TILT MARKS HEARING ON PRORATION

AUSTIN, March 24.—Early clashes between former governor Dan Moody and R. R. Penn, who was Governor Ross Sterling's representative at the Texarkana oil states conference marked the opening of the Texas Railroad commission's hearing begun here today in proration.

Penn had opened the meeting with a detailed narration of the previous steps toward proration organization and activities of the advisory central proration committee and an announcement that the committee would first offer testimony to show physical waste in the unprorated fields and later submit schedules of oil market outlet.

Moody objected to proceeding in such a general way.

"Hasn't it been discussed with you, Mr. Penn," asked Moody, "that you would talk east Texas to death?"

"No," replied Penn. "We heard that was your plan but we didn't believe it of you."

"Our plan is to take you here and defeat you now if we can," said Moody, "and if not here, in the court house."

The loud applause that met this declaration was met with notice from the commission that future applause was not desired.

FAVORABLE REPORT ON STERLING BILL

AUSTIN, March 24.—Gov. Ross Sterling's bill for creation of an appointive oil conservation commission will be reported favorably to the legislature by the house committee on oil, gas and mining.

Many members assailed the bill in committee discussions last night but on the vote it won 11 to 8.

Several committee members reserved the right to offer amendments. Those proposed were to make the commission elective and to provide that no member shall have any connection with oil companies.

Representative Bob Long, of Wichita Falls, severely criticized the bill. "Some of you want to report it favorably because it is a governor's measure," said Long. "The governor doesn't look any bigger to me than anyone else."

Long asserted the bill was a product of a Texarkana oil conference which he pointed out was an executive session with newspapers barred.

SPEAKING OF TAX EXEMPT MANUFACTURERS.

Representative H. H. Ray of the Texas and not the ancient Troy introduced a constitutional amendment early in the session. It proposed to exempt all new manufacturing from taxes for ten years. Representative Ray offered his resolution "in an effort to get new industrial enterprises to establish in Texas."

COUNTY HOME RULE.

Had not home rule been in effect, Wednesday's supreme court's decision would not have thrown government of four-fifths the Texas counties into present confusion and uncertainty.

The decision said that the legislature can't pass special laws, aimed to affect one county or city alone.

That means that Tarrant county must be geared to the gait of Hockley county; that Travis and Reeves counties are paired, despite difference in population, by the inflexibility of state general law.

With county home rule, each group, just the same as each city now, would go ahead with flexible enough governmental machinery to continue functioning without a jar.

Forty-odd legislators voted against giving the people a chance to adopt county home rule, when the amendment was engrossed Wednesday. Not all these would have voted against its future final passage, even in the absence of the supreme court decision.

With mass meetings such as those at Georgetown and Waco, demanding a reduction of county government cost and increase of county government efficiency, the lawmakers obviously cannot be blind to the call for reform.

Give us a chance to make the reform.

DIVORCE OIL BILL IN THE PICTURE.

Early in the session what is known as the oil divorce bill, sponsored by the Texas Independent Petroleum association, was introduced in the house. Representative Hardy of Breckenridge, Stephens county, fathered the bill. It prohibits major oil companies from operating filling stations. Its purpose is to divorce the retail branch of the industry from the producer, refining and marketing branches. Its sponsors declared the major companies cut retail prices to drive the small filling station operator out of business and made up their losses through producing and refining and marketing. Now the bill has been given a favorable report by the house committee on oil and gas mining. The vote was nine to eight and the nine votes were cast by representatives from oil producing sections of the commonwealth. Steward of Teague was marked present and not voting. In the "good old days" the lawmakers quarreled over measures affecting hard liquor and the railways. Now hard liquor has been relegated and the railways are asking for what they call "merciful legislation." Gone are the "good old days." Now oil and gas problems are engaging the close attention of the lawmakers and petroleum is the biggest of all issues in the legislative picture.

Well, It's an Interesting "Experiment," Anyway!

OTHER OPINIONS

IS THE SMALL TOWN MERCHANT LOSING OUT?

Of late a great many Texas editors have been asking that question. It is pointed out by the Editorial Digest, Houston, which continues the discussion of the question as follows: "They ask it in all seriousness they are genuinely alarmed about the survival of the small town. 'The small town editor, who sees his townsman purchasing too much and too often from nearby cities, it is a serious matter. Everybody seems to take out, nobody seems to put in—and that's a dangerous condition, whether it be in a crooked village or a city where seventeen railroads and ninety-six steamship lines rub elbows. 'As a matter of fact, no far-sighted city endorses any movement which threatens the prosperity and progress of the small towns which dot its hinterland. The big city is the most dependent and helpless of all political subdivisions. Its arteries are reeled in the towns and villages which surround it, and when these towns and villages are ill-nourished, the city, too, is pretty certain to wither and decay. 'The greatest enemy of the small town is not the nearby city; it is the small town citizen who hasn't learned that the only hundred-per cent dollar is the dollar spent at home. Moreover, strange as it may seem, the worst offender frequently in the small-town merchant who neglects to practice what he preaches. 'For an apparent saving of a few cents the thousand pieces, there are an astonishing number of small-town merchants who buy letterheads and envelopes from the cut-rate printers of distant cities. Does that dollar come home to roost? It does not. Does the out-of-town printer's employer spend his share of that dollar with the home-town merchant? He does not. Does the cut-of-town printer himself contribute to the home-town improvement program? He does not. Does he bank his profits with the home-town bank? Again, he does not. 'If home-town people would develop a sense of home-town loyalty, all this talk of the 'small town losing out' would be the emptiest sort of prattle. There never was a time when so much opportunity for development and growth was offered enterprising communities. Texas' only glass factory is located in a relatively small town, as are her two great sugar refineries, in county of high tension lines for the transmission of electric power have wiped out the small town's disadvantages and emphasized its attractions. 'The only thing that can kill a good, small town is the indifference of its citizens.'"—Paris News.

FUTURE DANDIES

A New York clothier makes a fantastic prophecy regarding the character of masculine attire a century hence. He predicts legs will be bare from ankles to knees and that wide shorts will take the place of trousers for every day business wear. Bright sandals will send shoes into the discard. And the conventional shirt and coat will be supplanted by a combination jacket and shirt, open at the neck like a polo shirt. 'This nightmare is explained by men's growing envy of a woman because of her sensible and quite shy manner of dress. Nothing may come of that envy for the relief of over-dressed masculinity, but anything can happen in a hundred years even to reactionary man. Medians who scoff at the idea of late knees and exposed Adam's apples forget that styles for men have changed radically in the past and can change just as radically in the future. The New Yorker's picture of the 2029 model of manhood is no more fantastic than a description of the 1929 model would have seemed to the generation of 1829. Moreover the dress of 1773 and that of 1929 come under the present-day definition of fantastic. 'It is but a short step from plus fours to wide shorts and an even shorter step from recent modes in men's shoes of contrasting colors to a sandal of blue and gold.' — Paris News.

CRACKS IN THE DOME

By POLITICAL ANALYST

AUSTIN, March 24. — Robert B. Gragg, state labor commissioner, will make an address in Corpus Christi Sunday at the dedication of a Cold Star court of honor to the city's war dead. He will respond on behalf of the patents of the world war men of Corpus Christi who lost their lives. He and Mrs. Gragg, parents of Ernest H. Gragg, will attend the ceremonies. Parents of each of the men to be honored will plant a tree in the court, and place at its base a memorial tablet bearing the soldier's name. 'Rep. West of Coryell insisted, when the Beck county home rule amendment was pending for final passage in the house that the population limit should be set cut down as to give his county the benefit of its use, the same as larger counties. Reps. McGregg of Travis and Ford of McLennan sponsored an amendment to lower the population limit to 75,000, and accepted another by Mr. Van Zandt of Tarrant to place it at 60,000. They were willing to lower it to 40,000, but some members wanted the experiment of home rule government tried first in the larger counties. Rep. Beck was willing to cut out the population limit entirely, but said he did not want to incur opposition from small counties. 'The amendment was made acceptable all around by fixing the 60,000 limit of direct authority for adoption of the plan, and then letting the legislature by separate act later extend the privilege to such counties as may from time to time want it. Mr. Beck stressed the savings and the reforms—particularly abolishing the cumbersome fee system, made possible by the plan. He reiterated it will save his county each year as much as its total state ad valorem tax payments. 'There were members who scented in Rep. Anderson's amendment to require property tax payers voting in bond elections to have rendered the property for taxes before they required the ballot in these elections, an attempt to cut down the vote in favor of the state highway bond issue. Mr. Anderson said this is untrue, because in state bond elections, the poll tax requirement is the only one that may be imposed. And other members said the real effect of his amendment will be a bigger vote for good bond issues, since the main objection usually has come from thriftless persons who are "against" every move. Lawmakers like Rep. F. C. Weimer supported the measure, based on a long experience with the property requirement in bond election voting, and declared it a sound qualification. Rep. Holland of Houston reached directly into Thomas Paine for questions he thundered at Rep. Anderson: "Mr. Anderson, if a man had no property, he could not vote?" "No." "Well, if he bought a mule he and the agricultural marketing act created by the congress of the republic. Cotton has hit a very low level. Wheat has been distanced by corn. Speaking of prices, way down here in Texas the co-operatives are "fighting among themselves," in the oil producing states all other issues have been relegated to the rear, and lawmakers are "up in the air" and copy making for the press is the order of the day. 'This appears to be woman's age. Mrs. R. F. Lindsay of Mt. Pleasant is president of the State Federation of Women's clubs. It is said that there are 60,000 Texas club women. Mrs. Lindsay and many members of her executive committee are here watching pending legislation. Mrs. Lindsay was presented to the senate by State Sen. Margie Neal of the Florida district. She said that the 60,000 Texas club women "wanted a new constitution and a beautiful system of state highways supported by a meter fuel tax." Many of the federation women attend the executive session of the citizens committee on good roads. They voted unanimously for the proposed constitutional amendment which proposes to permit the reduction of the present tax burden and at the same time give the state a complete highway system. 'This convention or conference was attended by a representative gathering of county officials from all sections of the state, and these delegates declared for the proposal "to lift an $85,000,000 burden from the counties through the absorption of outstanding bond issues and the cost of roads constructed by counties and later designed as state highways." Under the amendment they declared it is planned to refund dollar for dollar, all that the counties have spent on designated state highways since July 1, 1927, that being the date of the creation of the state highway commission. In other words the Woodul-Hubbard amendment was given a big boost by the State Federation of Women's clubs and the citizens committee from the counties of the commonwealth. A legislative showdown is coming. It will be wise to pass the plan on to the people. It is said this is a people's government. If so, let their voice be heard at the polling places of Texas.

After figuring up Texas' bond fire in February that cost $324,857. Fire Insurance Commr. J. W. DeWeese pronounced the record fairly good, but good only in other months. 'In January over $1,000,000 Texas property went up in smoke. Figures in both cases are from the 425 towns and cities having local fire marshals and making reports on losses. The state's total is of course much larger. 'Last February 54 vacant houses were burned, and 154 fires were of unknown origin and 10 of known incendiary origin. 'Every city ought to have a fire prevention board,' he declared. 'If you don't think it costs every citizen of a town money because somebody else lets property burn, you should thumb through the list of towns that in former years had 15 per cent credits on their premium rates, and now have 15 per cent penalties. That is approximately a one-third increase in the rate on every policy written in the town for a year.

McALLEN, March 24. — Dishrag gourds, long a nuisance to farmer, may become a profitable new crop for the lower Rio Grande valley if experiments of J. E. Davis are successful. Davis believes the tough inner fiber of the gourd, which is used by housewives for dishrags, is a better material than cork or rubber for shoe insoles. Each gourd will produce two "rags," it is said, and 20,000 gourds can be harvested from a single acre. Davis already has begun planting on a commercial basis. 'I don't consider the total expenditure around the legislature for salaries and clerk hire as serious in itself,' Ponge said, "but it isn't a good example to other departments. We can't spend money and get them to practice economy. And the school district advance sets a bad precedent. 'I was not opposed to the summer school appropriations as to the amount, but to increase in salaries. The emergency bill was passed at an increase over last year's figure, while salaries have already increased by 25 per cent by reason of increased purchasing power. 'The senate passed the emergency bill over Ponge's protest, but the house in its similar bill, cut the figures 80 per cent. 'Sen. Ponge says he is going to watch the regular appropriation bills when they come up, in an effort to find enough places for reduction to wipe out the probable $3,000,000 deficit for the next fiscal year. His efforts will be directed toward keeping salaries down rather than toward preventing passage of the bills, he said.

WACO SENATOR IN FIGHT FOR ECONOMY RULE

AUSTIN, March 24. — A newcomer in the senate, W. R. Poage of Waco, is trying to get that body to set an example of economy for other state departments to follow. He is waging a campaign on the senate floor for the "general principle of economy in expenditures", and says he intends to continue it without formation of a bloc of group of any sort. 'Nor is he meeting with the openly organized "economy bloc" of house members, who invited to do so. Groups defeat their purpose he says, by division on side issues. Ponge has one main issue. He wants the senate to stick to its resolution, adopted early in the session, calling for strict economy and avoidance of appropriations for new bureaus and departments. 'Sen. Poage says the first time he left the senate after that resolution was adopted, the body voted to increase the doorkeeper's salary from $5 to $10 per day. 'He protested that, and last week he protested the payment of $3,000 to the Pastrill school, in Cherokee county, to rebuild it after a tornado; he protested the increased summer school appropriation bill. 'I don't consider the total expenditure around the legislature for salaries and clerk hire as serious in itself,' Ponge said, "but it isn't a good example to other departments. We can't spend money and get them to practice economy. And the school district advance sets a bad precedent. 'I was not opposed to the summer school appropriations as to the amount, but to increase in salaries. The emergency bill was

NEW USE FOR DISHRAG GOURDS

McALLEN, March 24. — Dishrag gourds, long a nuisance to farmer, may become a profitable new crop for the lower Rio Grande valley if experiments of J. E. Davis are successful. Davis believes the tough inner fiber of the gourd, which is used by housewives for dishrags, is a better material than cork or rubber for shoe insoles. In the Political Arena

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD 'Sam H. Thompson of Illinois was appointed a member of the farm board to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Alexander W. Legge.' At any rate the A. P. telegram read that he was appointed "to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Legge." Sam H. Thompson owns a 500-acre farm. He has been an active farmer for years. He has been the active head of the American Farm Bureau Federation. He has been clamoring for national farm legislation. He championed the old McNary-Haugen equalization fee bill. He is a life long republican. It is said he never cast a ballot for a democrat. He has been identified for years with agricultural and livestock raising and grain farming. He is a bank president. He is a director of the Farmers' National Grain corporation. He is one of the original champions of the agricultural marketing act. Butler Alexander W. Legge has returned to his $100,000 a year job as the head of the International Harvester company. His resignation did create a vacancy but if there is a civil farmer on a gentleman farmer in America with the fighting ability to fill that vacancy then future will develop the man. This is the viewpoint of the successor of Legge, "I have frequently stated that back of the present economic depression is the plight of American agriculture. If the buying power of agriculture can be restored, business in general will soon be back on a sound basis. The full development of our national policy on agriculture, laid down by the marketing act and being enacted by the farm board, held great promise for the equalization of the economic position of our farm people."

Alexander W. Legge was named by Pres. Hoover as the president of the board and as the representative of the farmers of the country. He stepped aside and James C. Stone of Kentucky succeeded him as president of the board. Stone, who made a great name in the tobacco cooperative field of endeavor, will continue as president. In June Former Gov. Samuel McKelvie of Nebraska will retire and C. A. Teague of California, representative of the citrus fruit industry, will step aside and return to the Golden Coast country to protect his private interests as well as to be the adviser of the California citrus growers. Sam H. Doctors Disagree When children are irritable and peevish, grind their teeth and sleep restlessly, have digestive pains and disturbances, lack of appetite, and have itching eyes, nose and fingers, doctors will not always agree that they are suffering from worms. Many mothers, too, will not believe that their carefully brought up children can have worms. The fact remains that these symptoms will yield, in a great majority of cases, to a few doses of White's Cream Vermifuge, the sure expellant of round and pin worms. If your child has any of these symptoms, try this harmless, old-fashioned medicine which you can get at 35c per bottle from DEAN DRUG CO.

nia and the Noma theatre in Wichita, Kansas.

Already known as the fastest growing theatre circuit in America, having acquired since January first of this year more theatres than any other unit, with these latest acquisitions Hughes Franklin is exceeded in size by only four other organizations.

"Our rapid advance as a theatre circuit is the result of our conviction of faith in the country's future and speaks more eloquently than could any words of mine, our belief in the soundness of business fundamentals," say Harold Franklin, president, and Howard Hughes, chairman of Hughes Franklin and joint authors of the announcement.

"We have with our latest move taken on over twenty thousand more seats because we firmly believe that they will be filled increasingly in the coming years. Our original policy goes into the new houses: the ultimate in service, and the best talkies; and each theatre to be a civic, living institution of its own community."

Other deals now pending adds Franklin, will shortly be concluded, making Hughes Franklin before its first six months of operation a circuit of first consideration nationally.

RIDE ON OF THE WINGS OF MOMENTUM

Three of the most abused words in motordom are 'Luxury, Performance and Economy. But I would welcome the opportunity to prove to you that the new Free Wheeling Hupmobile transmission gives you a far greater measure of each than is possible without it.

Free wheeling is really an innovation. I am sure that it will be adopted by all progressive manufacturers within the next few years, because owners will insist upon it.

Perhaps you don't understand how this simple invention prevents fatigue in driving—how it makes gear shifting much easier for every driver—how silent it is in second speed—how gently it deals with chassis and passengers—how it saves you money in fuel, oil and reduced wear.

I am therefore inviting you to a special seven-mile ride, with you at the wheel, to let you prove these strong statements to your own satisfaction. The car will be equipped with special instruments which you can check yourself and there will be nothing to interfere with your test or your enjoyment.

Will you ride with me on the wings of momentum?

Like Steel, the best Gasoline is Blended

CONOCO

THE BALANCED - BLEND GASOLINE

In the roaring inferno of the furnace, many elements blend into varying grades of steel. Iron, manganese, silicon, carbon, all join to produce a steel to suit a purpose.

In making gasoline, too, blending is necessary to produce a fuel to fit your motor. No one grade of unblended gasoline possesses a wide enough range of qualities to stand alone.

So CONOCO blends three types into a perfectly-proportioned whole . . . Natural Gasoline, for quick starting . . . Straight-run Gasoline, for surging power and long mileage qualities . . . Cracked Gasoline, to contribute anti-knock properties.

True, any refiner could do this. Just as any amateur can blend the same elements found in secret formulae for making steel. But in the oil industry, as in the steel business, there always are headliners . . . a select few whose products are eminently better.

CONOCO is definitely a member of this group in the refining of gasoline . . . because CONOCO has men who know how. And it's all in knowing how!

We pride ourselves on this balanced-blend triple-test gasoline. Won't you try it today? Just ask for CONOCO . . . wherever you see the CONOCO Red Triangle.

MAD MARRIAGE

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Gypsy McBride, 19-year-old typist in a New York office, is miserable and lonely when she finds that Alan Crosby, just returned from a year and a half in Paris studying art, no longer cares for her. Crosby is infatuated with Mrs. Langley, wealthy divorcee, who considers herself a patron of art. Gypsy becomes disgusted with her job and when she is criticized for carelessness impulsively resigns. She accepts an invitation from her wealthy cousin, Anne Trowbridge, to take the place of another guest at a formal dinner. The party is a bore. She leaves to get her wraps and go home, hears a noise in the next room and opens the door to see a man climbing in the window. He is James Wallace, guest of the Trowbridge, who has entered by the fire escape to avoid the dinner party guests. Wallace tells Gypsy he has just been jilted by his fiancée. She admits she has had the same experience. To spite the girl he cares for Wallace asks Gypsy to marry him. She first refuses but later accepts.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XVI

Gypsy moved restlessly and frowned at the sunbeam that had progressed from her chin to her left eye. The sunbeam remained. She blinked the other eye, shut it again. Suddenly the girl sat bolt upright. Heavens—it must be after eight o'clock! She would never reach the office. What had happened to the alarm clock—!

She turned and stared at an unfamiliar piece of furniture—a chair upholstered in blue plush. Then, remembering everything that had happened yesterday, she sank back against the pillows.

Judging by the sunlight which streamed into the room it was the middle of the morning. Everyone else in the household had probably been a long ago. Gypsy lay still thinking about her marriage, the train trip, Jim Wallace's face last night in the fire-light, that fearful woman, Aunt Ellen.

It wasn't a dream. It had all been true. When she finally arose the girl bathed and dressed quickly. She put on the jersey frock she had worn to the office, got out her oxfords and then changed them for the brown pumps. Instead of pinning up her hair she brushed and fastened it at the back of her neck so that the ends curled, giving her a childish look. Gypsy had not thought of this. She was trying to save time.

In the bright daylight for the first time she really noticed the furnishings of the bedroom. It was easy to see that it had been kept as a "guest room." The furniture was walnut of ornate Victorian design and each piece stood stiffly in its proper place. At the windows there were blue draperies. Blue and tan rug on the floor. Blue and tan on the dressing table. Not a single trace of anything personal—not even a cheerful bit of chintz in sight. And blue and tan were colors Gypsy always avoided.

She shut the door on the gloomy room and hurried downstairs. There was no one in sight either way she looked from the hall. Gypsy went through the living room into the dining room. Still no one in sight. As she neared the kitchen she heard voices.

Harriet who was at the stove, turned as Gypsy opened the kitchen door. "Good morning, Ma'am," she said.

"Good morning, Harriet. Is Miss Wallace about?"

"Miss Wallace's gone to market, Ma'am. She left about half an hour ago. Would you like your breakfast now? I'll get it right away."

The person to whom Harriet had evidently been talking was a small man down on his knees working at the lock of the outer door. Carpenter's tools were spread beside him on the floor.

"Any time, do," Gypsy told the cook. "I'm in a hurry."

She returned to the dining room and the view from the broad windows looked out over the sun porch. There was a garden behind the house. Gypsy thought it must be very attractive in summer. Now the trees and shrubs were bare and the grass was a faded brown. Gypsy wondered if the bushes in the distance were lilac. She had always wanted a garden with lilac bushes and old-fashioned hollyhocks and poppies. There at the left was a sun dial. Yes, it must be a lovely place in summer time.

Two months, Jim had said, before the trees would begin leafing out. Two months would be in May. Gypsy, wondering absently what the date might be, suddenly started. Yesterday, her wedding day, had been March 5. Surely she should have remembered!

Harriet entered the room and as she heard her Gypsy turned. "How good everything looks!" the girl said.

The cook smiled. "I hope you'll like it, Ma'am." She put the tray down and set out the dishes. There was a plate of curling bacon and an omelet, golden-brown, that sent up steaming, delicious odors. Under a folded napkin was the toast and beside it a dish of honey. Harriet poured the coffee and at the first whiff of its fragrance Gypsy realized she was hungry.

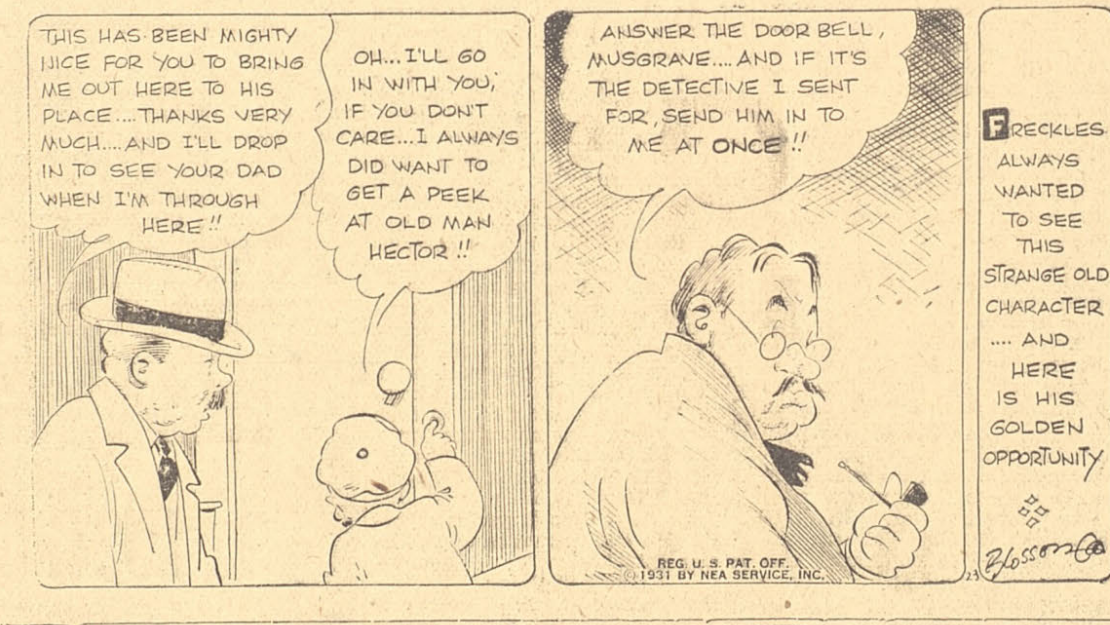

The food was good. Gypsy had finished the last crumb of toast and was drinking her second cup of coffee when she heard a noise in the front part of the house. Someone had come in. The girl straightened, every nerve taut, then pushed back her chair and

The John Sealy hospital is comprised of seven units, costing with equipment, $1,500,000. It consists of a $200,000 main building which holds 300 beds, a $300,000 power plant, a $100,000 nurses home, a $50,000 children's hospital, a $100,000 woman's hospital, a $25,000 colored hospital, and the $500,000 out-patient clinic.

SEALY'S GIFT PROVES BOON TO HOSPITAL

GALVESTON, March 24. — Few persons know about the John Sealy hospital outside of the city of Galveston, Texas.

Yet with an original endowment of more than $10,000,000 which will be eventually $50,000,000, this hospital today ranks with the country's 10 richest endowed medical institutions.

Situation in a city with a population of 54,000, the John Sealy hospital is one of the largest in the state of Texas. Recently a half-million-dollar out-patient clinic was completed. Not even a formal ceremony was held in honor of the occasion. And all because of an unwritten law which has prevailed around the institution since it first opened its doors in 1889 — "No publicity — No fanfare — Let its ministrations tell the story."

The hospital adjoins the University of Texas medical school. While financially it operates under a separate board, it is interlocked with the university in medical and laboratory activities. Through an agreement reached with the University of Texas medical school in 1891, the hospital is supplied with services of the medical staff for its charity patients, in return for which the school has the privilege of using these patients for teaching purposes.

On the same site where the famed pirate Jean Lafitte held sway over the city, terrorizing its inhabitants with his excessive demands for booty, the hospital now stands as a "Gift to the People of Galveston."

The gift dates back to 1881 when members of the Texas legislature were rallying as to the need of a medical school and a teaching hospital. Neither was as yet established.

As one legislator of the time prudently expressed himself: "If the state is going into the business of making doctors and dentists, it ought also to get up schools in which to train blacksmiths, cobblers and various other trades."

"Therefore, in order to stimulate action and to foster the establishment of the medical school in Galveston, the estate of John Sealy, through its heirs, contributed a sum of $50,000 for a teaching hospital. Mr. Sealy was a millionaire Galvestonian who made his fortune in cotton, wharf interests, railroads and banking.

The hospital was completed in 1889 and donated to the city. With the establishment of the medical school here in 1891, the hospital was presented to the school.

Then John Sealy's son — also named John Sealy (a bachelor) — began taking an active interest in the hospital. Financially his entire estate — more than $10,000,000 in cash, lands, securities — was bequeathed to the hospital. The interest of this money goes for the operation of the institution and for the construction of new buildings. Discovery of oil on some of the property and incredible land values has boosted the value of the estate at a conservative estimate of $30,000,000.

"Reciprocally the state and national banking systems have helped each other. If the national banking law has served in some respects as something of a model code toward which state banking laws more and more have approached year by year, so have the state codes developed valuable reforms which have suggested improvements for the national laws. A great many undesirable competitive inequalities have been wiped out by this mutual evolutionary process and further progress along the line of uniformity so far as is desirable is anticipated.

"However, I do not believe that it is a disadvantage to have two banking codes that differ in some respects. It is quite probable that the state banking code in many instances represents a closer adjustment to local conditions than could be had under the national banking laws, and this is a situation that should be retained. There should, however, not be competition between the two banking codes. Competition should be between banks themselves and not between the laws under which they operate. The effort to offer too great alternatives in one code as against the other could lead only to weak banking laws. But I do think that there should be the alternative opportunities that now exist which banking institutions and local business interests may choose, so that they can function or conduct their business relationships under that banking code which best meets the conditions of the times and of the place as they see them.

"This has been illustrated in both directions. In states where such sound measures as the guarantee of deposits were operative state banks had the opportunity to escape the baleful effect of such laws. On the other hand, when a court decision was handed down in Worcester, Massachusetts, which rendered uncertain the position of trust assets acquired by a national bank through a merger with a state bank, it was a real advantage for national banks affected to take out and operate under a state charter, either on a temporary or a permanent basis, as circumstances make expedient.

"In my opinion, bankers, national as well as state, should combat the thought that conveys of depriving us of the vitalizing benefits of our dual system."

Recent suggestions that all banks in the United States be under Federal jurisdiction, doing away with the chartering of banks by the various states recalls the opposition to this plan presented at the recent convention of the American Bankers Association by R. S. Hecht of New Orleans, chairman of its Economic Policy Commission. Mr. Hecht said:

"There are just as good reasons why there should be state as well as national banks as that there should be state as well as a national government. I do not think that analogy is far-fetched. The states should not surrender all political jurisdiction to the central government, and the local business life of the states should not be made to surrender all control over financial functions to national financial instrumentalities. There are many variations of business conditions from state to state and there are special fiscal requirements of the various states.

"It is entirely logical, therefore, that the states should retain the right to charter banks so as to mold and direct their affairs in accordance with the states' governmental and business requirements and keep them adapted to localized sentiment and conditions.

"The argument is sometimes advanced that the dual system jeopardizes the life of the Federal Reserve System because under it there is a large group of banks that are free to remain out of or to withdraw from the system. Facts and figures prove that this is a specious argument.

"It is true that there has been some shifting from national to state charters especially in cases of mergers of large national banks with banks operating under state charters. However, the Federal Reserve System was not weakened in this process because the merged institutions almost universally retained their membership in the system on a voluntary basis. Moreover, the records show that state bank members are just as good members of the system as national banks and the ratio of state bank resources in the Federal Reserve System is constantly growing. In 1922 national banks held about 65 per cent of the resources of reserve members, and state banks about 35 per cent, while in 1929, the nationals held only 60 per cent and state banks 50 per cent.

"Reciprocally the state and national banking systems have helped each other. If the national banking law has served in some respects as something of a model code toward which state banking laws more and more have approached year by year, so have the state codes developed valuable reforms which have suggested improvements for the national laws. that were trees or open spaces. Beyond this nondescript skyline, reaching over and above them, was the bluest of blue skies, flecked here and there with fleecy cloud masses. The cold yellow sunshine gave the panorama brilliance.

The girl's eyes were fastened on the azure distance. "It's wonderful, Jim," she said.

"I always like to come to this place," he told her. "Discovered it myself." He began to point out municipal landmarks, when suddenly he stopped.

"You're shivering, Gypsy. Why didn't you tell me you were cold. That little coat you've got on isn't enough to keep you warm. Why, didn't you say something?"

She insisted she was not cold. There was no robe, Wallace started to take of his own coat but she indignantly refused it. He turned the radiator back toward the city. "Well stop at the Carlton," he announced. "Get you warmed up there and have lunch. No use to drive clear out to the house."

The Carlton was Forest City's best hotel. Jim was greeted by several acquaintances as they walked through the lobby and Gypsy felt eyes upon her. The head waiter called Jim "Mr. Wallace," and was solicitous about their luncheon.

It was an excellent meal. The warm room flushed Gypsy's cheeks becomingly. After the morning out of doors both of them were in good spirits and hungry.

Jim had been telling her about an amusing law case and the girl was laughing when she noticed two women across the room. Mother and daughter they seemed to be. Gypsy saw that the older woman was watching them and resented her scrutiny.

"Jim," she said finally, "who is that woman across the room? She's been watching us."

Wallace turned his head, glanced back quickly. "Someone I don't care to meet," he said in a lowered voice. "Let's bet out of here."

It was too late. Already the couple had arisen and were walking toward them.

THE WORLD'S RICHEST MEN

Ex-Kaiser Is Rated as One of Germany's Wealthiest Men. The Extent of His Fortune Is Unknown, But Is Supposed to Exceed by Many Million Marks the Estimate of 1913.

By H. A. PETERS

United Press Staff Correspondent BERLIN, March 24.—Ex-Kaiser Wilhelm II remains today the richest German, in his own rights, either inside or outside the country, despite the revolution, inflation, economic depression or political disturbances.

Although market fluctuations in recent years must have affected his fortune, his total capital is variously estimated at 150,000,000 to 250,000,000 marks; some even place the estimate higher.

A large share of this is invested in various industrial shares, which recently have suffered from Germany's financial crisis. Much of it is represented by castles and various estates which he still owns in Germany and on which hundreds of persons are still working for him.

Richer Than Before War.
If these generally accepted estimates of the ex-kaiser's wealth are true then he is much richer than he was before the war. In 1913 semi-official estimates placed his wealth at 140 million marks, and the fortunes of four of his subjects took precedence over his. Heading the list was Frau Bertha Krupp von Bohlen and Halbach, with 283 million marks.

But as the inflation period brought new stars to the financial horizon, so the depression combined with the abrupt shrinkage to peace time production quickly diminished the value of the Krupp plants and definitely took that fortune out of the front rank.

The same causes combined to shrink other great fortunes, which were based largely on land values. The family fortune of the Counts Henkel von Donnersmark, rated in 1913 at 253 million marks, has lost heavily, although it is still estimated as one of Germany's largest. That is because it still comprises rich mining property in the Upper Silesia industrial district.

Industrialists today are admitted Germany's wealthiest, and among these the names of two steel magnates stand out: Friedrich Flick, director or chairman of some 15 different enterprises, a controlling factor in the industry both in Westphalia and Upper Silesia, and a dominant figure in the steel trust; and Fritz Thyssen, also from the Rhur, heir to the gigantic iron mills which his father August built up.

Rode Inflation Period.
Both of these men rode on the crest of the inflation wave, weathered the stabilization, and went on to pile up more wealth in the lean years which followed.

Flick, comparatively little known outside of Germany, rose from the obscurity of several Ruhr directorships shortly after the war. He bought control of the richest Bismark mines of Upper Silesia in 1921. Then his genius for financing, amalgamations and judging of directorships appeared, gaining him the reputation of being one of the shrewdest and most daring operators in Germany industry. He was even, in the light of later developments, rated higher than Thyssen, with whom he then was dealing.

Shortly after Flick acquired control of the Bismark enterprises, his Charlotten Mines in the Dusseldorf area were mysteriously sold. Flick retained his directorship, however. The Bismark company then began to reach out into other Upper Silesian industries, quickly absorbing the Katowitz Mining Co., and later the Upper Silesian Iron Industry. A. G. Flick's genius or organization and promotion apparently was unlimited.

Hard Training.
Thyssen also has had hard and exacting training in the German industrial school. Besides steel and coal enterprises in Westphalia, he controls half a score of allied companies. He rates among the most powerful the few industrialists on whom much of Germany's future depends. He has been chairman of the International Raw Steel Combine since 1928.

A fairly long list of others who profited during the inflation period could be named but later years have somewhat diminished their fortunes. The Thyssen fortune has faded. Jacob Michaels, real estate speculator, still retains a comfortable slice of the millions he took out of the inflation period, but he could not hold all of it by any means.

Back to industrialists — comes Otto Wolff, the Iron Man of Cologne who turned his tinplate factory to very profitable use during the war. He saw the possibilities of peace time before peace was made, and was ready to plunge into large scale export just after the war; did a gratifying business in old war materials.

Cologne was the cross roads for Allied traffic in and out of Germany at the time; he made the most of it. Reached out and absorbed a couple of steel companies. He must be reckoned with in any roll call of industrial barons today.

NO WINNERS IN CAMEL CONTEST YET ANNOUNCED

WINSTON SALEM, N. C., March 24.—The appearance of a number of faked telegrams falsely notifying individuals in various sections of the country that they have been awarded one of the prizes offered by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company in the Camel Cigarette contest, lead officials of the company to issue this statement today.

"We have learned through numerous letters, telegrams and newspaper articles that practical jokers in some sections of the country are sending telegrams purporting to come from us, notifying individuals that they have won a prize in our $50,000.00 Camel Cigarette contest," the statement said.

"We regret the appearance of these boxes and wish to assure contestants and the public generally that no prize selections have yet been made. In fact, it will be several weeks before the judges and their staff can possibly make selections.

"Approximately a million answers were received in the contest. Obviously, a fair reading of so many letters requires a considerable period of time. Every letter is being given a careful reading. Those with special merit must be studied.

"We want to thank all who entered the contest and to ask them to be patient. Several more weeks must elapse before the judges can render a decision. The names of all the winners will be included in our formal announcement just as quickly as the letters can be examined and selections determined."
