HOLDING BACK MONEY.

While additional cases in state courts here had not been ordered against the former Sheriff Que R. Miller of Foard county, his case may result in sweeping investigations by the new grand jury impaneled at Austin today into the practice of county officers holding back money due the state treasury.

This was indicated by officials connected with the fee investigation which resulted in the convention of a special grand jury on the first day of the first term of the new 126th district court, to be opened by Judge W. F. Robertson today.

Miller has been charged at Crowell with misappropriation of county funds. Comp. George H. Sheppard has ordered investigation of the status of state funds in connection with his office, but there has not yet been made an audit of this, state officials said.

Investigators believed that sums of state money have been left in numerous cases by local collecting authorities in the hands of "favorite banks," beyond the legal limit of time.

Comp. Sheppard recently cleaned up the situation of illegal delays of county tax collectors' remittances, and has the payments from the collectors moving in on time.

Several years ago, a grand jury at Austin charged widespread evasion of the law and injury to the state, in county officers' leaving state money in favored county-seat banks long beyond the legal period, even when the state would be on deficiency and its employees all paying discount on their warrants.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Grady Sturgeon confirmed the probability that the new grand jury will make an extensive study of the remittances of state funds by local officers accountable for them.

The first subject the new state court's grand jury will take up is the group of charges filed by Asst. Auditor T. M. Markham and the attorney general's department in justice court at Austin against Sheriff Clint Lewis, Caldwell, Tex.; Sheriff John J. Burtshell, Giddings, and Sheriff Woody Townsend, Bastrop, on fee and mileage claims whose approval resulted in the impeachment charges against District Judge J. B. Price, Bastrop. Judge Price will go to trial before the senate here Thursday on the impeachment charges.

Officials believed the new grand jury may be able to speed up payment to the state treasury, by its first-term investigations to an extent of meeting the entire cost of the new court for many months. It was pointed out that all the local officers are under bond, and subject to civil recovery, as well as other action.

BRECKENRIDGE PAYS TRIBUTE.

They buried a young newspaper editor yesterday at Breckenridge. The church was crowded to its capacity for the sad rites and the flowers were so many that the altar of the church was banked until the preacher standing in the pulpit was almost hidden from view. It wasn't curiosity that brought that great concourse of people together to pay tribute to the young man and it wasn't a morbid sentimentalism that sent all those flowers to testify to the esteem of the people among whom the young editor had worked and lived. One talked with Breckenridge people and they were stunned, unable to express themselves. They felt a loss, sensed a vacancy that will be hard to fill. The same expression fell from the lips of the banker, the merchant, the minister, the man in the street, the little ragged urchin that crept inside the doors of the crowded auditorium and listened rapt and with tears to the comforting and beautiful words of the clergyman. "What a terrible shock!"

But the flowers, the gathering of people, the words of sorrow were not the most significant things at that funeral. The most significant thing was the deep, throbbing silence that settled over the great throng from the time the casket was borne in until it was taken from the sacred edifice to its final resting place what better could have told of the esteem in which Breckenridge held Wesley D. Hodges, late editor of the Breckenridge American, and only twenty-four?

It was a moving tribute to the character and work of the young journalist and it revealed stronger than anything else that he had filled his place in the community, small or large as it may be judged, with credit to himself and his paper. He had gained the respect of his fellow-citizens and, as the minister so fittingly said, his life was measured, not in quantity, but in quality.

FOR SAFER FLYING
So rapid is progress being made in airplane design and construction and the accumulation of flying knowledge that the aeronautics division of the department of commerce finds it necessary each year to call a conference of manufacturers of planes and equipment to keep safety regulations up to date. Fifty makers have attended the fifth of these conferences to make flying better and safer.
Planes manufactured during the next year will embody everything essential, the department and aviation engineers learned during the past year from investigation of accidents and the design and construction of planes. Better materials and more infallible ways of testing them, improved designs, improved motors and new safety devices will go into the new planes.

These get-togethers of makers and regulators result in the betterment of manufacturing and flying interests because they determine in some part the degree of air safety.

Conferences with government agents and compliance with government rules are not repugnant to the industry. It realizes that flying must be made safe and accidents infrequent if its business is to grow and prosper. Its position is not on all fours with the history of the automobile industry, which was full grown before the element of danger became prominent. — Paris News.

plant always have overrun means of meeting them.

Girls have been provided with dormitories through religious and fraternal organizations and private bequest, Old B. Hall, itself the gift of one of the university's staunchest friends, the late Col. George Brackenridge of San Antonio, stood for years as the only facility toward providing undergraduate men a home within the university. Recently the university has used dilapidated, obsolete cavern buildings in an attempt to meet its obligation to men in the student body of furnishing them living quarters under university supervision.

Now, along with seven other structures, the first dormitory for men will be built on the Cavanaugh tract. Others will follow. Wisely, initial construction was limited to one building for experimental purposes. The plan of the first building is open for objection, in that it will contribute to clamorishness and isolation of the resident students by isolating small groups of five to eight men entirely away from other undergraduates in the building.

The advantages, if there are any, of this English "community type" building can be weighed in comparison with the better usefulness of other types. But the main thing is that now for the first time the university is meeting its obligation of taking freshmen students and putting their daily lives under the protection of its supervision.

The university should go ahead with its dormitory program until it can provide housing for all first-year men, at least, then make residence in the dormitories compulsory for all these except students residing with their parents.

The new building program as a whole is vitally important to the university and to the people of Texas. The eight buildings embodied in a single order of the regents this past week will for the first time let the physical plant catch up with the current needs of the present student body. The university has had no time to build ahead to meet future needs or prepare for its broadened usefulness in meeting the needs of a greater number of students. But it is a great stride to catch up for the moment with the pressing needs of the present. The student body will grow, as the facilities are provided so there is little hope of getting ahead, for years to come.

During the past year much has been done to transform the campus. The new group of structures, will equal all that has been done in more than two years, and will for the first time define the limits and the expanded scope of the university's plant and services.

In future years the work now under order and soon to start will be a visible monument to a date — the changing point between the old and the modern university. And the first dormitory of the new system upon the campus will stand out with especial emphasis as one of the things that created the dividing line between the old and the new.

Without Work or Worry— Ironing Day Is Over

IMAGINE an effortless "ironing day" . . . one that is over in one-third the time you usually take . . . one that does not leave you tired, cross and irritable. Aren't you interested in securing this happy "ironing day" for yourself? Then drop in at our Merchandise Showroom and ask to see the new Electric Ironers—or, better yet, telephone for a complete demonstration in your own home.

You'll find that you can complete your weekly ironing in minutes instead of hours . . . that you can sit at ease, merely guiding the pieces through smooth-running rollers, rather than stand for hours lifting and pushing a hot and heavy iron . . . that your finished work will be far superior to any you have secured through the back-breaking drudgery of old-fashioned methods.

Surely you'll decide that this modern "ironing day" is a definite economy. Fedelco Ironers are moderate in first cost, and operating expenses are surprisingly low—actually more inexpensive than any other method. Call for a demonstration—on your own terms—today. There's no obligation, of course.

Do you know that your increased use of Electric Service is billed on a surprisingly low rate schedule . . . and adds only a small amount to your total bill?

GUILTY LIPS

by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN Author of "MAD MARRIAGE"

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Pretty Norma Kent, 20-year-old secretary in a law office, marries Mark Travers, son of F. M. Travers, millionaire real estate dealer, after the father has sworn to cut Mark off without a penny if the marriage takes place. Norma has known Mark only a few weeks, did not know during the courtship that he was a millionaire's son.

The story opens in Marlboro, middle western metropolis. Christine Saunders, with whom Norma shares an apartment, and Bradley Hart, Chris' employer, are witnesses at the wedding. Before this Norma has repeatedly refused to marry Bob Farrell, young lawyer of whom she is fond as a friend.

Mark sells his expensive roadster to get money for the honeymoon. He and Norma go to fashionable Blue Springs where the young man takes delight in surrounding his bride with expensive luxuries. One afternoon Mark introduces Norma to Hollis Stone, an old friend. It is evident from the girl's discomposure that she has known Stone before.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Mark saw instantly that something was wrong. "Why, Norma, you're trembling!" he exclaimed. "Let's get inside! We were infernal idiots to chase out in the rain that way. You're probably drenched to the skin. Come on, let's get in where it's warm. Come on, Stone."

Hollis Stone followed them into the lobby of the hotel. Norma kept her eyes averted from his face.

She knew he was speaking but did not listen to what he said. Her head was buzzing and her temples throbbed. Hollis Stone — Hollis Stone of all the men in the world to be here in this hotel! "An old friend," Mark had called him. Friend!

Not once did she look at Stone directly.

Mark was saying something about her having taken a chill. Even Mark's voice sounded far away against that fearful buzzing in her head.

"—ought to go upstairs and get into dry clothes." It was Mark who was saying that. "Really, Norma, you look all in. Let me take that slicker. It's dripping wet. Don't you think you should go and change? Put on something warm or you're sure to get a rotten cold!"

Blessed suggestion! What she needed was to get away. She must get away quickly from everyone and everything in this careening chaos that had once been a world.

With a Spartan effort she steadied herself. "I—I guess you're right," she told Mark. "Maybe I'd better go—felling a little tired. You and—er, Mr. Stone, will excuse me—"

She refused to let Mark come even to the elevator with her. Once inside the car she clung with both hands to the railing that encircled the little cage. She shut her eyes but she could not shut out tormenting memories.

Mark's voice. "Here's someone I want you to know—an old friend." Oh, could it actually have happened that way?

There was only the operator with her in the elevator. When the car jolted to a stop Norma stepped out, made her way down the corridor to the suite. With a sharp sigh she entered and closed the door. Half way across the room she went back and turned the key in the lock.

Her clothing was not wet. She had not had a chill. Yet methodically the girl tore off her bright sports suit, slippers, gossamer-thin stockings. She slipped up the old blue negligee that had been one of the few garments she had brought from her former home and wrapped it about her tightly.

This clad she crouched in a huge tapestry chair, pillowing her head in her arms.

This was what had come of her happiness! A brief hour—a tiny glimpse of golden perfection. Oh, why had she not known it would end this way?

The trobbing in her temples did not stop. She pressed her cheeks and discovered they were hot. Perhaps she really had taken cold. If it could only be pneumonia! If she could become ill enough would that make any difference to Mark? Would anything in the world make any difference to him?

She could not sit still. Norma got to her feet, moved restlessly about the rooms. Her thoughts were a scorpion lash, scouring her on.

But perhaps Stone might not say anything—

It was a faint ray of hope, almost electric in the darkness in which the girl felt engulfed. She threw herself upon the bed, considered this possibility.

"Mark probably knows already," she reasoned. Cold judgment would not let her accept this respite.

There was another possibility. "Mark might not believe him."

Over and over to herself Norma repeated the words. She said them like a prayer. One minute she was feverishly until they hurt. What was Stone waiting for? What was behind his silence? How long could she count on it? Over and over she asked herself these questions.

It was late when Mark arrived. He burst into the room, jubilant and noisily enthusiastic. It had been a great afternoon. He had shot 84 and none of the others had done so well. They were determined to take him on again in the morning. Going to be out early!

There was much more about the game of golf. It was a long while before Mark even thought to inquire how Norma had spent the afternoon, whether she had had a pleasant time.

Playfully she evaded in her answers. If he had not even missed her during these hours of separation she would not confess she had been lonely. When they were ready to go down to dinner Norma was determinedly gay. She maintained the pose throughout the meal and afterward when they danced.

It was a different Norma, however, who later when they were alone together drew herself slowly away from Mark's arms. Her face was colorless but it did not betray emotion.

She had nerved herself for the bravest moment of her life. In a dry voice Norma said: "I—I want to talk to you about something, Mark—"

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

By EDSON E. WAITE Shawnee, Oklahoma.

Edgar G. Harris, publisher of the West Point (Miss.) Daily Times-Leader, and president of the Tupais (Miss.) Daily News, and one of the best known and most successful small city publishers in the country, says:

"You can measure the trade territory of any small city by the circulation of its local newspaper. The trade of a town or city follows the circulation of the home newspaper just as certainly as civilization follows the flag."

"To gain and maintain circulation, the local newspaper must actively and energetically promote every movement for the advancement of the cause of the local merchant, who pays taxes and who contributes generously to the support of the local chamber of commerce, the civic clubs, the churches and charities. The local newspaper which desires to succeed must do even more than this. It must reach out into the rural districts to boost the pig and poultry clubs, to report the activities of the schools and churches, and to demonstrate its interest in and its usefulness for the community which it seeks to serve."

"Mind you, I am not suggesting that the local newspaper give away a line of its space to promote the specific interests of any commercial enterprise. The line of demarcation between news and advertising must be drawn sharply and enforced firmly. The good newspaper can and does command the respect of its community, and good business men and good citizens will respect its reasonable rules and regulations."

"No town or city can afford to stand still. It must either advance or go backward. The same rule applies to the newspaper. The town and its newspaper must grow up together, work together, and share together the fortunes of the future."

"A town or city is prosperous only so long as it brings in more money than it sends out. The same rule applies to the conduct of a newspaper—and to every other business as well."

TEXAS TOPICS

By RAYMOND BROOKS
AUSTIN, Sept. 7.—Governor Sterling cherished the ideal of a balanced budget, a state living within its revenues a year hence, when another fiscal year of the state begins, Sept. 1, 1932.

The cigaret tax may bring considerably more revenues than expected. Oil may go up to where the 2 per cent production tax will supply abundant revenues.

Reversionary balances this time at the start of the new state year, promises to be small. There was more of a deficiency for martial law than all the expiring appropriations left unspent.

It may be a combination of both that will pull the state from a $3,000,000 deficit to a cash footing. There seems little chance now of extensive consolidation of departments in time to affect the year's expenses.

The ranger force has been increased. The state service officer staff has been enlarged; the attorney general's department has been expanded; the railroad commission, the highway patrol and other agencies have been given more needed help; several new courts have been created.

The fee committee undoubtedly is affecting large savings—much of which comes from the state treasury through court items. Greater efficiency has been brought about in many departments; but this will have small bearing on the total appropriations.

The deputy oil and gas supervisors and their assistants will represent the railroad commission in enforcing its orders hereafter, and the field umpires dropped out of the picture with passage of the new conservation law, according to notice given by the railroad commission.

She'll Go for a "Bargain Sail"

These lovely brown eyes will be turned on New York's skyscrapers and bright lights for three whole weeks. For didn't Gisi Samek sell more merchandise than any other girl in her department store in Vienna, Austria? And wasn't she awarded with a three-week trip to New York as a prize? She did and she was.

STYLIST TURNS HIS BACK ON FAD REVERSAL

By MARY KNIGHT
United Press Staff Correspondent
PARIS, Sept. 7.—"The gown that was made to be worn in an open carriage does not suit an automobile," says Lucien Lelong, long an outstanding figure in the Parisian fashion field.

"I protest against the innovators of these pseudo-romantic fads," he said, "that attempt to penetrate and perpetrate a mode which is out of harmony with modern settings, modern architecture, modern art, which has no relation whatsoever to the exigencies of the modern woman."

"Certain creators saw in the advent of the small tilted hat the precursor of the new mode. This is incorrect. The small hats were charming as a whim of fashion, but they cannot be taken as the basis of a future mode; the proof of this is that the fad for them is already on the wane, and to all intents and purposes has no style significance. The time has come to take a stand, and mine is clearly opposed to the current fad of adopting the styles of our grandmothers. It always has been my policy to base my collection on a logical principle, and I can imagine nothing more illogical than these 'Come Into the Garden Maud' modes."

Lelong has created a new silhouette, which, in his discussion of the 1931-32 mode, he says, "In presenting my new silhouette, I am presenting a mode that is modern. It is perfectly adapted to modern life and does not recall the past in any way. I have eliminated all senseless ornament and illogical artifices, stressing the importance of purity of line."

According to this particular creator of haut couture, whose keen inner eye looks forward and not backward, the mode which his new silhouette interprets is plastic. "A couturier is as much concerned with volume as a sculptor," he explains. "Volume is just as important as material or color. For while the two latter elements may emphasize a tendency, it is volume, or rather the distribution of volumes, which is the vital basis of a line."

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR
ORRINGTON, Me., Sept. 7.—This village was named "Orrington" by mistake. It was planned to call it "Orangetown", but when articles of incorporation were drawn up in 1788 the name through an error in copying the application, was spelled "Orrington."

PAINTS BOXES
SALEM, Kan., Sept. 7.—"Shorty" Story, who delivers mail west of here, takes a great pride in keeping his 44-mile mail route "spic and span". Recently Story bought $15 worth of paint and gave each of the 728 boxes a coat. He even painted the "customers" name on.

BERLIN THEATERS POPULAR
BERLIN, Sept. 7.—The popularity of Berlin theaters has suffered little this summer. Some theatres report that the desire for an evening's relaxation seems to have increased. In June 149,000 people attended the performances of the operetta "Victoria and Her Hussar."

CHARACTER OF ROGERS IN NEW FILM FITTING

"Me, an actor? They're kiddin' you," once remarked Will Rogers. "If they can find a role that's sorta like me and then let me be natural, I'm all right, otherwise I'm punk."

And this is the best reason to be found for the appeal and delightfulness of his new Fox production, "Young As You Feel," which opened yesterday at the Palace Theater.

Rogers is Rogers, and as such he has no equal on the screen today. His character of Lemuel Morehouse fits the humorist perfectly. It affords him his best opportunity to be just what he is, a plain everyday, American father and citizen.

Admirers of Rogers will be thoroughly delighted with his donning of "dressy" clothes in this hilarious comedy drama, which was adapted from George Ade's well known stage play "Father and The Boys." Rogers appears all dressed up in stiff collars, boiled shirts, topper and cane. And after one recovers from the original shock, the effect is quite pleasing since Rogers' athletic figure sets off admirably the latest Bond Street modes.

An excellent supporting cast surrounds Rogers, headed by that splendid comedian, Lucien Littlefield, Donald Dillaway, Terence Ray Rosalie Roy and Lucille Browne are the four young people whose heart affairs blend a nice note of romance through the laughable escapades of Rogers and Fifi. The other important roles are portrayed by C. Henry Gordon, John T. Murray, Brandon Hurst, Marcia Harris and Gregory Gaye.

Burnett—$5,000,000 power dam project on Colorado river between here and Llano, construction of which started in May, will require 23 months for completion; 600 to 800 men will be used when work is in full swing.
Runge—Construction work underway on Highway No. 72 at DeWitt county line.

Wrapped in Du Pont Number 300 Moisture-Proof Cellophane—the best made

Words can mean lots of things—but you can always trust your taste. If a cigarette tastes right, if it satisfies you right down to the ground, then it is right.
There are all kinds of tobaccos—some good, some not so good. And there's the Chesterfield kind—the best Turkish and the best Domestic that grows. Full-ripe, sun-cured, aged in Nature's thoroughgoing way—and as mild and smooth and sweet as sun-ripened fruit. Chesterfields taste right —because they are right. And something you can't taste—that's important too! The finest cigarette paper—so pure it burns without taste or odor!
And behind this unchanging good taste, all the resources of a great organization—men, money, science, experience. It takes them all to make a great cigarette, and they're all behind Chesterfield.
Your taste is dead right. Chesterfields do satisfy.

GOOD . . . they've got to be good!
