C. C. Hanch of Chicago is general manager of the National Association of Finance companies. He has all the figures. He has issued a bulletin showing that less than three per cent of the annual income of the United States was mortgaged by installment sales—statements of popular writers and after dinner speakers to the contrary notwithstanding.

A SAILLESS FRIGATE.

Widespread disappointment was caused by the decision of the government to send the old frigate Constitution, restored and reconditioned, out to sea in tow of a steel minesweeper instead of shaking her towers of canvas to the breeze and sailing the seas as a good ship should.

Of course the government had its reasons. Canvas is costly and must be renewed frequently. A crew skilled in navigating this ancient type of craft could not be found, although one might be developed in time.

But were these valid excuses? Petty economy is an insult to the generosity of the thousands of men, women and children whose money saved "Old Ironsides" from decay. A capable crew could have been obtained, even from among the lineal descendants of those who built and manned the old ship.

In the Political Arena

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD Unless the political signs are misleading, prohibiting as a noisy reminder, will be in the running with the presidential nominees in 1932.

19th amendment and the enactment of the Volstead Act were in the nature of drunken carnivals and that the Kansas City convention where Herbert Hoover was nominated was the wildest of the lot.

This is a wonderful age in which we live. Incidentally and so to speak, the Houston convention, where Alfred E. Smith and Joseph Taylor Robinson were named as the democratic standards bearers, was not a dry affair.

Locally this is the oil age as well as the solution of oil problems by governors and lawmakers and all the people are busy in the petroleum world.

Internationally it is the moratorium age and statesmen and financiers and prosperous American money lenders in foreign fields are giving little heed to the prohibition issue or the conservation of the natural resources of the mineral producing states of the republic.

Reverend of this the whole world is juggling along just the same and, running true to form it will let time solve the problem of the hour and the civilization which came in with the finish of the World War will in the end be more marvelous than the civilization which was ripe for its death when a Serbian fanatic snuffed out the life of a prince of the House of Hapsburg.

Slave Buying in Timbuctoo Proved to Be Waterloo for Flying Writer

By MARY KNIGHT
United Press Staff Correspondent
PARIS, July 17. — Flying over the world in his airplane, "The Magic Carpet," Richard Halliburton, American travel writer, discovered that buying hoodlum slaves in French Africa for $5.00 each and having to pay $10.00 to return them is just one of the many phases of life that he will soon put into book form.

Halliburton was here before making another hop out of the way place, Moysse Stephens, of California, is his pilot on the expedition. His tentative plans are to follow the trail of Richard the Lion Hearted from Paris to Jerusalem, and later to take the route of Alexander the Great.

"But about this slavery business," said Halliburton, "it is entirely different from the old slavery days in the south. We thought we had a couple of slaves, which we purchased for $5.00 each about 15 miles out from Timbuctoo, but when we got back we had to spend all our time being slaves to them. They had no sense of responsibility. We couldn't speak their language.

We would try to make them understand what we wanted but as soon as we left them they would run out and start playing in the streets. When I went out to discipline them they seemed so glad to see me that there was nothing I could do."

"We were first told," he said, "that slavery no longer existed but after careful inquiry we found that it was possible to take a camel ride out of town and find a slave dealer. It was on the bootleg system, like driving out of Memphis to find a roadhouse. We rode 15 miles and found a tribe of Tauregs. After much argument, they sold us a boy and a girl. They brought them out to us wearing nothing but their birthday clothes and extolled their physical virtues. They were black as ink. I put the girl on the camel behind me and Moysse took the boy on his camel. We jogged along over the desert on our way to Timbuctoo. Moysse called out to me, 'How's Little Eva?' 'She's fine, how's your Monkey?' I answered. And that's the way they get their names.

"We spent all our time trying to

C. E. "Mother" Wash their necks and ears, feed them milk and spinach and make them wear clothes, but it was no go. After we realized we couldn't stand the pace, we decided it would be better to take them back to the Taureg chief who had sold them to us. We hoped to sell them back for at least what we paid for them.

"It's harder to be good today than 50 years ago, but our young people are just as good," said Mrs. Frances E. Clark, above 80-year-old "mother" of Christian Endeavor, when she arrived in San Francisco to attend the golden jubilee of the organization. She explained that the good things are played down and the bad things are publicized.

Must Girl's Life Be an Open Book?

Once again there arises the age old controversy regarding the "double standard." A husband maintains that his wife need not know too much of his wild oats days, and what he did before he was married. A man is expected to have his fling before he chooses his bride and settles down, and a wife has no right to ask questions.

But a woman! That is a different matter altogether. Her past must be an open book. If she has made a mistake she must confess everything to her husband to be and let him decide whether he can forgive her trespassing or not.

"Should a Girl Marry?" is a gripping story of a girl who, having found love and happiness after a soul-racking experience decides to keep silent about her tragic past, until an unkind fate discloses it.

STOCKHOLM, July 17. — The problem of producing high grade leather from raw hides in a week has been solved through a Swedish invention, the so-called Wrangle-Friberg method. The vital part of the process is performed with a strong vacuum pump which makes possible the tanning of the hides in a nearly complete vacuum and in only seven days.

ENTIRE ITALY PRISON SYSTEM OVERHAULED

By STEWART BROWNE
United Press Staff Correspondent
ROME, July 17.—Radical changes in Italy's prison system, including the abolishment of cellular segregation, went into effect throughout Italy this month, with the hearty approval of humanitarians and prison reformers throughout the world.

Italian prisoners no longer live in prisons, but "social institutions." The entire Italian penitentiary system has been overhauled, with the idea of re-educating and regenerating the prisoners while they are being punished.

The major changes in the system can be enumerated in the following manner:

1. Abolition of cellular segregation, or solitary confinement;
2. Creation of many specialized types of prison "institutions";
3. Prisoners must work profitably;
4. The prisoners must work in the open air as much as possible;
5. The prisoners will be paid for work done;
6. Of their food and lodging expenses;
7. Civil and religious instructions for prisoners;
8. Special treatment for minors; and
9. Judicial control over the execution of the sentences.

There are hairline shades of difference between sentences under the new code. The change over to the new system will be gradual, as many of the present prisons will have to be remodeled to meet the more liberal ideas.

The directors of the many prisons throughout Italy came to Rome recently for this purpose, and conferred with Signor Giovanni Novelli, director of Italian Penal Institutions, who outlined the reforms to be carried out under the new code. The new prison regulations went into effect simultaneously with Italy's new Penal Code, which restores capital punishment for many crimes, and which has liberalized the old code of 1889.

Two Classes of Prisons.
The new prison regulations contain 332 articles and are subdivided into four parts. Italian prisons have been divided into two main classes. Firstly, there are 50 prisons, which are called institutions for the execution of sentences, and, secondly, 17 institutions for the execution of sentences in a manner to protect public security. The first group includes major criminals who have been sentenced to life imprisonment to long sentences of "seclusion," and for the detention of persons arrested on serious offenses.

The second group contains more specialized institutions, such as agricultural colonies, workhouses, insane asylums, reform schools, and curative institutions.

The principle behind the entire reform is the prisoners should not

Cat's Nose in Air Forecast of Rain

DECATUR, Ill., July 17.—Hazel is just an ordinary Maltese cat, but when it comes to forecasting weather, members of the police department here are ready to stake everything on her sagacity.

Hazel's proficiency as a weather prophet was discovered when it was observed that rain always fell when she slept with her nose in the air.

Little notice was taken of it at first, but when it occurred again, just before the end of a recent heat wave which took a death toll of 80 in Central Illinois, police became convinced that Hazel was a real weather forecaster.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer
WASHINGTON.—The unprecedentedly enormous proportions of this 1932 George Washington Bicentennial celebration seem to be largely attributable to Sol Bloom and his soul.

They put Sol and his soul in a dinky little Capitol office when they made him a director of the commission. But Sol has expanded the commission into vast handsome quarters in a big new office building and commands scores of workers who, among hundreds of other things and in the name of George Washington and Sol Bloom, are now pelting hundreds of thousands of leading citizens and organizations in 48,000 cities and villages with instructions and bulky programs for the observance through next year of the 200th anniversary of Washington's birth.

Those Fervent Speeches
Maybe you don't think any New York congressman has a soul. But that's because you haven't listened to Sol Bloom talking about the Bicentennial and the great patriotic reawakening which he believes will come out of it. There are authenticated instances where people have broken down and wept at hearing him on the radio. They thought Sol was crying, too. He wasn't, but before the microphone his voice and frame shake in grimmest earnestness as he pours out that soul, "Sol's last" his wife exclaimed to their daughter Vera as the two listened to his radio voice once recently and it seemed that no man affected so emotionally could possibly go on.

"We're bringing the real Washington back to the people," he explains tensely. "We're humanizing Washington. We're giving America a history lesson such as no country ever had before. . . . We must have more of the spiritual and less of the material. History is like religion. George Gohan has written us a song for the year 1932. . . . Lindbergh flying across the ocean was guided and guarded by the prayers of hundreds of millions of people. He couldn't fail. This country can't fail to fulfill its highest destiny if we have the prayers of a hundred million or more people for their country and with thoughts of George Washington.

Overdoing this thing? Man, you can't overdo history! People get fed up on it all before we get through? Well, they don't get fed up on religion, do they? There's nothing more beautiful than the history of our country. . . . The spirit of George Washington will rise from his tomb in Mount Vernon and bring us together again, as the living Washington stilled the storms that swept over the days when he lived in the flesh. This celebration is going to give the American people the greatest national rallying point they ever had."

Sol's Rise in World
Personally, Sol Bloom confides, he is very happy because he is doing something to repay his country for what it has done for his parents and sisters and brothers.

The amazing fervor and activity which Sol Bloom, short, chunky and brown-haired at 61, throws into the Bicentennial during a long hot summer is no more remarkable than his career.

He was born in Pekin, Ill., and was working in a brush factory at San Francisco when eight years old for $1.25 a week. He never went to school, but has read greedily since his mother taught him how. He was bookkeeper in that brush factory at 11, its superintendent at 13, treasurer of a theater at 15, building his first theater—in San Francisco—at 17 and starting on a tour around the world at 19. Twenty years old and he had been put in charge of construction of the famous midway at the Chicago World Fair. He supervised the midway with its dazzling attractions through 1893. He went into the music business and owned 50 stores over the country before he sold out. But real estate and construction attracted him most and he became a millionaire. He retired from business in 1920 at the age of 50 and the people up toward 125th street in New York City began to elect him to Congress. Money, Sol Bloom says, is only good for the independence it gives you.

By RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer
WASHINGTON.—Joseph E. Ransdell of Louisiana, who lost his Senate seat last year to young Huey Long after more than 30 years in Congress, slid out of politics into what seems like a happy ending for a life now in its seventy-third year.

This old southern gentleman with the little white whisker of a beard did not retire to his plantation to spend his days in bitterness, obscurity and possibly poverty. He stayed on in Washington, but he is neither a lame duck appointee nor a corporation lobbyist as so many of his old colleagues have become after being voted out of office.

He really is a lobbyist, but a lobbyist for a cause which was his favorite hobby for many years and the kind of a cause for which everyone is willing to cheer. In fact, when this work which old Joe Ransdell began and is still furthering stands completed, he is likely to have a monument which will outline anything associated with the names of other men with whom he served in the House or Senate.

His Job
Ransdell is now executive director of the Conference Board of the National Institute of Health. The board's purpose—and Ransdell's job—is to promote the institute, to get people so interested in it that philanthropists and Congress will give it enough money to make it an enormous, effective and complete laboratory which will "study the cause, prevention and cure of every disease of man." The board is privately endowed. The institute is the old Hygienic Laboratory of the U. S. Public Health Service. With a present research staff of 150 persons, financed both federally and privately.

Ransdell talks about the institute with the enthusiasm of an excited boy. Politics requires a diversification of interest and effort, but the institute is his life work now. It was Ransdell who introduced five years ago the bill passed last year by which Congress changed the Hygienic Laboratory into the National Institute of Health, gave $750,000 for new buildings and au-

Heart of Liane by MABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY Liane Barrett, 18 and lovely, is glad to leave New York when her mother receives an offer to play summer stock at Willow Stream, L. I. Shane McDermid, young police officer, comes to tell Liane that the man who had been shot in a speakeasy brawl at which she was an innocent witness will recover. At a party given by Muriel Ladd, debutante, Liane meets Van Robard, whom she had encountered once before. Cass Barrett begs Liane never to see him again. One night Van asks Liane to accompany him on a search for Muriel and Chuck Desmond, reporter, believed to have eloped. Elsie Minter, the company ingenue, tells Liane that there is gossip about Robard and Mrs. Ladd. The girl is heart-broken. Liane is invited to spend the autumn with rich Mrs. Cleespaugh. She finds Clive Cleespaugh friendly and companionable. News comes of Muriel's engagement to Robard. Liane hears that her mother is seriously ill and rushes to her in Philadelphia. Cass almost dies, babbling in her delirium of her dead sister, Luisa. Mrs. Cleespaugh takes Cass to her home to convalesce. Clive asks Liane to marry him—a marriage in name only—in order to fulfill the terms of his father's will. At first she is offended but later accepts for her mother's sake, Fanny Amberton and her sister, Tressa Lord, come to visit Mrs. Cleespaugh. Tressa is rude to Liane. Robard comes to dine, and makes love to Liane. She tells him she is to marry Clive. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XX

"There's just one thing I'd like to ask you," Liane said suddenly. The car was running along smoothly under the wet clouds. The damp, autumnal wind blew her hair in little ringlets across her cheeks. In the fitful light of the road lamps her young face looked strained, somber. "What's that?" Clive Cleespaugh wanted to know. He took a packet of cigarettes from his pocket with his free hand, reached for the patient lighter which, among other ornaments and gadgets, he strode under the seat. In the flare Liane's eyes sought his face as he drew in a draught of fragrant smoke and expelled it gratefully. "It's about Elsie Minter," Liane explained. "I thought somehow—last summer I got the impression— She was embarrassed. She could not formulate the words. Clive turned toward her, his teeth flashing white in his still tanned face. "That Elsie and I had a case on each other?" he finished for her, with a note of amused incredulity. "Yes. That was it." Now that the thing was said Liane felt small and school-girlish. After all, it was none of her business. Just that she didn't want anyone hurt. Elsie, least of all. She was brusque, but she was above all, kind. "Oh, she must have been stringing you!" Clive said, still amused. "Did you know—surely you must have!—that she and Vernon are to be married as soon as he gets his degree?" He reached over and patted her hand. "I was the old smoko screen, I suppose," he added, dryly. "Vernon's wife was snooping around for evidence. Elsie thought it smart to pretend a flirtation with me." "Oh!" Liane felt suddenly an immense distaste for all this intrigue. She wanted to go some place where people lived simply and frankly, where there were no plots or underhand affairs. Clive turned the car into a little lane. Stopped the engine. "Look, child," he said, "let's talk this thing out. You find the world rather a rotten place, don't you?" "Sometimes," agreed the young girl, faintly. "Well, it is and it isn't. Your sense of balance has been upset a little because you were thrown suddenly among sophisticated people before you'd actually grown up. I can see that, first off." "You saw—what?" murmured Liane, astonished at the young man's perception. "I never thought you noticed me." His short laugh sounded rather offended. "I noticed," he said grimly. "I saw more than you thought. This may sound foolish and all that but I sort of wanted to protect you. You're too pretty to be running around loose. Goblins'll get you. That's why this engagement of ours would be a shield, a protection." The girl at his side was silent. "Don't you agree?" "She was thinking of a dark, troubled face. Of strong hands touching her—with a touch that trembled into flame. Protection? Was that, after all, what she wanted?" "Let me tell mother tomorrow," Clive urged. He put his foot on the starter. The engine raced, sputtered into life. "That girl will hate me," Liane said suddenly with apparent irrelevance. "What girl? Oh, Tressa?" Clive laughed. "Does she matter?" "I don't know. Your mother may think so. Your mother may have plans—" Liane paused. "She may," Clive agreed grimly. "But my plans and Mother's seldom match. You may have noticed that." The lights of Wildacres gleamed now through the trees in the lane. "Head better?" he asked, helping her from the car. With the clasp of that firm, lean hand Liane felt a sudden and unaccountable lightening of heart. She could not have said why but she was somehow happier, more assured than she had been 10 minutes ago. "Much better," she said. She rushed past the little room vantage. Let's not go over all that again." Her beautiful mouth was twisted. Her long hands were clenched at her sides. Fanny attempted to head off the tantrum which threatened. "You're beautiful enough," she said, "to land anybody. But you're too clever, I think. You say things that wound a man's pride. You never lose a chance to be biting." Tressa frowned. "You always say that. You're milk and water and I'm vinegar. Is that what you mean?" Fanny refused to be annoyed. "I'm sleepy," she said softly. "And I'm tired of this conversation. You're young enough anyway not to look like a hag after late hours so clear out and yet me get my beauty sleep." Tressa was mollified. Her mercurial temper abated. "Stop worrying, old lady. I'll get off in style one of these days," she prophesied as she kissed her sister goodnight. "I may have some ideas you don't even suspect on this marriage business." Fanny affected pleased surprise. She was glad to part for the night on a friendly note. "That's simply marvelous, chick," she said. "Tell me what you're plotting." "Can't just now," Tressa said. "Wait and see!" (To Be Continued)

Soviet Tours Anger Europe

PARIS, July 17. — Most of Europe has risen in common accord to accuse Soviet Russia of a new kind of dumping — tourist travel. With the golden tide of American tourists practically dammed by the economic crisis and European tourists suffering under the worst tourist season since before the war, the rest of Europe has been angered by the bargain tours offered by the State Tourist Bureau of the Moscow government. "Exploite Old Turkestan by de luxe rail caravan," or "Travel within several hundred miles of the North Pole on a Soviet Ice Breaker" are but two of the attractive tours which the bureau has put on the bargain counter. The rush of travel-seasoned tourists is said to have been great and there are few reservations available on either trip, while the golden sands of Venice, Deauville, Ostend and Biarritz are far from overpopulated, the Swiss Alps empty and tourist steamers of the Rhine and elsewhere run with empty decks. The rail caravan to Turkestan leaves Leningrad August 25 and will carry tourists for 8,000 miles during 40 days with all the comfort, afforded by a special Pullman train. It will pass through the garden town of Tashkent, the carpet bazaars of Bokhara, Ashkabad and Krasnovodsk. The polar trip promises a meeting with the Zeppelin in the Polar gas and a hunt for Amundsen, when the Soviet government believes still may be alive.
