BROWN COUNTY SHERIFF ABDUCTED, WALKS HOME

Sheriff White of Brown County, who was abducted Monday by four heavily armed white men on the May-Brownwood Pike, was returned near the outskirts of Brownwood, early Tuesday, manacled with his own handcuffs and relieved of his gun. His abductors fled when Deputy White met them with a posse and opened fire. Approximately 100 shots were fired, but no one was hurt it seems, in the battle that ensued before the sheriff's captors fled, and made their escape. They were heavily armed.

Reports are to the effect that the Sheriff was taken in charge Monday by the four men, when he was called by telephone to investigate and arrest them as suspicious characters. He went alone to investigate—and was returned Tuesday, as stated above.

His abductors had three cars to start with, but deserted them, and later stole another in Brownwood, just previous to their encounter with the posse. It is stated in a report from Brownwood.

The four men marched with sheriff fifteen miles to Brownwood. It is not known what their intentions were, had they not met the sheriff's posse. The sheriff stated that two of the men were pleasant and during the long march they gave him water and cigarettes. One appeared to be lame.

BASE BALL GAME SUNDAY

Burkett's fast ball team will meet the Tigers in a game here Sunday. Don't forget the Cat game next Wednesday. Don't miss this fast game!

FROM STAGE TO BOOK

The usual rule with authors is to write a novel and, if it is successful, try to turn it into a play. This rule was reversed by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, the best writer of mystery and detective stories in America, for with the aid of the distinguished dramatist, Avery Hopwood, Mrs. Roberts wrote "The Bat" first as a play. Now she has turned it into a novel, a story, which with its thrills, quakes, chills and laughs is one of the most entertaining things she has ever done. The peculiar thing about "The Bat" as a play, was that, while the audience was trembling with the terrors of it, it was immediately afterwards laughing heartily at the comedy situations introduced in some cases right along with the terrors. This idea has been carried out with great success in the story. You will enjoy reading "The Bat", our new serial story, starting soon.

V. P. Kennedy of Breckenridge is here with the Putnam Supply Co. in the absence of Mr. Kelly, who is on a wedding tour.

Mose Baum and family have returned from visit in West Texas and New Mexico.

CATS AND TIGERS TO MEET HERE SEPT. 28

The Fort Worth Cats and Cross Plains Tigers will play ball here on Wednesday, Sept. 28th. These will be the regular Cats. Another team composed of ex-Cats are playing in West Texas, but the regulars will meet the Tigers here, and a good game is assured, if the Tigers are going good. Special arrangements are being made to take care of the heavy attendance expected to be at this game, and many extra seats will be provided.

The ex-Cats played the Putnam Spudgers last Sunday and won 8 to 3, but a couple outfield errors was responsible for about four of the Cats runs. Purvis, pitching for the Spudgers, made good showing and struck out ten Cats. Joe Pate went out swinging three times to bat. Many Cross Plains people motored over to see the game, and all enjoyed it. A large number of Putnam people stated that they would be here Wednesday to see the Cats and Tigers cross bats. Tickets for this game are now on sale at the City Drug Store and the Cross Plains Drug Store. Get your ticket early.

OPEN HOUSE SESSION DRAWS BIG CROWDS

The open house session at the new school buildings Sunday afternoon, was well attended by many visitors, who were there to inspect the new buildings and all were highly pleased with the buildings, equipment and the general arrangements, which are modern in every detail.

The educational rally scheduled for Sunday night was rained out, and was postponed until Monday morning, but it was still raining, and the attendance was not as large as should have been, but the program was good and enjoyed very much by all present.

CHAPTER XVII

The Death in the Cards.

After supper James McAlpin, with some ceremony, drove Selwood's team—the rangy American bays—up to the hotel. Christie came out on Selwood's arm, bandages and all. It was their first ride together, and Christie was to be driver.

They drove out on the divide for a few more minutes to themselves, and then down and around by the river to the camp of the padre. They found him before a little camp-fire.

"You married my father and mother, Padre," said Selwood, when he had told his own and Christie's story. "We want you to marry us."

While they talked, Selwood fed the little fire with the driftwood the Indians had gathered. The padre told of that other marriage—of the night the storm, the flooded river, and the pine-torches of the Indians.

After leaving the camp, Christie and Selwood drove back to the hotel, hoping everybody had gone to bed, but in this they were doomed to disappointment. In the brightly lighted office a brave company of frontier adventurers, closely tuned to Selwood's movements, were tirelessly sitting in a suffocating atmosphere around a seriously overheated stove.

Christie was allowed to go upstairs unmolested; indeed, she was ignored with chivalrous ceremony. Selwood, on the other hand, was dragged into the office and held a victim till he could negotiate peace with his retainers, and effected his escape, in the end, only by inviting them all to a wedding at sunrise down at the river in the camp of the padre.

In the dawn of a glorious morning they were married—perhaps on such a spot as that to which Selwood's father had brought his bride-to-be, in the storm, so many years before.

After the wedding breakfast, attended by all the guests, with the padre as a special guest of honor, Christie persuaded her new husband to go up with her to General Roper's room. The old man, weakened by wounds and softened by years, broke and asked his grandson to forgive what had passed.

It was one of those moments for banishing resentments and forgetting the cruelties of pride and obstinacy. Christie wiped the tears from the old man's eyes, and he repaid her by throwing a bomb into her unsuspecting camp when he sincerely congratulated them both and named as the only favor he would ask that the first boy be named John Roper Selwood and sent to West Point.

For a day or two, no trip and no escape from work was possible for Selwood. He was up to his neck in work at the barns and the warehouse, straightening out the tangle into which the conflagration and the rioting at Sleepy Cat had thrown the stage and wagon schedules. During the day scattered lots of supplies began to filter in from Medicine Bend, and by daylight the hotel cook was able to promise Doctor Carpy a respectable wedding supper as his compliment to the bride and groom, and to a company from which no loyal friend was excluded.

At nine o'clock in the evening behind the closely curtained windows of the dining-room, wedding guests made merry. Christie, flushed with happiness, had stolen from the table for a moment to run up to the general's room with a piece of wedding cake, when one of the two waitresses, coming up behind Selwood's chair, whispered in his ear.

The bridegroom's face clouded. "Who is it?" he demanded in an impatient undertone. "Is it one of my men?"

"I don't know, Mr. Selwood. I don't think so. I never saw him before."

"Tell him," directed Selwood, vexed,

"to come around in the morning; I've worked about fourteen hours today."

The waitress appeared perplexed. "I told him you wouldn't want to be interrupted," she said in an earnest whisper. "But it seemed like he was in terrible trouble. He told me to ask you for God's sake to come out to see him for just a minute."

Selwood muttered a protest. "Where is he?" he asked in an aside.

"At the kitchen door."

The girl thought that Selwood's keen eyes would have burned her up during the instant before he spoke again. "Tell him," he continued in a low voice, "to go around to the front door and sit down on the porch with his face to the street—understand? He go around to the front door and sit down on the porch with his face to the street," he repeated, "and his back to the door."

The waitress passed out into the kitchen. When she returned she whispered again. "He's gone to the front door, Mr. Selwood."

The talk had all been going on around the table, but Pardaloe's snaky eyes had not lost sight of the low-spoken colloquy. "What's a-matter, John?" he demanded suspiciously. "Some stranger outside wants to see me," answered Selwood, rising. "I'll be right back."

Pardaloe was on his feet before Selwood had taken a step from the table. He put up his bear-paw of a hand. "Hold on, John!" he said definitely, pushing back his chair. "You don't go out alone to see no stranger tonight, 'specially not in your recent shape—hold your horses!"

The table rose as one man. There was a momentary upset, and some conflict of claims as to who should accompany Selwood. Without passing on these in words, Selwood nodded to Pardaloe, and the discussion ceased. The mule boss followed him in long strides toward the dining-room door.

Bob Scott, at the table, sat close to the door leading into the dining-room from the kitchen. The other two men had not got out of the room when Scott, with his habitual smile of apology, rose in perfect silence and with incredible celerity slipped out into the kitchen and was out of the back door and half way around to the front of the hotel in the dark by the time Pardaloe had carefully drawn every shade in the hotel office and beckoned to Selwood to come in from the hall. He, himself, then slipped across the hall into Carpy's private office, and, throwing up the sash of the window that commanded the porch, trained his shotgun on the outer gloom.

Selwood, his revolver in his left hand, threw open the hall door without exposing himself. Seated on the porch, his face to the street, sat a large, loosely built man with his head hidden in a dark pull-down cap. "Who are you and what do you want?" asked Selwood, inspecting his caller from behind the hall door and through the crack of the opening.

"You know me, John," answered the man, hoarse and short in utterance. "But I ain't very popular in these parts just now."

"What's your name?"

"I'd like to give that to you private, John. I'm keeping some under cover."

Something in the cadence of the words told Selwood that he knew the man. A question that followed was only a precaution, for he felt sure from the cracked and husky tones that the man was Big Haynes.

"Whoever you are, you're well covered where you sit," remarked Selwood, with apparent indifference. "I know it."

"Put up your hands. Stand up and turn around here," came the next order from the hall.

The man did as he was told. A disappointment awaited Selwood's confidence in his usually keen ear. The pinched, haggard, and unshaven features now turned toward him could not be those of the bluff, portly auctioneer; a hasty glance told him this could not be Big Haynes. The cheeks were bruised and swollen, the eyes sunken in hollow sockets, and the man's clothing was in tatters.

Before Selwood could speak, a voice came from the darkness, and a man came forward. "Bob Scott is at the corner of the house, said the voice. "It's Big Haynes, John," continued the Indian, low voiced; "he's alone."

Selwood stepped from behind the door out on the porch. He could hardly credit his senses. It was two days since he had seen Haynes; but those two days had aged the man ten years. "What in God's name has happened—did our men catch you? Have you had a fight?" Selwood asked.

"Not the kind you mean, John. Give me a drink, for God's sake, and let me sit down and tell the story. I ain't had a bite to eat since last night."

They led him into the office, helped him into the washroom, and Scott went to the kitchen for strong coffee. Big Haynes drank four cups before he could quit; then, sitting in front of Selwood, who stood with his back against the writing table, and with Pardaloe and the Indian listening, he spoke.

"We got away from here yesterday morning O K—after you turned back. I told him you wouldn't want to be interrupted," she said in an earnest whisper. "But it seemed like he was in terrible trouble. He told me to ask you for God's sake to come out to see him for just a minute."

Selwood muttered a protest. "Where is he?" he asked in an aside.

creek, close as we could to where they lay. We waded out and one of the boys took hold of their feet, and the other one and I took their shoulders together, so we got 'em out to the wagon the way they lay, 'n' got 'em into the wagon. So, John—well—here we are."

Hollow-eyed, he said no more. Selwood, after a moment's silence, spoke to Scott. "I guess everybody's out of the kitchen," he said. "Get hold of Bull and tell him to cook some supper for Haynes and hunt up a bed for him." He turned back to Haynes. "Where are they?"

"John, we laid 'em down at the barn in the harness-room—there wasn't no other place, 'n' I 'jest didn't know what to do with 'em till I seen you. If you don't think it's right—"

He hesitated. Selwood finished the sentence. "It's all right," he said, rising. As he started toward the dining-room, Pardaloe laid a heavy hand on his shoulder. And he looked down at him with serious eyes. "John," he said solemnly, "remember what the cards said Saturday night at Calabasas? We couldn't figure out just how it was coming, could we? But the old deck didn't lie; death was in it that night, sure enough, wasn't it?"

Selwood stepped into the hall, to find Christie, wide-eyed, at the open door. She caught his hands. "When I came downstairs they told me you had been called from the table. I was frightened and I ran out to see where you were," she whispered. "I heard that terrible story! John, what shall we do?"

They called Carpy, and while Pardaloe told the story to the merry-makers, Selwood and Christie told the doctor.

He waded with hardened oaths that Meg Hyde should have the best there was to be had in Sleepy Cat; and the three started for the barn—for Christie would not be denied. "Let me go, John," she pleaded. "I'm a woman, she's a woman—let me go."

They lay on a blanket rudely spread on the harness-room floor, still locked in each other's arms. Carpy held a lantern to their faces; Selwood and Christie stood at their side.

"There's a considerable bruise on his forehead," said Carpy, speaking after his brief examination. "When the water struck him, I guess it knocked him flat on the rocks. Well—load 'em into a wagon, John. We'll take 'em up to the hotel."

"To the hotel, Doc?" echoed McAlpin, who with the rest had followed from the hotel and crowded into the room.

"Where else?" roared Carpy. "Up to the hotel 'n' into my office."

Christie knelt at Margaret's side. The men stood by. Her tears moistened the dark, sand-strewn hair, as she tried to gather it up and knot it a little at Margaret Hyde's neck.

When she rose from her knees, she buried her cheek on Selwood's breast. "At least, John," were her half-whispered words, "she died where she would have asked to die—in his arms."

CHAPTER XVIII

Hearts in the West.

"What's Selwood going to do?" asked Wentworth. He was sitting with Carpy in the sunshine on the hotel porch. A week had passed since the Crawling Stone tragedy, and Sleepy Cat, though badly scarred, had already profited, rather than lost, by the efforts to exterminate its crooks and murderers.

Doctor Carpy took Wentworth's question seriously. "Selwood talked about going back East. 'Jing' I says to him. 'If you're goin' back East I'll hand you a letter to a friend of mine there; he'll give you a job counting grass.' 'Counting grass?' he says. 'Sure,' I says. 'He's superintendent of an insane asylum. That's what they do with men that leave Sleepy Cat for to go back East.'"

Carpy hardly paused to continue. "Christie was a good deal upset about this roughness that's been goin' on here—men gettin' killed and that kind. Well, Christie, I says, 'It's partly the fault of the climate. You've got to remember it's mighty hard for a man to die here—I mean, to die the old, bed-fashion, natural death. This is a wonderful climate; it's given you, my girl, a fine husband. He came out here half dead, and if he hadn't come, he'd 'a' been dead long ago. And look at him now! Why, Christie, I says, 'if they didn't kill off somebody by main force once in a while out here, or bring in some more doctors to reduce the population, people would get so thick, they'd be laying out the mountain-tops for town lots."

"Then," the doctor went on, "Selwood talked about California. 'California!' I says. 'California? Sand! Phens! Greasers!' Well, he thought he was goin' out there, anyway, to get hold of a little freighting business of his own. Don't seem to be no business here he likes. I offered to sell the hotel to him."

"Well," remarked Wentworth, "if a freighting business of his own is all he's looking for, he needn't go to California for it. I came up here to offer him a third interest in our line. If he'll live here and spend part of his time in Thief River, he can run this west end of the line to suit himself."

"Well, by gum, I'm thinking that'll settle it," averred Carpy. "We've got something to work on. Now let's hunt up John, and drive that partnership nail into him while the iron's hot!"

It was not, perhaps, most of all the bribe of an already established and congenial business that held Selwood on the crest of the Rocky Mountain divide. Every morning he walked down to the barn after he had announced he was going to California. It made him sick to look into the faces of his men.

McAlpin's tail-feathers plainly drooped; Lefever's snug trousers waistband grew a world too wide for his shrunken sides, and new notches had to be cut to tighten his cartridge belt; Pardaloe moped in and out of the stable like an ailing mule, peevish, stooped, and hollow-eyed; Bob Scott, in desperation, had had his hair cut, and no self-respecting Chippewa squaw would longer have acknowledged him a brother in blood.

How much of this desperation was owing on Selwood's heart as he listened, sober-faced, to Wentworth's calm proposals? How much did the claims of such a man-for-man friendship as men never know, and never can know, outside the wild life of a mountain frontier, pull at his heart while he was debating what to do in a crisis of his checkered life?

But one morning there were heard at the barn more noise, more shouting, more profanity, more laughter, and more arguments—more fights were in the offing and more symptoms of crude, heartfelt rejoicing were manifest than had been known there since before the days of the Sleepy Cat riots. For that morning Selwood and Christie had come down to their hotel breakfast just as Carpy and Wentworth were leaving the dining-room. And there was that in their manner that Carpy read the moment he looked into their faces. He was not a bit surprised, even if Wentworth by any chance was, when Selwood—holding Christie in his arm—said to them both: "Well—I guess we're going to stay!"

Effect of Sanitation on Literary Manners

Literary manners have altered, not only as a result of the enlargement of the audience—though that was bound to have an important effect on literature—but as a result of changes in the manners and customs of everyday life.

The increase of privacy, the improvement of sanitation, the growing custom of cleanliness both of habits and of the body, and the abolition of many gross usages, have resulted in making many things that once were the comic contretemps of ordinary life seem now merely offensive irrelevances.

Probably improved sanitation has had more influence on literary manners than anyone yet suspects.

You will notice that what its enemies call prudery is most general in countries in which sanitation has made the greatest progress.

If Rabelais were to return as an Englishman or an American today, he would probably find himself blushing like a Victorian girl at having made some of his own jokes. This is not to belittle the jokes of Rabelais, but merely to recognize that the manners and convictions that were the natural soil of many of those jokes no longer exist today.—Robert Lynd in the Atlantic Monthly.

Coin Bank Idea Old

The use of coin banks as thrift incentives can be traced back far beyond the Christian era. Probably the oldest coin bank is that found by Count de Prorok and now in possession of the National City Bank. This savings utensil, which is in the form of a closed urn of baked clay with a slit in the top, was found in the ruins of Utica, an ancient Phoenician city on the African coast near Carthage. It is believed to be at least 2,500 years old.

Driven, Not Drivers

Some persons follow the dictates of their conscience, only in the same sense in which a coachman may be said to follow the horses he is driving.—Whately.

"Gooses" and "Geese"

Gooses is the plural of goose, meaning a tailor's iron; otherwise the form is geese.

Only the man whose money burns holes in his pocket has money to burn

Birch-Bark Canoe Not Popular With Indians

Though the birch-bark canoe is the traditional vehicle of the Indians of northern Canada, few are to be seen today among those Indians frequenting trading posts or mining camps in Ontario or Quebec, writes Courtney Ryley Cooper in the Saturday Evening Post. There is an art in making a birch-bark canoe that only the old-timers truly know. Then there is work to it and "an Indian and unnecessary work are about as well mated as a bulldog and a black jaguar." Far better, if he can trap enough rats or coral enough ermine skins, he owns a chestnut canoe with an outboard motor, with which he can scoot along the streams and lakes in serenity and swiftness, while the wind waves his hair and creates a grin across his face, comparable only to an Oklahoma Cher okee enjoying his oil royalties and a new motor. There's only one thing more exciting, and that is to stand close enough to the truck to get the ballast in his eyes as he watches the transcontinental go by.

KIT CARSON'S TRUE LIFE STORY IS NOW REVEALED

Volumes have been written about the famous frontiersman, Kit Carson but because the dime novelists have applied their sensational methods to his career much of the truth about him has been obscured. Recently however, the story of Kit Carson's life, as dedicated by the great scout himself, has been published by a Taos, (N. M.) woman, and in this simple narrative, which reflects the greatness of the man, the true story of his life has at last been revealed.

Although Carson lived much of his later life at Fort Lyon, Colo., his name is written large all over the West. If you would know something about the REAL Kit Carson read the illustrated feature article, "Kit Carson speaks for Himself," by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of the Review.

SELF CULTURE CLUB

Friday afternoon members of the Mother's Self Culture Club, with a few invited guests, motored over to Lake Cisco for a final swim with the Kiddies before starting them in their school work.

By special invitation, Mrs. Mollendick President of the Mother's Club of Cisco met with the party and it was quite an inspiration to hear her tell of the constructive work the Cisco Club had done. We are planning to have Mrs. Mollendick with her officers to meet with us in the near future for a discussion of plans and methods.

A picnic supper was spread after a delightful swim.

With the coming of cooler September we are enthusiastically planning big things for the coming year. Realizing that the children of today, are the citizens of tomorrow, we must now determine what sort of citizen they shall be.

The first duty of a Mother's club is to serve. The ideal club is both a study and a service organization.

Now that we have our beautiful new school buildings the next step will be to beautify the grounds and surely here we will find an opportunity for real service.

Ollie Dennis and family have moved back to Abilene where he will continue his College work at Simmons.

ECHOES OF THE CONVENTION

Beginning at Cross Plains on the eleventh day of September nineteen hundred twenty seven, the spirit of the 17th District Convention began to work its most effective results in our town.

The reception tended the legionaires from the beginning of their advent into our town gave a very great impetus to the speaking program of Sunday.

It was very fitting that at this particular time Cross Plains merchants purchased about 100 flags for their streets and their rippling folds waved a benediction to the soldiers of yesterday and beckoned the Legionnaires of tomorrow. The Sunday morning program began at ten o'clock. The Cow Boy Band of Abilene very ably played "Onward Christian Soldier" Invocation by Rev. Hunt. As you looked over that concourse of men and women gathered in the auditorium and picked out the Legionnaires, you could not help observing the personnel of its members young men with the expression of real men representing the thought and action of the Seventeenth District.

Paul Harrell was in executive control. Mayor Gwin in his pleasant and amiable manner welcomed the Convention. In part he said—"The legionnaires of this District are the outstanding men of affairs—therefore we feel that we have within our gates the real representatives of a great and glorious history. It is not only a pleasure to be thus honored, but a privilege. Our welcome to you is a thing of the noble hearts of Cross Plains".

In Judge Gilbert's response he urged the importance of the conduct of the Legionnaires. Among the many good things he said, "this one thought comes vividly to me, 'Buddies, tell them by your conduct that you stand for all the Stars and Stripes mean to you. This flag (placing his hand upon the flag of honor upon the stand) demands international justice and arbitration—it commands us to self sacrifice and to universal obligations of service which alone can maintain equality of rights and fullness of opportunity."

He advocated extradition papers to all who hated our country. (Great applause).

He gave a beautiful rendition of Flanders and promised to leave Cross Plains in as good a condition as he found it, which was also applauded.

The principal address was given by Gen. Mark McGee. It was the most remarkable address and the most scholarly effort that the Convention could have received anywhere. His text or theme was "No Man hath greater love than this that he lay down his life for me."

His handling the preamble was educating and his definition of a 100 per cent American was worth everyone's thought.

Tom Connally, Marlin, Congressman, was introduced by Mr. Cox as the orator of the Legion. There may be men in the Legion who could have done as well in an oratorical speech, but we doubt it and know there are none who could have done better. Tom Connally in his life has demonstrated beyond question the fact that if a man's purpose is pure—his success is assured.

The closing speech of the morning session was delivered by Mrs. Mollie Armstrong Past State president of the Auxiliary.

She gave in a very forcible and entertaining way the purpose and activities of the Auxiliary. "If I can but implant within you, as a body, a small bit of the greatness of the Legion and its opportunities to the extent that you will revive your interest in your local units and that you shall so direct its affairs unselfishly and in real community service so much that your work will spill out into other communities, then I shall have the consolation of having repaid you a great privilege you gave me in using me as your national committee woman. Thus on and on she spoke for fifteen minutes. The general good feeling that reigned through the entire meeting was very noticeable. If our nation is to endure it will be dependent upon a definite, positive, immediate program of education, of peace among the nations of the world. Who is better fit to give us this education than the Legionnaires? These Buddies have proved that patriotism is more than sentiment; loyalty is more than expression. They accepted the duties absolute and universal which every citizen owes his country.

The Legionnaire expresses the independence of a thoughtful, courageous, conscientious manhood, the faith, the lofty aspirations and high ideals, of representative democracy; the advance of a better nation dedicated to Liberty.

Elbert Pearce and family of Deer Plains, were trading here Tuesday.

Kit Carson Speaks for Himself

CARSON'S HOME IN TAOS, N.M.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MENT to his grandfather, Daniel Boone, Kit Carson is perhaps the most widely known and best beloved of American pioneers. There has probably never been written a book of sketches of frontiersmen, pioneers or scouts which does not include Carson in the roll of these early American heroes, and many more volumes have been written about Carson alone. As has been the case with so many other figures prominent in taming the American wilderness, a great mass of legend has been added to the known facts about his life and the dime novelists have contributed their share to make the truth about Kit Carson obscure. Too often this quiet, modest little man has been included in the general category of Indian-killing, buckskin-clad swashbucklers and the sensational aspects of his career have been so played up as to cause most Americans to lose sight of his historic importance.

Fortunately for the memory of Carson, the latest addition to the biographical material about him has been the plain, unvarnished story of his life as given by Carson himself to one of his closest friends some seventy years ago. This is "Kit Carson's Own Story of His Life" as it was dictated to Col. and Mrs. D. C. Peters about 1856-57 and never before published until it was brought to light by Miss Blanche C. Grant of Taos, N. M., who recently edited it and published it at her own expense.

The story of the manuscript, as given in the book which Miss Grant has published, is an interesting one in itself. The story is as follows: Col. DeWitt C. Peters, surgeon, U. S. A., was a close friend and admirer of Kit Carson, the great Taos scout. He finally induced him to dictate his life story to a son, Clinton Peters, during Carson's frequent visits to the Peters family, who were stationed at "some fort near Taos," probably Fort Union, and in the town of Taos as well. In all probability most of it was written down in the old adobe house in Taos, now owned by the Masons and called the "Kit Carson house," on the street leading eastward from the Plaza toward the mountains. The original manuscript is for the most part in the handwriting of Mrs. Peters, though at times the colonel helped with the writing, probably in the year 1857. Colonel Peters then wrote his long "Life and Adventures of Kit Carson," which was published in 1858. Carson never read the book as a whole, but read enough so he is said to have remarked that Peters "laid it on a little too thick."

This early manuscript was evidently prized by the poet's son, Theodore Peters, who took it to Paris, France. Here, after his death, about 1907, his brother Clinton found the papers among his brother's effects, while rummaging around in a cellar on Avenue St. Ouen, Montmartre. Clinton Peters brought the manuscript back to New York and had two copies made. The original he sold to Edward E. Ayer for his famous Newberry Library in Chicago. The copies came into the hands of Charles E. Camp of Berkeley,

Kit Carson

I was nine when my father died. Killed by a falling limb. Daniel Boone was my father's friend—Maybe you've heard of him. He and his kind were my teachers. Trapper, hunter and guide; They taught me to shoot and to speak For the treacherous cliff and crevasse. I taught myself to ride. Woodsman I was till I saw the plains And I saddled and rode away To the little old Indian town of Taos And the city of Santa Fe.

Plainsman I was till I saw the hills And the trails that westward ran To the farther hills and the farthest hills. And I am a mountain man. Mine were the days of the mountain men, The days that are now a dream; As once we followed the buffalo track We followed the beaver stream. Trapping the beaver on lake and creek With scaling knife and gun. We ranged from the Platte to the San Joaquin. From the Salt to the Yellowstone. Old Jim Bridger, Rebdoux, Meek, Young from the Rio Grande. Cut-throat Sublette, Peleg Smith and Fitz of the Broken Hand—None knew the roads through the desert dust. The trails of cliff and glen, None knew the paths to the Western Sea. But we that were mountain men!

Young Fremont came over the pass With a hard and weathered brow; Kearney trailed across the waste With his troopers, two-and-two. They won the California land. For each may claim his share, But the mountain men and the plainsmen know That Carson brought them there. Well, I helped to hold these hills of ours For the Frenchman, the Red and White. CARSON'S GRAVE IN TAOS how thrilling the affair nor how hair-breadth the escape, which Carson describes, the simple, straightforward manner in which it is told shows plainly why Carson was beloved for his modesty, which was equaled only by his courage and his daring. One instance will suffice. Almost without exception those who have written of Carson have made much of his famous duel with the French bully, Captain Shunnar (or Shunar) and the dime novel type of writer especially has told it with much sensational detail. Here is the way Carson tells of the affair:

There was in the party of Captain Drips a large Frenchman, one of those overbearing kind and very strong. He made a practice of whipping every man that he was displeased with—and that was nearly all. One day, after he had beaten two or three men, he said, that for the Frenchmen he had no trouble to dog and, as for the Americans, he would take a switch and switch them. I did not like such talk from any man so I told him I was the worst American in camp. He said nothing but started for his rifle, mounted his horse, and made his appearance in front of the camp. As soon as I saw him I mounted my horse and took the first arms I could get hold of, which was a pistol, galloped up to him and demanded of him if I was the one he intended to shoot. Our horses (were) touching. He said no, but at the same time drawing his gun so he could have a fair shot at me. I was prepared and allowed him to draw his gun. We both fired at the same time; all present saying but one report was heard. I shot him through the arm and his ball passed my head, cutting my hair and the powder burning my eye. The muzzle of his gun being near my head when he fired. During our stay in camp we had no more bother with this bully (of a) Frenchman.

This does Carson dismiss this incident, which many writers expand into pages of thrilling detail, nor does he say anything about the fact recorded by reliable historians that Shunnar begged for his life after his first shot felled and that Carson stayed his hand when he had his enemy at his mercy.

Not the least of the interest of this book, as the one authoritative life of Kit Carson, lies not only in the careful editing by Miss Grant and the numerous footnotes which supplement the text, but also the reproductions of old photographs never before published and the contemporary account of his death on May 23, 1863, at Fort Lyon, Colo.

In Praise of Youth

Orville Wright, praising Charles A. Lindbergh at a dinner in Dayton, said:

"Only a young man could have achieved this feat. For youth is braver than age. It is more generous, too, more honorable. Yes, it's better all around."

The great airman smiled rather sadly.

"The good don't really die young," he said. "They outgrow it."

Lesson for September 25

REVIEW—THE EARLY KINGS OF ISRAEL

DEVOTIONAL READING—Ps. 105: 1-8.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord hath prepared His throne in the heavens; and His kingdom ruleth over all.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What We May Learn From Samuel, Saul, David and Solomon.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Teachings and Warnings From the Quarter's Lessons. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Lessons From Samuel, Saul and David.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Honoring God in Our Lives and in Our Land.

Though the lesson title for the quarter is "The Early Kings of Israel," the great character Samuel should be included. A good way to conduct the review would be to make a character study of the four outstanding persons of the quarter—Samuel, Saul, David and Solomon. Perhaps the most satisfactory method of review will be the summing up of the leading events and teachings of each lesson. The assignments should be made a week ahead, so that the members of the class may recite without hesitation. The following suggestions are offered:

Lesson for July 3. Against the protest of Samuel the people demanded a king, in order that they might be like other nations. Saul, of the tribe of Benjamin, was given as best suited to fill the place.

Lesson for July 10. Because of Samuel's exemplary life as a child, a judge and a ruler, he was able to challenge the people to show wherein he had ever defrauded or oppressed anyone. It is a fine thing when a man in public life can be vindicated against the charge of wrongdoing, either in public or in private.

Lesson for July 17. Saul's failure brought great sorrow of heart to Samuel. The selection of David from Jesse's sons showed that God looks not on the outward appearance, but upon the heart. David's fidelity as a shepherd boy put him in line for promotion.

Lesson for July 24. Because David was jealous for and trusted in God he was able to overcome Goliath, who had defied the living God.

Lesson for July 31. The friendship of David and Jonathan has become immortalized in the world's thought. It was unique in that it occurred between two men of rival worldly interests. Jonathan, the crown prince, knew that God had chosen David, therefore he valued his natural rights.

Lesson for August 7. David knew that God had rejected Saul and chosen himself to be king. Though relentlessly pursued by Saul, David spared the king because he was God's anointed.

Lesson for August 14. When David was made king he desired to bring up the ark, the symbol of God's presence, to the center of the nation's life. Though his desire was worthy, he was not careful to do according to God's way. Doing a right thing in a wrong way is displeasing to God.

Lesson for August 21. Though God did not permit David to build a house for Him, He did something better; He promised to build for David a house, that is, to establish for him a throne. God does more and better for us than we are able to ask or think.

Lesson for August 28. Through neglected duty David fell into temptation and grievously sinned. By means of a parable Nathan the prophet convicted him of his sin upon confession to God forgiveness was granted.

Lesson for September 4. Because Solomon chose wisdom in order to intelligently reign over the nation, God abundantly bestowed upon him wisdom and riches. God's blessings exceed our asking.

Lesson for September 11. Solomon's first task after his coronation was building the temple, a privilege which was denied to David his father. Because of Solomon's obedience God manifested His presence and thus made the temple holy.

Lesson for September 18. Rehoboam's pride and arrogance lost to himself the support of the majority of the nation.

We Grow Strong or Weak. Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them. Silently, day by day, we grow strong or weak and at last some crisis shows what we have become.—Canon Westcott.

Community Building

City Beautiful Rests

With Whim of Builders

Market demands as well as civic duty should cause owners to give architects the latitude to plan proper decorative finish for their buildings.

A pleasing exterior is not only a contribution to the neighborhood and to the community, but it has a direct effect upon marketability. A prospective buyer is much more interested in a well-finished attractive building than in one where scantiness of exterior decoration betrays the owner's desire to skimp. Such a condition is inexcusable when small additional expenditure would bring the decoration up to the proper standard.

To illustrate: A fourteen-story building was erected at a cost of $1,750,000. A beautiful facade enriched with terra cotta would have cost only $12,000 more than a plain, unattractive one, or seven-tenths of 1 per cent of total cost. A property owner is also under more obligation to the community to preserve general attractiveness. He should not destroy the pleasant appearance of a street or neighborhood by an ungainly, unadorned structure. Wise use of color, or selection of form, can avoid this. New York buildings have the general line of packing boxes. The architects should not be blamed. They have the skill to create beauty when they get the opportunity.

Confine Planting to

Borders and Foundations

The center of the lawn should always be left open and planting confined entirely to the borders and house foundation.

All of which sounds very well to one who is building, or rather getting ready to plan a house. But what of the poor unfortunates who already have houses and lots that are "all wrong" from standpoint of design? Where and how shall they begin? Service areas again become first consideration; we must have them, but the problem is to get them all together, and out of the way, instead of scattered widely all over the lot. Kitchen entrance and garage should be on the same side of the lot, if possible.

Sometimes a small garage can be moved a short distance at small expense, providing there is not already a permanent drive. At least as many service units as possible should be together. Garage, drive, kitchen entrance, laundry yard, vegetable garden and possibly swings, trapeze or sandpiles should be grouped together just as much as possible, and arranged in the least amount of space. Next, we must try to relate some portion of the living side of the house to the grounds, which is not always easy and sometimes impossible.

Most Fires Avoidable

A very small proportion of our annual fire loss, probably less than a fourth of the total, may be classed as unavoidable. All the rest could be prevented by human foresight. First of all it is necessary for the American people to overcome that tendency to take a chance which seems to be a national characteristic. Fire losses can never be appreciably reduced until the human equation is altered radically for the better. It will be a long time, if ever, before all structures used and occupied by the people of this country are sufficiently proof against fire to offset the carelessness that is responsible for the greater part of our current fire losses.

Summer Work

During the summer is the proper time to go over the house and pick out spots that need repairing, and when the work is completed it is advisable to give the house a new coat of paint. Painting will reduce the decay and wear on the home and will give a better appearance.

The summer is also a good time to go over the interior of a home and see that all the woodwork is in a condition that will make the dwelling have a neat appearance.

Have Well-Built House

The less expensive the lot the more money is left for the house itself, and a well-constructed house on a cheap lot is more desirable than an unsatisfactory house on an expensive lot. Although a house that is very much more expensive than its neighbors might be hard to sell at a good price, a very cheap house may add nothing at all to the sale value of an expensive lot.

Civic Duty

Would you do your part—perhaps only a very small part—to make the city cleaner and more sanitary and to lower the fire hazard? If so, cooperate with the city administration in its clean-up program. If your premises need putting in order, if you basement, attic, closets or garage have accumulated rubbish or useless articles, why not get rid of them?

Medical Sermonettes

By W. E. LEONARD, M. D.

(© 1927, by Western Newspaper Union.)

"Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stop; but a good word maketh it glad." This homely proverb, coming down from centuries of Jewish tradition, has a very apt application to every physician. The man who walks into the sick-room with a solemn speech and bearing of an undertaker is as much out of place as that same undertaker before the patient is actually dead. Dignity and seriousness in a trying situation are essential to invite confidence, but the extreme attitude of great and oppressive danger is simply quackery and charlatanism even though made use of by the professor himself. Men who act thus in the sick-room do it to impress and deceive and often accomplish their purpose, especially with the unthinking. A smile and a truthful word of encouragement, when possible, are worth more than the medicine prescribed in the chamber of suffering and disease.

"A merry heart doeth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit drieth the bones."—Proverbs. This sage and very ancient advice is meant for all, both doctor and patient. Many a falsehood told by the doctor to keep up his patient's courage is likely to be forgiven at the final reckoning. Nothing so buoyant the patient as a cheerful mind and hopeful outlook. Some go so far as to believe that such an attitude may even drive death itself away.

Depression of mind and a melancholy view of things will always work harm to the internal economy, sooner or later. The ancients used to lay such states to an insufficient flow of bile. Maybe they were right, for every doctor knows that bile does not flow as freely nor the internal machinery function as well when the spirits are low. There are plenty of "dried bones" to be seen in the extreme stages of mental cases. The moral is—don't do it, but keep a sane and hopeful stand, no matter what happens. It pays in health and brings immediate dividends, even in threatening situations.

"Haste makes waste." We commonly think of this adage as referring to the dangers of too much scurrying in our modern feverish existence. So it does, but its medical application is more subtle. The complicated machinery of the human body will endure a great deal without any outcry and for a long time; but if pushed too far and worked too hard, the waste accumulated becomes a decided clog on the wheels of life, and must be eliminated or disaster will follow. For instance, a too hearty meat diet overworks the kidneys mainly and leaves a residue of rich and unused substances in the system which is likely to stagnate the whole mechanism. A change to a strict vegetable menu for a time, with free use of liquids and more exercise, may avert a catastrophe. The symptoms of such clogging, whether from too much meat or from too hearty general eating, i. e., beyond the everyday needs of the body, are sleepiness, sluggish bowels, headaches dull and ill-defined, and a constant necessity of driving the machinery to its daily duties. These quite general symptoms should be a warning and should lead the sufferer to reform his eating habits or consult a physician.

"Every man hath his hobby-horse." This homely old saying has its practical application to everyone's life. Just as the children get recreation and exercise from mounting and vigorous riding a mere framework representing a horse, so the grown-up may add to his life and happiness by having some pursuit, not at all connected with his daily occupation, which serves to change entirely his mental channels, brings into play quite another set of muscles, and rests all the machinery with which he carries on his daily work. No rational hobby is without merit, however foolish it may seem to the onlooker.

An old physician, who always fell asleep at the grand opera, where his children insisted upon taking him, and who took no recreation whatever from the routine of daily practice, was asked what he would do in the next world, where there was presumably no such thing as sickness. He replied regretfully: "I shall be lost entirely for I don't know anything else."

Another very old practitioner came to a listless old age because he had never striven along any line but medicine, and in his last days warned his young associates against arriving where he had, without any other resource. Any old age may become as empty for lack of variety of mental or physical employment.

JERSEY FOR SCHOOL AND SPORTS; SHAWL-COLLARS ON FALL COATS

IT'S jersey cloth here and jersey cloth there and jersey cloth everywhere in the daytime mode for fall. If the jersey be not in solid color, then it is striped, and if it happen to be not striped then the dressmaker or the couturier conjures a stripe effect by sewing bands of various colors together. If not the stripe theme, then a modish compose is achieved in the way of contrasting insets of jersey introduced at the waistline of the frock.

Which goes to show that there is anything but sameness recorded by the present jersey vogue. The new tweed jersey is decidedly "good conventional pattern embroidery in peasant color and design.

Two attractive frocks of jersey are shown here. The one to the left displays a cluster of side plaits to the left front of the skirt. The collar and cuffs are piped with crepe de chine and the small breast pocket is embroidered to match the crepe.

The other dress stresses inverted kick plaits in the skirt. The collar is adjustable to either high-button style or open. These winsome frocks are designed in all the newest colorings.

Furred more lavishly than ever, is the style message brought by autumn's advance guard of cloth coat looking," while the jersey which richly gleams with gold and silver inter-workings is all that fancy can picture in the way of a handsome medium frock and blouse.

Jersey three-piece costumes figure prominently in the Paris sports mode for fall. These are fashioned somewhat in this wise: A deep wine jersey skirt and sleeveless cardigan to match with a rose shade jumper; a jersey cardigan buttoning over a blouse of jersey made sweater style and gaily jersey-embroidered, the skirt being plaited just as if it were silk or satin. That is one of the interesting things about the mode this season, it plait anything and everything with-fashions. The latest whim of the mode is to contrast light cloth, preferably the new pale browns and toast shades, or beige, with an enrichment of dark fur, as defined by the model in the picture.

This handsome coat also declares that shawl collars are "in" again. Multitudes of the newer coats bear testimony to its return to favor. Even fur coats are shawl-collared this season.

There is also much emphasis placed on side fastenings, in proof of which the coat illustrated bears witness. Another new "wrinkle" in the matter of styling is the intricate manipulation of underarm seamwork and tucks.

Jersey for school wear is ideal, and the stores are showing the most likable models that the artistry of the stylist can produce. The cunningest sort of jersey dresses are featured for children, such as a model in two tones trimmed with wee cutout felt flowers, also a toast-colored jersey with gay bouquets done in wool yarn, or a more

Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In the proper dose, given in the directions, it is equally effective at

"A lot of modern writers—Samuel Butler, Bernard Shaw, Wells and so on—preach that family life is a farce, that relatives are more apt to hate than love each other, and therefore down with marriage."

The speaker was Lester Scott, executive secretary of the Camp Fire Girls. He continued:

"These writers are all wrong, of course. I told one of them so the other day, and the best he could do was to come back at me with an anecdote. But anecdotes, as I told him, prove nothing."

"It was an anecdote about two sisters. They sat on a moonlit pier, and a wealthy bachelor sat between them. The older sister looked up into the bachelor's eyes and said in a far-away voice:

"I have always had a presentiment that I would die young."

"She drew a deep breath and nestled closer to the bachelor, and then the other sister said dryly in the silence:

"But you didn't, did you?"

CARTHAGE, Texas, Sept. 8.—For the second time in his life, Joe George, 22 years old, has been pronounced dead, friends and relatives notified and mourners assembled.

George had started Sunday from his home in Henderson to return to Carthage where he is employed and when three miles from Henderson the car he was driving turned over and hurled him through the windshield.

An ambulance and medical aid was summoned by passing motorists from Henderson and the physicians upon their arrival pronounced George dead, the neck having been broken and the body cut by the windshield.

Relatives and friends in Henderson and Carthage were notified and funeral arrangements made. Preparations of the "body" was being made when some one thought that he noticed a slight sign of life. Heroic efforts were resorted to, the vertebrae of the neck replaced and in a short time George was sitting up talking to friends. He returned to Carthage Monday where he was congratulated by his friends who had made preparations to attend his funeral.

A few years ago, George, with two companions was in an automobile wreck and all three were pronounced dead.
The two companions were buried and casket bought and grave dug for George. However the "body" was held over night to await the arrival of relatives.
Before morning signs of life appeared and his recovery was more rapid than in this second instance wherein he was pronounced dead.

BIG RAIN HERE

This section was visited by another big rain, starting Sunday and continuing through Monday. It will be very beneficial to farmers with the fall plowing and grain sowing, but will damage cotton to some extent, as much of it is open in the fields.

The Review will be glad to have news reported. Phone 114, or if you prefer, mail it in. Your co-operation appreciated.

Mrs. Ethel Clanton of Millersville visited this week with her uncle, R. B.
Forbes, who is quite sick with pneumonia.
