in this particular area; whereupon he made request that a general survey of the county be made and the actual conditions, needs, and demands be ascertained.

Acting upon his request immediate steps were taken to enlarge and strengthen our county organization through the formation of disaster relief committees. My preliminary efforts in forming this organization met with a very hearty and unstinted response from the various communities of Eastland county, and I found the leading citizens in each community most ready and willing to cooperate with me and devote their time and energy to this much needed and highly important work.

Survey Made. Following the organization of these committees, a survey was promptly made to determine the extent of the distressed conditions and the number of families who might be in actual need of the bare necessities of life. The result of this survey was appalling. The information thus obtained disclosed that approximately 1000 families were found to be in distress or in dire need of assistance, which information revealing the condition was promptly transmitted to the St. Louis office. In the meantime, however, prior to the completion of the general survey, I secured and furnished to the St. Louis branch office sufficient information to satisfy myself and that office that relief work was imperative. Immediately upon receipt of this information, a preliminary grant of $20,000 was awarded and made available to our chapter and relief work was promptly begun on January 24th.

When our survey of the actual conditions in the county was completed and our report received by the St. Louis office showing approximately 1000 families in distressed conditions, we were promptly awarded an additional cash grant, which was made available by wire for our immediate use, and by this time the work was fully organized and well under way. Additional cash grants were made from time to time until a total of $15,350.00 cash was received by the chapter and the work progressed without interruption during the entire program. In addition to the cash grants, we received and distributed 1000 packages of garden seed of eighteen varieties to the county. The distribution of this sum of money necessarily entailed a responsibility not only by the county chairman, but also by the various volunteer committees charged with such responsibility throughout the county. The committee as a whole undertook to be fair and unbiased toward each and every applicant. Fairtaking investigations had to be made in all instances where the true conditions of the families were not known to the committee. Certainly, some mistakes may have been made, but it is my opinion that on the whole the relief extended was deserved, and, but for such relief having come as it did, great suffering would have existed throughout the county.

Appreciation. We hope that the citizenship of Eastland county can and will not

CLAIM HEIGHT OF 10 MILES IS REACHED

INNSBRUCK, Austria, May 28. — Prof. Auguste Piccard, returned to civilization today after a balloon trip to the outer reaches of the earth's atmosphere announcing that he had reached a height of approximately 10 miles and achieved valuable scientific observations.

Piccard and his companion, Charles Kipfer, landed in the closed aluminum gondola of their balloon at about 10 o'clock last night on a glacial peak, 75 miles southeast of here. They spent the night on the glacier which is about 12,000 feet high and made their way toward the village of Gurgl perched in the mountain valleys.

Piccard and his companion arrived at Gurgl together. Gendarmerie were unable to say whether they missed the relief party by taking another route. Consequently the delicate scientific instruments in the gondola and the charts and observations of the trip were expected to be preserved to science. Piccard was reported to have returned to the mountain this afternoon to retrieve them. The local newspaper quoted him as saying the trip "was a great scientific success."

Piccard's trip in his oxygen chamber to the rarified and bitterly cold regions above the earth excited the delicate scientific instruments before the start and after his landing the quiet unobtrusive scientist was calm and, matter-of-fact insisting that as the father of four children he was not risking his life and was confident of the safety of his expedition. He was little thrilled by the record height he had achieved but exhibited quiet satisfaction over the scientific results obtained.

The fate of Auguste Piccard and Charles Kipfer, who left Augsburg, Bavaria, yesterday for the outer atmosphere of the earth in a balloon, was uncertain today.

Conflicting reports came from the Tyrol where the balloon wandered after its descent from the skies. All reports agreed that the balloon had come down in the Tyrolean Alps but were not definite on whether the men were dead or alive. Airplane observers reported sighting the wrecked balloon on a mountain peak but no signs of life. A news agency dispatch to Berlin, otherwise unconfirmed, said the two scientists were both alive and had met a party of rescuers announcing that they had risen 10 miles above the earth, a height never before achieved by man.

Officials of the Riedinger Balloon works which constructed Piccard's balloon, announced today that they definitely believed Piccard and Kipfer are dead atop a peak of the Gurgl Ferner mountains where they were reported sighted by airplane. The peak is called Ramoliskogel.

The balloon works received reports from Erano, Italy, that several Italian airplanes had flown over Ramoliskogel and seen the balloon but that there were no signs of its occupants.

An airplane landing on the peak was not feasible. A rescue party consisting of Austrian customs officials and farmers was sent to the scene. It was estimated they would require six hours to reach the peak.

HOOVER DISMISSES SPECIAL SESSION.

President Hoover will not call an extra session of the 72nd congress. He has his own program: "I know of nothing that would so disturb the healing process now undoubtedly going on in the economic situation. We cannot legislate ourselves out of a world economic depression. We can and will work ourselves out." And the reader is reminded that the economic depression hit America first when the bottom dropped out of the nationwide gambling riot and ruin came to millions. Now, the president has a slogan, "We can and will work ourselves out." There is no other way. It is impossible to legislate wealth into the pockets of the masses—and it would be impossible to legislate it into the pockets of the classes if special privilege legislation was sandbagged by the powers that be.

A GREAT RESERVOIR OF LIQUID CAPITAL.

There are six hundred member banks of the National Association of Mutual Savings banks. They have approximately $1,250,000 invested in railroad securities mostly in bonds. They have resolved approving efforts of railroads to increase their earnings through higher freight rates. Howard Biddulph is the president of the association. In an address he said "the way is now being prepared for industrial recovery." Pointing out that 13,000,000 persons had ten billion dollars deposited in Mutual Savings banks and that deposits in commercial banks, approximated $18,000,000,000. President Biddulph said it was "plain that the American people have in their savings alone a great reservoir of liquid capital." If the $18,000,000,000 could be turned into hard working dollars there would be jobs for the jobless American world over. But how to go about it appears to be puzzling the custodians of the billions of idle money.

MAYOR CERMAK HOLDS THE FORT.

Mayor Antony J. Cermak of Chicago faced 4000 striking city employees who deserted their jobs because a walking delegate said that Cermak had discharged 500 union men and replaced them with political supporters. Mayor Cermak refused to budge. He bluntly told the strikers that the man who said he had hired non-union workers or had discharged 500 union workers was a bald-faced liar and the truth was not in him. This settled the controversy. The 4000 who had walked out, reconsidered, and then walked in again. A man with a backbone is needed in high executive place. A "yes" man never made an efficient executive. It is the man who has the courage to say "no," when "no" is necessary, that makes a high level of achievement.

CAMPBELL WILL PLANT NO WHEAT.

Thomas B. Campbell is the owner of a 95,000 acre wheat farm in Montana. He is known as Wheat King Campbell, Incorporated. He taught the Russians how to plant wheat on a large scale. Now, he is at home again. As a temporary solution of the wheat problem Campbell, Incorporated, has let it be known that not one grain of wheat had been planted on his wheat ranches this spring. He suggests farmers abandon wheat and raise flax. Where the raising of flax is impractical he suggests the planting of beans. Campbell, Incorporated, knows the wheat business, or at least he thinks he knows it and he is going to stand from under.

AMERICA'S FRIGHTFUL DEATH TOLL.

According to the National Safety Council bulletin America's accidental death toll reached a total of 99,000 lives in 1930. It is the highest figure for any one year on record. There has been a steady increase each year since 1921. Three billion dollars is a modest estimate of the economic cost of a year of accidents in the United States and the sum represents direct cost only. Motor vehicle toll was 33,000 lives. Another all-time high record. Home fatalities ran a close second with approximately 30,000 deaths. Automobile fatality rate has increased 500 per cent since 1913 whereas the death rate for other accidents shows more than a 30 per cent decline. Thirty per cent of the motor drivers involved in fatalities were under 25 years of age. And get this:

Ninety-four per cent of drivers involved in fatal accidents were males, the oft criticized woman driver being involved in only six per cent of the deaths.

Speeding was a factor in 19 per cent of the injuries and 29 per cent of the fatalities. In at least one state more pedestrians were reported drunk than motorists. In addition to the death toll there were some 2,500,000 non-fatal injuries and the direct cost of accidents to industry were about $850,000,000. Large industrial plants are making by far the greatest strides in cutting down accidental injuries and deaths.

Sky travel appears to be less dangerous than road travel. Never sneer at the ace of the air. He is safer up above than he is down below.

AMERICAN CIGARETS "MADE IN GERMANY"

New York announces the formation of a new corporation, the German-American Tobacco company, for the manufacture in Germany of the popular American type of blended cigarettes. A big cigaret factory in Germany will be taken over by the Americans as the first step and the new organization will market its cigarettes in Germany on an extensive scale through the adoption of American methods of advertising and exploitation. Is this another step forward "to keep American money at home?" Uncle Sam and the state of Texas combined placed a tax of nine cents on popular brands of American-made cigarets. Is this one of the reasons for an invasion of Germany?

OTHER OPINIONS

A CATCH IN WAGE-CUT LOGIC

The sincerity of those advocating the balancing of industrial with agricultural income as a means of speeding business recovery need not be questioned. The belief that industrial wages should be reduced to the level of farm wages is natural. It is based on the 35 per cent drop in the average price of goods the farmer has to sell as contrasted with a 12-12 per cent decline in the price of goods he must buy. His consequent inability to consume industrial products is held to be a factor in current dullness.

In examining this argument for industrial wage cuts however, one is confronted with the fact that only about 25 per cent of the buying power of the 40,000,000-odd workers painfully employed in the United States is represented by employment in agriculture, forestry and husbandry. A considerably larger percentage is represented by workers in manufacturing, mechanical and transportation industries. To reduce the income of this larger portion of the country's workers would be to affect adversely the incomes also of professional people, and of those engaged in trade and clerical work. The total purchasing power so affected in all probability would represent between two and three times that of the farming community.

In view of this, it is difficult to accept the theory that if industrial proportionately reduced, the ability of farmers to buy would benefit business as a whole. It appears the increased buying power of the farmer would be more than offset by the decreased buying power of some three-quarters of the working population. So, again, reduction of income seems at best to provide an uncertain way out of depression. If on the other hand the income of industrial workers, and professional, clerical and trades people whose prosperity is interdependent with that of industrial workers, justifies the buying of things this vast number of people need or want, it should not be long before this demand for manufactured and farm products will be translated into increased income for raw material producers—among them the farmers.—Christian Science Monitor.

In the Political Arena

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD

Texas will be the first American state to exempt small homesteads from property taxation," writes Frank Putnam of Houston, for many years one of the free lances of American journalism. "This will come to pass in November, 1932, when the voters approve the constitutional amendment which has been submitted by the legislature now in session. This amendment will exempt the first $3,000 of taxable values of all homesteads from state ad valorem taxation. The original house bill placed the exemption at $2,000. The senate first voted to make it $5,000. Agreement was reached upon a $3,000 exemption with the idea that since homestead are usually assessed for taxation at approximately 50 per cent of their full value, the $3,000 exemption will amount in fact to an exemption of $5,000 to $6,000."

It is claimed by the proponents of the amendment that its adoption will relieve at least one-half of the small farm and city homes of all state ad valorem taxes. Frank Putnam made the proposal apart of his platform in his candidacy for the governorship of Texas. Rep. F. C. Weinert, while state tax commissioner, recommended the relief measure in his first annual report to a Moody legislature. For years and years it had been a plan nearest to the Wiener heart.

Speaking of taxation the Houston newspaper writer is responsible for this drastic indictment:

"This burden of taxes falling due in periods of personal and public distress has driven at least 150,000 Texas families out of their little homes. It has been a large and, as I see it, a shameful factor in transforming Texas from a land of freehold farmers into a land of wretched, homeless and well-nigh penniless tenant farmers. Tenant farming means single crop farming—a system which at this moment threatens our agricultural industry and our urban business so largely dependent upon it, with ruin. We must find a way to restore freehold small farming, in order that our farms shall be self-contained, our agriculture diversified. It is reassuring to find myself in agreement with very large majorities of both houses of the Texas legislature in the belief that small homestead tax exemption will help to get this result."

Looking forward the free lance writer sees a glorious future for the tillers of the soil of the southwest. He is optimistic, hopes to live to see the day when a complete Texas system of small homestead tax exemption will make the Lone Star state a commonwealth of proud freeholders, instead of "a commonwealth of wandering tenantry." This is the concluding chapter of the Putnam interview.

"Tens of millions of acres of rich farming land lie idle in Texas. Millions of good citizens throughout the United States, including Texas, are being permanently thrown out of employment and put out of small businesses by the advances of machine production and chain distribution. I want to see Texas attract millions of these good people here to make self-supporting homes upon the idle lands of this state. I believe nothing else would so powerfully attract them as the knowledge that in Texas small homesteads once paid for, were forever tax free and execution proof. In a time of world-wide unrest and upheaval, it seems to me worth remembering that the state that safeguards the homes of its people most fully will be most fully safeguarded by them."

Progressive Texans, Incorporated, have outlined a magnificent building program for this empire of marvelous resources. They are going to tell it to the world the natural resources of Texas, the industrial possibilities of Texas, the reasons why manufacturers should come to Texas and the importance of Texans buying Texas-made goods and wares in future years. It is said that the campaign will be conducted on a high plane, will be prosecuted with intelligence and force and the Texas of today, will be unfolded, so to speak, to the capitalists and manufacturers and home-seekers of other states and nations.

OUR PRESIDENT Wrote this Advertisement

AS STRANGE AS IT MAY SEEM, I am sometimes asked why we advertise. This question has never been asked by the great majority of people who have learned to depend upon advertising as a source of news and information. But in order that our customers and the general public will know specifically why we advertise, I shall briefly give the four principal reasons. They are:

To tell our customers and the general public about the company itself, its policies, its methods of doing business, the men and women who work for it, and its plans for development.

To gain public co-operation by directing attention to that which will encourage thrift, to promote safety, to build up industrial enterprises, and to make this community a better place in which to live.

To sell the service of the company and to keep our customers advised of the facilities that make this service possible. To assist our customers in saving gas and reducing their gas bills. To sell our fuel in competition with other fuels.

To give us a means of expression when misunderstood and unjustly attacked.

We use, principally, newspaper advertising because it has proven to be the most efficient and economical way to reach all of our customers, and the greatest majority of the general public. An advertisement in the newspapers actually costs less than it would to mail the same information to each of our customers by letter. Advertising is the voice of your gas company.

MEDICAL MEN TO MEET IN QUAKER CITY

By PAUL COMLY FRENCH
United Press Staff Co. respondent
PHILADELPHIA, May 28.—In the old Quaker city where their organization was founded more than four score years ago, 800 members of the American Medical Association will hold their annual convention from June 8 to 12.

The visiting surgeons and physicians will be gathered in a city where medical traditions are older than the nation. Seven medical men were among the first purchasers of land in the new province which the King presented to William Penn to repay a debt due his father, Admiral Penn.

Philadelphia has many things in her past to which she points with pride, and not the least among these is her contribution to medical science.

Looking backward in its opulent past, historians record that Philadelphia bears title to:

First in Many Things.
The first colonial hospital which was established by Drs. Thomas Cadwalder and Thomas Bond; the first medical school which was a part of the University of Pennsylvania founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1749; the first medical library founded in 1763; the first university laboratory of clinical research; the first university department of research medicine; the first comprehensive graduate school of medicine; first American university to have a department of surgical research; the first dispensary for "medical relief for the poor" in 1786; and the first college of pharmacy founded in 1821.

In addition, Dr. Cadwalder made here his first necropsy for purely scientific purposes and he also wrote in Philadelphia the first medical book published in America.

As part of the visit to this shrine of American medicine, many of the physicians will go to the old Christ Church to view the national shrine which was designed by a physician, Dr. John Kersley.

Also Gave Church
Despite his large practice and the training he gave many youths of the Quaker city in medicine he still found time to leave as a permanent monument the church in which Washington worshipped when Philadelphia was the capital of the infant republic.

It was here that a majority of the eminent medical men of colonial and revolutionary days lived. A directory of 1783 lists forty-two physicians for the city, and most of them were later regarded as real men of science.

Among other great names in medicine that the early city gave to the world are those of Benjamin Rush, physician, statesman, social worker, philosopher and writer; Drs. William Shippen, senior and junior; Thomas Lloyd; Thomas Wynne; John Morgan; Phineas Bond; Lloyd Zachary; Cadwalder Evans; John Redman; Thomas Graeme; Samuel Jackson, and George McClellan.

The sessions of the association will open the new five million dollar Municipal Auditorium and Convention Hall on the west bank of the Schuylkill river.

"Judge, This Is Just the Way It Happened"

Here is a little joint action that was taken in a Los Angeles courtroom the other day when pretty Tut Mace, film dancer, climbed on a table to show the judge a few handstands. Miss Mace was a witness for Cynthia Goode, suing Walter Wills, dancing instructor, for damages as the result of a broken ankle sustained while receiving instruction. She alleged Wills failed to catch her.

Red Cross Relief---

only understand and appreciate this great work of humanitarian relief that came to us at a time of dire need, but as a whole will feel forever indebted to the American Red Cross for the great work that is being carried on throughout the world by this national organization which knows no character, color, creed nor kind where there is suffering and where relief is needed.

As chairman of Eastland county chapter, I am grateful, and express my sincere appreciation to the committee and other co-workers throughout the county who have so unswervingly given of their time and energy voluntarily, in order that this program could be carried out.

The following is a summarized report of the work done during this program.

Statistical report of Red Cross relief work done in Eastland county from January 24th to May 15th, 1921, by the Eastland county chapter:

Number of families aided, 1000, consisting of 5,528 persons, classified as follows: 632 farm families, 239 unemployed families and 64 widows or widowered families.

Total cash grants or awards made to the county by the national organization out of drought relief funds, $15,350.00 which was spent as follows:

For food	$13,913.61
For clothing	1,012.67
For medicine	305.46
For seed potatoes	32.43
For dairy feed	6.25
For fuel	43.49
	$15,313.91
Taken up and returned by auditors	36.09
	$15,350.00

The county was called upon in the early part of the program to do its part in contributing to the $10,000,000.00 drought relief fund called for by the president and chairman of the national organization. I am glad to report that the banks of the county as well as other firms and individuals responded cheerfully and liberally to this call and more than the county's quota was raised and paid into the national drought relief fund, thereby placing Eastland county on the honor roll of Texas counties.

Respectfully submitted,
J. E. SPENCER, Chairman
Eastland County Chapter American Red Cross.

WOUNDED AT WEDDING
FLORENCE, Italy, May 28.—Just an old Tuscan custom was being observed by Ernest Scappini at the wedding of Fernanda Passalacqua and Ferraro Lombardi when Ernest fired his revolver in the air several times as an expression of joy. But his bullets disconnected from a portico, slightly wounding the bride and bridegroom.

PROGRESSIVE TEXANS LAUDED BY M'DONALD

AUSTIN, May 28.—Industrial development of Texas carries with it collateral benefit to the industry of agriculture, which should make the program of Progressive Texans, Inc., of interest to every one interested in agricultural progress, in the opinion of J. E. McDonald, commissioner of agriculture.

Commissioner McDonald's statement was made at the meeting here of the executive committee of the organization, planning its program for the industrial development of the state.

Success of the program instituted by the organization should prove of great benefit to agriculture, he said. He pointed out that the purpose of Progressive Texans is to "make Texas better known and better understood to both itself and the rest of the country," to the end that industrial firms already established might prosper and other firms be induced to come into the state.

Agriculture should benefit from such a program, he stated, both because it contemplates advertisement of the state's agricultural advantages and because agricultural and industrial interests of the state depend one upon the other.

"Industry comes," McDonald said, "where it can find the raw material the labor, accessibility to markets, a healthy financial tone. Texas farm lands, rich as any in the world in natural attributes, offer an endless source of raw material for hundreds of industries, such as cotton and wool textile factories, flour mills, shoe factories, tanneries, canning plants and many others.

"As the state develops industrially, the farmer will find a readier market for his products—both for those products that go into the factories as raw material and to feed the influx of population which follows industrial growth. In turn, the farmer would have more money with which to purchase the products of industry.

"The cotton farmer should benefit especially from the establishment of textile mills in the state. Unquestionably is an economic anachronism to ship our cotton to seaboard New England, only to have it return-

THE MELODY GIRL

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Beryl Borden, secretly in love with Tommy Wilson, delays his elopement with her half-sister, Irene Everett, but fails to convince him that it is his duty to finish college.

Irene wants to be a radio singer. She secures an audition and Beryl goes to the studio with her. While waiting, Beryl croons melodies at a piano. A director hears and is charmed by her voice. He gives her a test and offers a contract which elates the girl but her joy is short-lived for Irene fails and the family blame Beryl. Irene promises to elope with Tommy but his aunt dies and the marriage is postponed.

Beryl's debut is a success. She tries to forget her hopeless love by going to gay parties with the wealthy Prentiss Gaylord. When Beryl becomes ill Irene tries to win Prentiss' interest. He is deceived by her pose of children innocence.

Tommy manages his uncle's theater and while he considers this job secure he lacks confidence in his uncle because of money lost in an unwise investment. Tommy is wondering about this investment when his uncle enters the room.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XXV
"Well, what do you think?" Uncle George exclaimed to Tommy as the latter stared inquiringly. It disconcerted the older man a trifle, but he wasn't going to let Tommy see that.

Uncle George sat on the bed, put his hat down beside him, and waited for Tommy to speak. Maybe, he told himself, the only thing that Tommy's manner showed he was suspicious. Well, he couldn't suspect the truth, for that had been a dark secret, but he appeared to have guessed at something that put a question in his eyes. Better to let Tommy speak out. That way he could get a line on the lad's ideas. No use getting the boy sore after that ham investment he'd made for him.

This was a sudden decision not to throw the big news at Tommy all at once. Such had been his intention when he entered the house, so anxious to get the telling over that he'd hurried upstairs without waiting to leave his hat in the hall.

Tommy's expression said as plain as words: "I'd like to know what you're up to."
"Think of what?" Tommy countered, scowling at him.
His uncle laughed uneasily. "You'd never guess," he answered. "And before I tell you I want you to know something of what it means to me—this thing that has happened."

"What's happened?" Tommy cut in sharply.
"Don't be in a hurry," Mr. Hoffman advised. "Just listen a minute. I want you to see matters the way they appear to me."
Tommy would not be silent. "So there are two things here?"

"Well, maybe," his uncle agreed, and added with a touch of smugness: "I don't want you to think I haven't considered you in the matter."
"Yes?" Tommy's inflection was full of doubt.
"Yes, I have. I'll do something for you, but I had to think of myself. Why, this is what I've been working for, for the past 10 years! It settles everything for me, I can quit now—I'll have enough."

Tommy eyed him narrowly. With what money he'd got from his wife's estate Uncle George should have plenty, the young man was thinking.
"I'm not so young as I used to be," his uncle was saying. "I've tried for years to sell the building but the town's been overbuilt and didn't need a thing—except a post-office. I knew that had to come and I knew I had the site for it—the only site in town—so it was only a question of getting the postoffice."

He was rambling, and Tommy knew it.
"I've got a date in a few minutes," the young man said, "and you know I've got no time to lose."
"All right," Hoffman agreed, and nerved himself to come out with his news. "Here it is. I've sold the theater."

Tommy's jaw was not the kind that drops open. He had the look as blank as a stone wall for a minute. Here was one catastrophe that he had never thought possible even though his trust in his uncle was not deep. Instinctively he looked for the dark side where George Hoffman was concerned.
A number of times since his uncle had persuaded him to put his money in real securities Tommy had thought of what Beryl said about Mr. Hoffman that night she broke up the elopement with Irene by her crazy attempt at kidnapping. He hadn't differed with her much then, though not admitting it, and if there'd been a time since when he had forgotten to be cautious with his uncle it was because his mind was preoccupied with Irene.

Now if he'd lost his job he could expect no help from Hoffman.
"How about the theater?" he asked hoarsely.
"It will be torn down, naturally," his uncle replied.
Tommy gulped. "And you're not moving to some other building? You're giving up the Palace altogether?"

"The Palace has had its day," the older man declared. "It was the finest show house on the North Shore once upon a time. But the industry and the times have moved too fast for it. It had to go."
"Yeah?" Tommy retorted. "Yet you thought it had enough juice left in it to be worth the sacrifice of a college education. You talked a lot about keeping it abreast of the times—giving snappy shows to make up for uncomfortable seats and all that sort of thing. And all the time you had it on the market for sale. Just playing me along, were you? You know you couldn't get a show man who was worth his salt to come out here and handle it."

Mr. Hoffman bristled. "I told you I'd take care of you," he rejoined indignantly.
Tommy jeered at him. It was rash, but honest. "You know where I am with Irene," he accused. "You know I took this job because she wanted me to. Well, what am I going to do now? No job, no money!"
"She'll wait for you," Mr. Hoffman encouraged, and Tommy felt like punching him on the jaw.
"While I do what?" he mocked.
Again Hoffman bristled. "You're damned impertinent," he declared in self-defense. "Don't forget young fellow, that the Hoffmans have done a lot for you."
"Is that so?" Tommy retorted. "Well, just you remember that my Aunt Emma wasn't a Hoffman until she married you. And she did a lot more for you than she did for me with money that wasn't Hoffman money, either."
His uncle got to his feet, red in the face. "If that's how you feel about it," he answered hotly. "I guess you won't want the job I've got for you, but don't come whining around to me when you see what a fool you've been."
"I'll come whining around to you when I've more good money to throw after bad," Tommy told him.

His uncle strode out of the room, muttering something about ungrateful puppies.
Tommy grabbed his hat and left the house. He did not go directly to the Everetts. He walked a few blocks out of his way to cool off before seeing Irene.
He couldn't cool so he gave up that attempt and went to tell her his troubles. Irene was delighted—not delighted because Tommy had such bad luck but because she'd found it out before making a decision between her two suitors.
"Oh, Tommy, that's too bad!" Irene said, and the way she said it was like a dash of cold water in Tommy's face. What came next was worse than he had feared. "Now we can't be engaged any longer!"
"Engaged?" he repeated. "Say, Irene, we're going to be married in less than a week. You can't break this off like a mere engagement!"
"Don't be silly," Irene protested. "How could we go on with it? You can't support me now."
Tommy made a tremendous effort and swallowed his pride. "Once you said yourself that you could get a job and take care of yourself until I was out of college," he reminded her. "It would be just the same as it is now only—"

"Only that it's quite different," Irene substituted. "You're not going to college. Everything has changed. There isn't anything to look forward to."
"There's my love!" Tommy maintained, though his hope was waning.
"Give me time!" Tommy pleaded. "I'll make good."
"Of course you will," she agreed. "But we must wait for it, Tommy. And it wouldn't be fair to either of us to be engaged while we're waiting. You know it's not my fault that we aren't married. First you let Beryl step in and then your aunt died. I'm awfully sorry, Tommy, but I've given you every chance. It was your suggestion that we wait the second time. I think it would be unlucky a third time. We'd better break the engagement and start all over."
"I don't see how you can talk like that if you love me. I need you now, Irene. I need to be sure of you. I could try harder if you were my wife."
"That's selfish," Irene declared. "What would happen if you didn't—if you couldn't—make good? You've got to be honest, Tommy. You wouldn't try to sell anything you didn't know was good, would you? Of course you wouldn't," she answered herself. "Then how can you try to sell me a future that you're not sure of? Don't you see it isn't fair to me?"
Tommy had to admit the truth of her argument, forgetting that a moment before she had said she knew he would make good. Perhaps he was confused with the haps disappointment was licking him. Tommy had wanted with all the yearning and ardor of his whole heart to marry Irene. Life was just black despair now. He'd been unhappy since anyone knew over his aunt's death.
He said, dispiritedly: "I guess you're right."
"But you won't forget me, will you?" Irene asked him with a wistfulness that went no deeper than her words.
Tommy did not answer.
"Kiss me, will you, Tommy?" Irene coaxed.
Tommy obliged, somewhat fiercely. It was all he could do to keep from crying as he held her in his arms.

Irene was thinking: "Now I can go with Prentiss to the studio tomorrow night!"

HISTORY SHOWS ELYSEE PALACE UNHAPPY ABODE

PARIS, May 28.—The great Elysee Palace in which the presidents of the French republic reside, has not brought happiness to the women who have occupied it as the first ladies of the land. Something of the mournful qualities of the great palace of Versailles, where there was never happiness, only grandeur, are imbedded in the walls of the massive building fronting the Rue du Faubourg Saint Honoré.
Perhaps Madam Paul Doumer will break the spell and bring gaiety to the house where little gaiety has been before.
Last President Unmarried
M. Doumerque, the retired president, is a bachelor. There has never been an official hostess at the Elysee during his administration. The vague and scarcely expressed sorrow that clings to the great chambers of the palace was not felt by women during his tenancy. Of all the women who have been hostesses in the palace since the establishment of the Third Republic, but two, Madam Deschapel and Madame Millerand found the atmosphere congenial and both of them are known to have expressed to their friends the feeling that the palace was too vast and gloomy for comfort.
Madam Faure wife of President Felix Faure, was not happy amid the grandeur of the great presidential mansion. She and her husband had been used to simple bourgeois surroundings and were never comfortable in the vast pile set aside for the residence of France's presidents.
Madam Loubet never hesitated to say that she preferred the life of a senator's wife. The Elysee depressed her and she was wont to say: "We were so much happier at the Luxembourg."
Madam Sadi-Carnot, whose husband was assassinated at Lyon, never recalled the Elysee without a shudder. "It was the house of sadness where our great happiness was ruined," she said.
Madam Poincare made no secret that she left the Elysee with pleasure after the termination of her distinguished husband's war-time administration.
The early days of the Republic troubled times when the structure of then Third Republic was endangered from many quarters, brought no happiness to the wife of Marshal MacMahon. Madam Ja Marechal, a soldier's wife, found the Elysee too ornate and gloomy for her simple tastes.
But perhaps the Doumer family will find the great palace more congenial than their predecessors. It will be modified and brightened for their use and according to their tastes as it is for every new occupant.
