What the Government Says About Thrift;

"Thrift" says the government, means good management; vigorous growth. "Thrift does look toward the future alone. Thrift means better living NOW.

"Learn to know values; the value of your work; the value of the fruits of your labor. Weigh expenditures. Put your thinking cap on and keep it on."

Why not begin today to practice systematic thrift, if you have not done so? We want to help you.

TEXAS DEMOCRATS SELECT DELEGATES OFFER

Instructed to Vote for Mc-Adoo as Long as His Name Is Before Convention.

Waco, Tex.—Sounding a warning against the "reactionary elements in our own party," and declaring that 'we must work hard to win the victory for a progressive democracy," keynote speech before the state democratic convention Tuesday, following his election as chairman of the convention, told the group of Texas democrats that William G. McAdoo "is the outstanding leader of progressive democrats and the only man with whom we can win in November.'

was greeted with cheering approval by the convention.

In closing his speech Mr. Hicks read a telegram from Mr. McAdoo addressed to the democrats of Texas assembled in convention. This telegram said: "I wish to convey the heartiest in convention at Waco; also to say to tional labor court. them that what they have already gressive democracy just as they clinched it at Baltimore in 1912 for progressive democracy and Woodrow

The democrats of Texas, in conventhe democratic party should remain true to progressive democratic prin- conditions, morally, politically and ciples and secure to the people the restoration of the clean, efficient and economic government, the high conception of public duty, and the notable ideals of service to humanity that characterized the eight years in office of the immortal statesman and benefactor nomic welfare. of mankind-Woodrow Wilson.

Recognizing in William Gibbs Mc-Adoo the outstanding exponent of the progressive and liberal thought of America and of the above principles, we therefore instruct our delegates to the national convention to be held at New York to vote as a unit for the nomination of William Gibbs McAdoo as the democratic candidate for president of the United States so long as his name is before the convention; and that they also vote as a unit on all questions arising at that convention, and that the delegates in attendance at the convention be authorized to cast the entire vote of the delegation.

We unhesitatingly declar our con fidence in his incorruptible honesty, his exalted patriotism and his unprecédented executive ability.

Because of his experience and the knowledge acquired during more than five years as ex offico president of the Pan-American Congress, William Gibbs McAdoo is especially equipped for service to Texas and the Southwest in bringing about a commercial and social relationship to the great advantage of our entire citizenship.

Repeal of Tariff Bill. The same congress should forth-

with repeal the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill and enact a just and fair tariff measure, giving to the farmers a restored world market for their products and the opportunity to buy the things they consume at reasonable prices; while such a tariff bill should do justice to industry and business and the public, it should preclude the possibility of continuing the iniquitous and inexcusable system of robbing the people under the guise of tariff laws for the enrichment of the few and the campaign contributors at the expense of the people. The grip of Wall Street should be taken off the treasury department and the Federal Reserve system and those great instrumentalities should again be operated, as they were under the Wilson administration, for the benefit of all the people and not made, as now, the servants of special privilege.

Note Says Present Situation Source of Difficulty and Can Not Be Prolonged

London.-The allies intend to keep a firm hand on military control on Germany by maintaining the commission of control in full operation until the disarmament demands made in the treaty of Versailles are fully executed, according to a long note from the council of Ambassadors sent to Berlin from Paris.

The Ambassadors' communication was in reply to the German note of March 31, in which the Berlin Government maintained that it was time for the League of Nations to take over the supervision. The Ambassadors' note reaffairms the contention that it is the legal right of the allies to decide for themselves when the time has arrived for transferring the duty of controlling German armaments to the league after the time limit clauses have been executed.

"It would be hardly possible to contend that this condition is fulfilled today," the note said.

The allies propose to end the military control as soon as possible, says the note, which urges acceptance of the general inspection contemplated by the allies note of March 5, which would consist of a series of visits. This inspection, in the view of the allied Governments, could be completed within three or four months if it met with no obstructions and if no grave infraction of the treaty's clauses were discovered.

Replying to the German claim that the allies themselves had recognized that apart from five specified categories', Germany has fulfilled her disarmament obligations, the Ambassadors' note says the allied Governments never expressed such an opinion. It points out that in the Brittish House of Commons the Government made certain declarations relative to German disarmament but that these declarations were not intended to imply that Germany had fulfilled her obligations; they merely indicated that certain clauses at one time appeared to them, to have been effectively carried out.

"If more than four years after the enforcement of the treaty Germany is still obliged to undergo investigations by an interallied commission, responsibilty for the situation rests only on herself," says the note. "If there had not been systematic obstruction, of which the allies many times had complained, the operations of disarmament would have been completed a long time ago."

The Ambassadors say they feel called upon to define for the last time the conditions of the problem, which allows only one of two solu-

First, either the German Government will accept the general inspecresults are satisfactory the military control will be limited to five points; or second, Germany will persist in refusing the allied offer, upon which the allies will demand strict application of the treaty.

> 2. To Show That God Was Righteous in His Visitation of Judgment Upon Them (Ezek. 7:8, 9).

> 3. To Sustain Their Faith by Assuring Them of Their National Restoration, the Punishment of Their Enemies and the Final Exalted Place of Israel Among the Nations When Messiah Should Reign (Ezek. 34:20-31).

I. Indictment of the False Shepherds (vv. 1-19).

Israel's ruined condition resulted from the failure of the rulers to properly care for the people of Israel, God's sheep. Their sin was that:

1. They Exploited the People Instead of Shepherding Them (vv. 1-3). The shepherds were appointed to feed the flock but instead of that they fed themselves, even devouring the sheep and clothing themselves with the wool thereof.

2. They Failed to Minister to the Sick, the Diseased and Wounded (v. 4). It is not enough that the shepherds refrain from doing evil to the sheep. They are expected to strengthen the weak and bind up the wounds of those that have been injured. 8. They Did Not Search Out the Lost Sheep (vv. 5-9). Sheep left to themselves wander away. The sheep are not expected to look after themselves but to be cared for by the shepherd. In their scattered condition they became the prey of wild beasts. None sought after them though they had wandered through the mountains and over the hills.

4. The Lord Held the Priests and Rulers of Israel Responsible for This Condition (v. 10). The Lord always holds those responsible who have been set over his children.

II. Israel to Be Restored (Tw. 11-22). Though the rulers have so wretchedly failed, the almighty God will come to the rescue of His people.

1. He Will Search and Seek Them Out (vv. 11, 12). Though Israel be scattered throughout the nations, the divine shepherd will deliver them from every place where they have been scat-

2. Will Bring Them Into Their Own Land (v. 13). This was partly fulfilled in the return of the remnant under Ezra and Nehemiah, but the real fulfillment awaits the future.

3. Will Feed Them (vv. 13, 14). He will not only satisfy them with food. He will cause them to lie down in perfect contentment and security (vv.

4. Shall No More Be a Prey (v. 22). Though God's chosen people have been scattered through the mountains and over the hills of the nations and have been a prey to the repacious greed of the many nations, God will one day deliver his sheep and will judge the false shepherds.

III. The Coming Good Shepherd (vv. 23-31).

The instrument through which this great deliverance is to be wrought is the Messiah Himself.

1. He Will Make a Covenant of Peace (v. 25). This condition of peace will be brought about by the presence of the Lord among them. The world and Israel will only know actual peace when the Prince of Peace shall come and rule over the whole earth.

2. Evil Beasts Removed (v. 25). The redemption which awaits Israel and the world will not only affect God's children and their rulers but will bring about peace even among the animals, so that His children can sleep in peace and quiet even in the woods.

3. Showers of Blessing Come Down

God's chosen people shall be a blessing to the world, according to His original purpose for them. When these blessings are poured out, it shall be known that they flow from Jesus Christ, the good Shepherd. The purpose of Israel's choice was that the world might be blessed through them (Gen. 12:1.3).

The white man, as Kayama, is taken, reservations to the house of unconscious, to the house of Aochi. His name is Robert Wells. Wells awakes bewildered, but to familiar scenes, in Aochi's house. Aochi, almost sightless from age, Aochi, almost sightless from age, does not perceive the deception. He had determined his unworthy son should be put to death, but Wells' deportment leads him to think a reformation is possible. Aochi dies that day. Wells finds Kayama's note, and understands. Priests remind him of a bargain he has made, to buy a girl. He goes to the temple and purchases the girl, to all appearances white, though the priests assure him she has Chinese blood. She tells him she is white—"all white"—and begs him to spare her.

But with all the explanations which Doctor Wells must make, and the disruption to the household affairs, the coming of Misako was a boon to the frightened lady-mother of little Bobbie. Misako brought (it was all they could do) a letter from the missionaries in a village near Mitagiri; six months later she became Bobbie's tuck-me-in-bed an' kiss-me-'night, for the lady-mother died.

His father, always a silent man, became doubly stern; devoted perfunctorily to his duties, insistent that the boy spend long hours over dry books. Bobbie saw him seldom.

As contact with his father de-Bobbie's affection. Long tales she told him, as they sat evenings upon the mats. Most of all of the town from whence she had come, its grandeur and richness, the terrific god who lived in Mitagiri, the Thunder God, whose face was veiled, that ordinary men and women might live. To look upon the god, save for the highborn, was certain death, so awful was his visage.

As the child grew, a sturdy, brownskinned youngster, Misako's love became rapt devotion. It was typical of Doctor Wells that he had not flinched at having been sent to Takusaki, although he had seen its location upon the map, and knew that he would be the only missionary for miles around. This had not daunted him, inspired rather. He did not consider it as martyrdom: it was his duty.

Now this very thing reacted against him. More than once he had felt that if . . . if only he had been able to secure medical attention, he mightn't have lost Elsie. Now he saw his son playing in the dust with the ragged urchins of the village. Takusaki itself, as a town, might well have been any of a thousand. He did not consider it as a town. It was a place of heathen, who did not listen or, listening, did not learn.

His wife, in her brief stay, had been delighted with it. This Wells did not Plum, in the Season of-" understand. He remembered only her him often.

That Bobbie should acquire the mannerisms of his playmates was natmannerisms of his playmates was natural, but that his skin became a so long . . ." he paused, vacant-eyed. creamy-yellow in tan, that long days At eighteen. His own boyhood: the in the hot sun should cause his eyes great square house in a commodious to narrow—this gave his father secret dismay. The lad swam, played with the rest. His arms and legs browned -the missionary saw nothing in the boy that resembled either his wife or himself.

The lad was bright. His subtle reasonings and brilliant cross-cuts through problems in mathematics were, Doctor Wells felt, means to learn with superficial rapidity. Nor had the boy proper reverence; he had early been disgraced for clapping his To a college for learning?" hands in Shinto prayer, learned at the temple, while Doctor Wells was performing a funeral ceremony over a departed church member. Bobbie saw in the village many things that were heautiful. These, his father, with the stern taste of the West already developed, did not see. or would not look for. Especially were the temples unesthetic and abominable; he had no patience with the very few missionaries who saw them as objects of art.

It can be seen that Doctor Wells had no sympathy with the very air care to be a missionary." which his son breathed, since that air was filled with ancient folk-lore and myths, filled with Orientalesque per-was no more Bobbie-San. She could remember no such person. Instead, there lived in the house the heir to the house of the Thunder Gate. She bowed before him, calling the boy Kayama-San. Doctor Wells did not exist, save as a sort of upper servant, The house was Bobbie's. Bobbie was served first. Bobbie's wishes must be consulted before she would permit a servant to carry out one of Doctor Wells', orders.

Bobbie took it as a matter of course. Misako liked it. That was enough. Wasn't she his little moth-

To please her, he would memorize long Shinto prayers. Became adept in the Rules of Courtesy. Because it delighted her to see him imperious, he could adopt a commanding manner before her and the other servants. Misako had one principal worry. The boy was old enough to be married. To whom?

In vain she painted a picture for the boy. There would be a beautiful girl, versed in every duty and appreciative of her exalted position. A girl with long, fine fingers, with eyes that would shine like black jewels under brows curved as the wings of the nightbirds; her black hair would be woven with the blossom of the plum; she would have kimonos of pale silk with shifting colors changing with the light. Here, and here alone, Bobbie would laugh, although he took pains to conceal his amusement from Misako.

The position of Doctor Wells, in his own household, became intolerable, He could discharge Misako, yet dreaded facing his Maker and admitting that he had acted so with one of such great and simple faith.

It was in a bitter moment that he fumbled through his scant correspond-

He found a letter already creamy with age. It had been written shortly after the death of Bobbie's mother:

"Send the boy to me, if you will. If you want the little fellow educated in footsteps. I tell you that frankly. To my way of thinking, there is more religion in bringing water to a desert, or housing the poor properly, than in preaching to a horde of savages. You remember. It is for Elsie, and the boy."

Doctor Wells, from his window, the letter upon the desk before him, watched a mendicant, copper bowl banging against skinny shanks, weary, sore of feet, extend his bowl at the doorway to Misako, begging a handful of rice, the scrapings of the bean-curd pot, a few shreds of fish. Whimpering, the mendicant thanked Misako for her gift.

Doctor Wells heard her answerthat thanks be poured down upon her great and revered lord, Kayama-San.

Nonsense. Nonsense. What would the boy come to? Better swallow his pride. Suppose Bobbie were left alone. What would happen? With sudden intent he clapped his hands.

"Send me my son," he ordered. "We see little of each other, Robert." he said when the boy entered. "Sit down, son. How," his voice faltered a moment, "how old are you?" "I was born in the year of the Forty-third Blossoming of the Sacred

CHAPTER V

James Sanderson was pleased with the lad's build and clear eyes. The big house on Nob hill was pleased with him likewise. While he was unimpressed with the grandeur, taking it as a matter of course, yet he had a smile for every one without being familiar. It was not to be doubted that he had a manner, as if he were the master's son, let alone the child of the master's sister and a pennyscrunchin' missionary.

When James Sanderson had arrived at that place which-permitted him to build a house of his own, it was of a piece with its neighbors, a wonderful example of ornamentation. The portico was corinthian-columned. There were pinnacles and many-angled roofs, all wood painted gray. Wherever a space permitted, the whole was iced with carved wood, acanthi and fat star in football." Rubens-like babies all sprawling together.

It was with a twinge, after the fire and earthquake had swept away his house with all of the others, that Sanderson admitted that a change would be necessary. This he agreed to, as far as the exterior of the house was concerned. There was now nothing but severe lines, and even his plea for a Doric column was overwhelmed by the architect.

He was, however, positive about two things. He would have none of your low ceilings. He wanted large rooms, where there was space for a man to breathe.

The other matter was a view-room. Formerly, a cupola had served this purpose. The nearest that Sanderson could come was to insist that upon the roof be built a pill-box (as the architect called it) which set at the opposite end from the roof's water tank. It had many windows and was reached As contact with his father decreased, so did Misako usurp all of sie would have liked it. He will not ing before the door, and then continby a spiral staircase which had a landbe permitted to follow in his father's ued to a trapdoor in the roof. From the windows of this tower room was a sheer drop of sixty feet.

Wisely, Sanderson had this room prepared for Bob. It was apart from the house. "No sense keepin' the lad won't do this at once, Richard. You in a boarding school. A fellow wants were always obstinate. But this is an a little privacy. A place to bring his open offer. It isn't a favor to you, friends where we grownups won't disturb them, nor hear them."

The room pleased Bob immensely. Sanderson had fitted it up, as he said, to give the lonely boy a homelike place. Actually, he had adorned the room as he would have liked his own room when he was a lad.

Floor space, nothing to speak of; walls covered with the sort of hunting prints that Sanderson had always admired; four chairs, all bought second-hand, so as to be "homelike, and not stiff:" a rack of books, filled with some of his uncle's own. A broad double bed, curtained from the room (Sanderson had slept upon grainsacks when he first came around the Horn); a table with a humidor, lest Bob take to cigarettes (which he early

His first days in the streets startled him. It was strange to walk through the crowds of hurrying people and see no face that he knew. Once or twice he had greeted a Japanese, only to be rewarded with a blank stare, or a supercilious giggle. After that he was silent. Yet he could not help but feel each time he saw a brown face disappear in the crowd, an unexpected poignant loneliness . . . it seemed to world had vanished, leaving him alone,

He was entirely unaware of encouraging looks thrown at him. Bob was, as a woman with two tiny bundles remarked to her companion, not at all hard to look at. There was something commanding about him. Not infrequently a girl, or a free-and-easy young matron, found time to smile at Sanderson liked the man-company. It gave him a feeling that no guest, no matter how intimate, could instill. The boy's rapt attention when he spoke he took not as duty, but as interest. It was a combination of both. The slightest encouragement was sufficient to start him reminiscing of his college days. He felt that Bob should be forewarned, but did not realize that he was arming him as well.

Bob is learning to be an American. What will be the effect

GARNER SAYS G.O.P. FOLLOWING HIM

The Large Deficit Predicted By The Treasury Recently Turned Out to Be a Surplus.

Washington.-The position of the Republican Congressional leaders on the tax bill, the conference report upon which has been adopted by the Senate and the House, has increased the difficulties of President Coolidge, if he has entertained any idea of vetoing the measure. The agreed bill received the almost undivided approval of the Republican House leaders which was only duplicating the position taken by Senate leaders.

The large deficit predicted by the Treasury recently turned out to be a surplus, and as declared by the Republican leaders the actuary figures from the Treasury now show that the new bill will not only take care of all commitments of the government, including the bonus, but leave a surplus of something like $2,000,000 the first year. That the shifting of Treasury figures "from $600,000,-000 deficit to $2,000,000 surplus" had caused a loss of confidence in the Treasury management was asserted by Representative Garner of Texas, who presented the case for the bill for the Democrats. He pointed out that from the outset the Treasury management and the press of the country had "sold" the Mellon plan to the country as the only way to obtain a reduction in taxes. He characterized the Mellon plan as a "scare-

"In the present law the corporations have an advantage over the individual," declared Mr. Garner, "and until that disadvantage is removed there will be no reduction in surtaxes and those behind the Mellon plan know that to be true, hence they did everything possible to force the Mellon plan upon the country now."

The Texas member referred to the President as "Mr. Coolidge," saying that the Republican leaders have not been "leading," but "following" him. He declared that the President would not veto the bill, and in a veiled reference to the Republican National convention in Cleveland, said that the Republican party had no one except the President.

"He has been whipped here," declared Mr. Garner. "In January he said you could not have the bonus and tax reduction, and in February said you could not have the Democratic plan of tax reduction, and you have got both." This statement brought loud applause. Mr. Garner was given a party ovation when he took the floor to join with Republican leaders in approving the conference report.

Texas Labor Commissioner Recruiting Youths for Work in Wheat Fields.

Austin, Texas.-Returning from Chicago, where he attended the annual convention of Government and State labor officials of the United States and Canada, Joseph S. Myers, Texas Labor Commissioner, announced that at a conference of commissioners from the wheat-growing States defiite plans were worked out for directing harvest hands from Texas to Oklahoma and Kansas after the season is over in Texas. It was announced that railroads radiating from Fort Worth will grant special rates for harvest hands assembled in that city and whose destination is the Texas Panhandle, Oklahoma or Kansas.

The Texas Labor Commissioner is now busily engaged in recruiting harvest hands in all parts of the State, special attention being given to enlisting high school and college stucation. Through the arrangements made at the Chicago convention, by starting with the Texas Panhandle wheat harvest and continuing on through Oklahoma and Kansas, Commissioner Myers said these students will be enabled to procure employment throughout practically the entire vacation season.

Reports of officials attending the convention at Chicago, Mr. Myers said, indicate that at this time there is comparatively little unemployment in the country as a whole, though certain sections report a surplus of unskilled labor.
