Join the Red Cross, buy war saving stamps, and don't talk pessimistic about the outcome of the war.

Dead Boche is a "good" Indian. A Thrift Stamp gives an American Sammie five pot shots at him.

The war and Uncle Sam doubled the price of your cotton. Can't you afford to invest a few pounds in War Saving Stamps?

When you buy War Saving Stamps you are not contributing. You are lending your money at four per cent interest compounded quarterly.

Have War Saving Societies been organized in the school your children attend? If they have not, then they are not getting a fair chance to be heroes and nephews of Uncle Sam.

Some good work has been done on the roads leading into Cross Plains, nearly all of which was necessitated by reason of the fact that the recent winds had blown the sand from the farms adjoining the roads into the roads.

As long as farmers plant peanuts along side the roads, that long will we have to spend money and time repairing them, all uselessly. Really some kind of legislation should be enacted to protect the roads from blowing sand.

The Review man believes in gardens at all times, and especially while the war is on. Some gardens in this part of town, which have been made as large as practicable on account of the scarcity of food, are being devastated by chickens that are evidently feeding some distance from this time, but they should not be let at large to set at naught work done to help fight the Hun. Don't let your chickens interfere with gardening, it is getting pretty warm to work merely for the exercise.

H. A. Halbert of Coleman, well known as a farmer and originator of the Halbert melons and soft shell peaches, is making the race for the third time for Commissioner of Agriculture, and against a man for the third term. Mr. Halbert is a practical farmer and if elected would be the first farmer to hold the office. He is famous throughout the United States as a horticulturist, being bet at home.

Let's make Cross Plains a clean and nice town. It can be done. The sanitation, or rather the insurrection, of the town is a dirty subject, but it is one that has to be discussed to get people to realize what should be done. At the very best where no sewerage system is in operation, the sanitation of small towns is bad. It can be made many times better than it is here, or will be even when the "sanitary" man has done his work, which he is now doing. Human excreta, when exposed to the flies, or other insects, often are responsible for the spread of typhoid, hookworm, infant diarrhea, the dysenteries, etc. Let's clean up.

County Superintendent R. B. McClerkey and wife visited the public school on Wednesday March 20. Roy Newton has struck water. The well is about sixteen feet deep and about six feet deep in water. Gus Gafford went to Brownwood last Thursday on business. J. P. (Jop) Triplipp was not seen in town last Wednesday but when inquiring about it we found that he was at work.

There are only five more weeks of school. There hasn't been much school spirit on account of the war, sickness and the drought.

John Armstrong has accepted the principal-ship of the Cleo school for the rest of the year.

There will be preaching at the Methodist church Saturday night and Sunday morning by Rev. A. C. Haynes. Sunday is Easter.

AN APPEAL

The pastor of a Christian church in Dallas made the following statement last Sunday: "Four American soldiers were recently ordered shot for sleeping while on duty. There are 4,000,000 Americans to whom stiffer punishment might be meted out because they have never awakened to the fact that the United States is at war." When the Cross Plains auxiliary of the Red Cross was organized the men of the town gave liberally to the financing of its activity, while the women have shown an indifference which if it were general would be dangerous. We have nearly 2,000,000 lying idle in the bank when there is a pressing demand for Red Cross products. What would our boys think, and how would they feel if they knew that the warehouses in Paris are almost empty even before the great spring drive had begun. How would they like to know that we are not really interested in whether or not their wounds are healed. Surgical dressings are the most crying need; they are the things that money cannot buy, for the simple reason that machines do not produce them; they must be made by hand. If a sufficient number of women and girls will consent to give part of their time we will get an instructor and undertake this work. We must and will do our duty for we have only to be shown that we are needed. We can only be shown by words, since we cannot go through the hospitals of France and see with our eyes the suffering, nor hear with our ears the cries of the stricken.

POLL TAX DEMANDED OF WOMEN BY SENATE

SUFFRAGE BILL AMENDED IN UPPER HOUSES PROVIDING PAYMENT NEXT YEAR.

TEST VOTE FAVORS THE BILL

Amendment Providing for Referendum to the People to be Tabled By Vote of 19 to 8.

Austin.—Discussion of woman suffrage occupied the senate throughout Tuesday. An amendment was adopted which provides that after this year women must pay poll taxes in the same manner as the men, and otherwise comply with the general election laws.

Another amendment changed the method of issuing certificates to women voters and makes it necessary for them to appear in person at the office of the tax collector in cities of 10,000 population or over and make affidavit to material facts as to their age, residence, length of residence, etc. This amendment was also adopted.

Text Vote Obtained.

What is apparently a showing of the senate alignment on the question was obtained in a roll call on an amendment offered by Mr. Gibson providing for a referendum of the bill to the qualified voters of the state at the coming primary election and for its taking effect in 1919 if the voters should ratify the bill. The amendment was tabled by a vote of 19 to 8.

SYNOPSIS.

It was Mahlin who broke the secret. "We have brought you here I der to ask you some questions, Burke." "What—what is it that you want to know?" she asked, her voice trem in spite of her effort to control. "I want to know," he said, and inches until his face was within a inches of her and fixing her wit steady eyes, "what you have done the book on metallurgy?" "I . . . I don't know what mean," she stammered. "Yes, you do," snarled Mahlin. "know the book I mean—the one doctor handed you in the restaurant Sandsboro, before the earthquake?" "Oh, that book," said Cleo, obviously surprised. "But there was not in it—no formula," I mean. "No matter about the form said Mahlin roughly. "Where is book now? Who has it?" "I suppose Lieutenant Hope has she answered. "At least he bro he back with him from Sands though I haven't seen it since." "Are you telling me the truth?" manded Mahlin, seizing her by shoulder and staring at her so cle that she quailed. "Of course, I'm telling you truth," she asserted with spirit. "I am going to find out if you a answered moving toward the d "God help you if you have lied to young woman. If you have you'll that you had never been born." "Come along, Satsuma," he ca to the Japanese. "We must be back to town." When Hope, returning to the b with Johnstone, learned from the cl that Cleo had left an hour before, frantic was the young officer v anxiety. . . . that for a time lawyer feared for his sanity. Bittu Hope reproached himself. But, despite his grief, he neglig nothing which might lead to C rescue. He promptly communica with the police and within an hou score of plain-clothes men were see ing the city. "We're doing everything in our p er, Mr. Hope," the chief of police sured him. "I have fifty men wo ing on the case now, but it looks me like a clean get-away." As Hope was leaving police headqu ers a patrol wagon backed up to curb and out of it scrambled two l iemen, escorting a tall and fa lionably dressed young man who was frantically glittered handcuffs. As t glare of the arc light in front of a station struck the prisoner's fa Hope stopped dead in amazement. "Great heavens!" he exclaime "it's Gerald Morton." Following Morton and his guards t to the station, Hope beckoned to t inspector who was on duty. "What is he charged with?" l asked, indicating Morton. "Murder," the inspector answere leonically. "Stabbed a woman." "Do you know who she was?" aske Hope. "She claimed to be a Russian coun ess," was the answer. "Her name wa Ivanoff—Olga Ivanoff." "Is there any objection to my ha ing a word with him?" asked Hope. "Not in the least," said the inspec tor, and ordered a patrolman to brin the prisoner into his office. "Hello, antennut," remarked Mor ton, nonchalantly, as, still handcuffe he was led into the room. "I didn' expect to meet you here." "Morton," said Hope, looking the other in the eye, "Miss Burke wa kidnapped this evening. I understand from the police that you could not have been concerned in it . . . but do you know who is? I won't pretend that I'm sorry for you, Morton, for I'm not, but if you can give me any information that will help me find her, I'll do what I can to help you." "I don't know anything about it, Hope," said Morton; "not this time. I give you my word I don't. If I could help you find her, I would. Not for your sake, mind," he added bitterly, "but for hers. She's a mighty game little girl. I'm sorry I can't help you." Hope turned away disconsolately, but the other called him back. "Are you still looking for the secret of the submarine?" he asked, lowering his voice so that the police could not hear. "Yes," said Hope listlessly, "I am—or was until Cleo disappeared." "Did you keep that book on metallurgy—the one that Olga and I tried to get away from Doctor Owen in the restaurant in Sandsboro?" "Yes, it's among my things somewhere." Morton leaned forward until his lips were close to Hope's ear. "Turn to page sixty-one and read every seventh word," he whispered. "If you find Cleo," he continued in a louder tone, "tell her that I told you this so as to make up, as much as I can, for the way I treated her. The secret won't be of much use to her, but she'll be glad to hear of my being here." "The piece I'm going to," he said, as he joined Hope, who was led

FIFTEENTH INSTALLMENT

"I am Miss Burke," said Cleo, addressing the driver of the closed taxicab which she found standing at the curb in front of her hotel. "Is this the car Lieutenant Hope sent for me?" "Yes," replied the man, a short, thickset fellow, whose features were effectively concealed by the upturned collar of his coat, a pair of goggles and a visored cap which was pulled down over his face. "He said I was to drive you to the Cliff house and he'd meet you there."

The most direct route to the Cliff house leads through Golden Gate park. Instead of keeping to the main thoroughfare, however, the driver, when well into the park, turned down one of the innumerable branch drives, which, owing to the greater intervals between its lamps, was comparatively dark, and brought his vehicle to an abrupt halt in the dense shadow of a immense liveoak. The car had barely stopped before the door was flung open, a man sprang inside, a revolver was pushed into Cleo's face and a hoarse voice warned her. "Not a sound, Miss Burke, if you value your life." Almost simultaneously the driver threw open the other door, and in an instant the terrified girl was securely bound and gagged. The man with the revolver took the seat beside her and drew down the curtains, and so deftly and methodically had the conspirators done their work, within scarcely more time than it has taken to tell it, the car was speeding in the direction whence it came.

When the car finally stopped, the man beside her threw open the door, and, aided by the driver, removed the gag and untied the cords with which she was bound, but the circu-

Lieut. Jarvis Hope reports findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism. Attempt to burglarize Burke's laboratory fails; later his daughter, Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo finds her father's books; she finds a note from which she learns they contain secret formula. Hope and Cleo escape and attend ball at Mrs. Dolmar's, where they meet Miss Burke. Cleo, who has two missing books, Mahlin, an spy, attempts to steal books. Hope and Cleo take boat for an island. After a violent storm Hope and Cleo arrive on strange island and discover man they hunt is there. Mahlin and Japanese also reach the island. Hope and Cleo manage to reach Sandboro, where Doctor Owen has one of the books. Cleo is captured and taken to cabin in the mountains. She finds there book for which they search. Hope, with Hook, starts to rescue. As he crosses chasm in swinging basket Mahlin steals up and chops at table with an ax. He reaches the other side and is greeted by Cleo; she swears her love to him. They are followed by Mahlin and Jap who attempt to kidnap Cleo. Olga and Morton are dashed to pieces in an aeroplane. Hope and Cleo are pulled from quicksands by Hook and a grapsvine. Mahlin and Satusma are called before the Black Council. Hope receives a letter demanding his marriage to a girl who claims he compromised her. He is forced to comply by Cleo. Accidently he learns that a plot to rope him in. He is later summoned to Washington. Morton and Olga are cared for by a rancher who warns them against Carrillo the bandit. They venture too far from the ranch and are captured by the outlaws. Carrillo offers Morton his freedom for ransom. Olga finds one of the books in the cabin. She kills Carrillo and escapes, but Morton takes the book from her and flees. Hope learns that Cleo is the daughter and heir of Doctor Montgomery, Gerald Morton's uncle. He finds her in Sacramento. Olga traces Morton to his room where she confronts him. An attempt to kill him ends in her death at his hands. Cleo is kidnapped from the hotel, while Hope is away.

Gathered Her Into His Arms. She had been checked so long that she felt as if she were being held in a vice. Her captors had to assist her to the ground. There was no moon, but by the faint light of the stars she made out that they had stopped in the shadow of a low, windowless building, at the end of a long and dimly lit pier. The man who had time to see before her captors, unlocking the door, flung her into the arms of the man who had been waiting for her. She was held in his arms, and she felt as if she were being held in a vice. Her captors had to assist her to the ground. There was no moon, but by the faint light of the stars she made out that they had stopped in the shadow of a low, windowless building, at the end of a long and dimly lit pier. The man who had time to see before her captors, unlocking the door, flung her into the arms of the man who had been waiting for her. She was held in his arms, and she felt as if she were being held in a vice.

That was the last Hope saw of Gerald Morton. Three months later he paid for his crime on the gallows at San Quentin.

It was long after midnight when Hope returned to his hotel, but, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour and his utter weariness, he ransacked his trunks until he unearthed the work on metallurgy, which Fitzmaurice had given him as a memento of the dramatic episode in the Sandboro restaurant. Drawing his chair up to the light he opened the well-worn volume at page sixty-one, which contained, he found, a portion of the chapter entitled "Carboniferous Deposits."

The seventh word on the page was, Hope found, "examine," which seemed promising. Again he counted seven and was rewarded with the word "cover," which apparently failed to make sense, but the next word in order was "of," which again raised his hopes, and in wild excitement he completed the hidden sentence, which read: "Examine cover of this book."

Inserting the blade of his pocket knife into the edge of the lining, he carefully worked it back and forth until it curled back. As it did so Hope gave a little exclamation of satisfaction, for, sandwiched between the lining and the cover itself, was a small square of tissue paper. Drawing it out, he read in Doctor Burke's handwriting: "The formula of my submarine invention will be found in a secret drawer under the glass tank of my working model.—R. B."

Hope felt that the mystery now was as good as solved. The key was in his hands. Mentally and physically exhausted, he threw himself upon the bed, and despite the fears and anxieties that assailed him, was almost instantly asleep. So soundly did he sleep, indeed, that it was nearly noon when he was awakened by someone pounding at his door. It proved to be a billboy with a special delivery letter.

"If you wish to see Miss Burke alive," it ran, "come to 1121 Panuco street at nine o'clock this evening, bringing with you the work on metallurgy which formerly belonged to Doctor Burke. The door will be unlocked. Enter without ringing, ascend three flights of stairs and give four short raps on the door at the left. If you communicate with the police or bring anyone with you, it will result in Miss Burke's death. The only way you can save her is to follow these directions to the letter."

No neighborhood in San Francisco has a more evil reputation than Panuco street. No. 1121 Hope found was a narrow, four-story building which, in days long passed, had evidently been a residence of considerable pretension, but which had now fallen into a sad state of neglect and disrepair.

As Hope ascended the steps, there came, from an arway across the street, a shrill whistle, twice repeated. The kidnappers were on the watch and the two whistles were a signal to those within the house that he was unaccompanied. Swinging open the door, Hope found himself in such inky blackness that he had to strike a match in order to find the stairway. Lighting his way with matches, Hope cautiously ascended three flights of stairs and gave four brisk raps on the door on the left, which instantly swung open. In the doorway, his face lighted by the lamp that he held above his head, was Mahlin.

"Hi," said Hope, recognizing his former antagonist. "I rather suspected it was you I had to deal with. Where's your Jap side-partner?" "Just behind you," replied Mahlin, and Hope, listening, heard on the stairs the footfalls of a person stealthily ascending. A moment later Satusma joined them.

"Now," said Mahlin brusquely, when Satusma had closed the door, "we've no time to waste, so let's get down to business. Did you bring the book?" "Yes," replied Hope. "Good—let's see it."

"Not quite so fast, my friend," replied the officer. "You don't get the book until Miss Burke has been released." "Miss Burke will be released as soon as you hand over the book," declared Hope. "On my honor."

"Where is the Book Now?"

It was dark downstairs, but there was a light on the top floor. The door of the room at the head of the stairs was open and a man was lying on the floor. He'd been shot through the heart."

"What did he look like?" asked Hope, though he knew what the answer would be. "A tall, thin fellow," replied the policeman. "He looked like a foreigner. But they're bringing him out now—you can see him for yourself."

The dead man was Mahlin—murdered, no doubt, in a quarrel with one of his associates in crime. "This is a queer case," said another man, evidently a detective, who had just come out of the house, addressing the policeman with whom Hope had been talking. "I just found another dead man lying in the court, a Jap. I fancy. He must have fallen from the window of the room where you found the other fellow, for every bone in his body is broken. He's still holding a knife in his hand."

A month passed. To find Cleo—If indeed, she were still alive—Hope left no stone unturned. He was, at last, reluctantly abandoned the search as hopeless, and turned his attention once more to the submarine invention. Following the directions given on the paper in the cover of the book, he had no difficulty in locating the secret drawer which the old inventor had so ingeniously constructed beneath the brass tank of his working model. And in the drawer, in an old skin envelope, was the formula. Acting under instructions from Washington, Hope had a new model constructed and installed in a modern, sea-going submarine which the government placed at his disposal for the purpose, and, a month after Cleo's disappearance, the submersible, having on board a commission of naval officers, left its moorings at the Mare Island yard to submit Doctor Burke's invention to a final test.

On the same morning that the submersible was starting on its trial trip, Hook was strolling aimlessly along the water front of San Francisco. As he passed irresolutely at the entrance to his favorite saloon, an acquaintance, a former shipmate, who, upon leaving the navy had turned boatman, hailed him.

"You're just the man I wanted to see," he called. "I've got some news that may interest you."

"What kind o' news?" inquired Hook. "Bout that girl—Montgomery, her name wuz, wuzn't it?—that disappeared a while back. But it's only a rumor, mind you, and like as not there's nothin' in it."

"Yes, yes," exclaimed Hook anxiously; "go on."

"Well, I'm tellin' you, she's been spotted at the Mare Island. I heard one o' the fishermen yarin' 'bout a girl that's stayin' with a Greek fisherman and his wife down the shore a piece. This fellow that was tellin' the story says he stopped at the Greek's place to buy some bait or something and he seed this girl. He said he reckoned she'd been mighty sick, she was so white and peaked lookin', but that she must've been a huntin' for looks when she was well. He tried to ask the Greek—Vlasto his name is—'bout her, but he don't understand much English. When he said she was a good-looker and had awful light-colored hair, it kind o' reminded me o' the description o' the Montgomery girl."

"That's likely," said Hook pessimistically. "Ignacio must be all o' thirty miles from the place where Miss Cleo disappeared."

"Still," persisted the other, "she might've been picked up by a fisherman."

"Waal," assented Hook, "it won't do no harm to run over to Ignacio and see this fellow Vlasto. We could get there in your boat in a couple of hours, couldn't we?"

"Sure," said the other, "and remember, Hook, that if it turns out to be the girl, I come in on the reward."

MILK IS SKIMMED ON FARM

Cream Is Tested, Pasteurized, Cooled and "Ripened" Before Churning—Disease Germs and Bacteria Destroyed.

This is the story of creamery butter—the steps in the manufacture of the high-grade product which comes to your table each week. Taking this food for granted, you probably have not realized the rather intricate and technical process through which it passes from milk to the finished product. If this story will inspire a sympathy which leads to a more careful and conservative use of butter it will have served its purpose.

The process of manufacturing creamery butter in a modern factory is just as technical as the manufacture of a piece of cotton cloth. In most instances the milk is skimmed on the farm by means of a hand-operated centrifugal separator, which extracts the cream much more efficiently than the old-time gravity system. The cream may be hauled to the creamery by the farmer or it may be shipped in from a farm 100 or more miles away.

As the cans of cream arrive they are inspected and sampled in order to determine their value for buttermaking. The cream is then poured into huge vats holding 300, 600, or more gallons, in each of which is a coil, or similar device, that when put in motion agitates the cream and thoroughly mixes it. Hot water and steam can be turned into these coils to heat the cream. In many creameries the cream is heated in this way to a temperature of about 145 degrees F., held at that temperature for about 30 minutes and then cooled. The process is known as pasteurization. The object is to kill any disease germs that may be in the cream and to destroy nearly all other bacteria. This protects the health of the consumer, improves the keeping properties of the butter, and enables the creameryman to control the ripening of the cream and develop the proper flavor; it also insures a uniform flavor in the butter.

A Starter Produces Flavor.
 By running cold water through the coils in the vat the cream is cooled to a temperature of between 60 and 70 degrees F. and then a quantity of starter is added to produce the flavor. The starter is a culture containing many millions of lactic-acid bacteria grown in pasteurized skim milk until the milk has soured and curdled. The lactic-acid bacteria produce the desirable flavor in ripened-cream butter. When the cream is sufficiently ripened it is cooled to a temperature of between 40 and 60 degrees F. and held at that temperature for two hours or more, after which it is run into one of the huge churns which have a ca-capacity of 1,000 or more pounds of butter. Although commonly called churns, they really are combined churns and workers, because, unlike home butter-making, the butter is both churned and worked in the machine.

The churn is filled only one-third or one-half full, so that when revolved the cream which is carried up by the motion of the churn has plenty of room to fall. The concussion thus produced causes the minute globules of butterfat to gather into granules of butter. When the churn is stopped after having been run for about an hour granules of butter about the size of grains of wheat or corn will be floating on the surface of the buttermilk. Then the buttermilk is drawn off through a hole in the bottom of the churn and the butter granules washed with pure, cold water. After draining, salt is added to the granular butter which is still in the churn.

The big wooden rollers are then put into gear, the churn started and the butter worked in the churn until the salt is all dissolved and the butter has a waxy body. The butter is removed and packed into tubs or made into pound prints and put into cartons in the form in which it goes to the consumer.

Many Scientific Tests Made.
 Many creameries have well-equipped laboratories in which the numerous scientific tests that are a part of the creamery business are made. A sample of every can of cream that is received is tested by means of the Babcock test in order to determine the per cent of butterfat. By this means the pounds of butterfat for which the farmer is to be paid is determined. The sourness or acidity of the cream or milk is determined by means of another test which involves the use of carefully calibrated glassware. In order that the buttermaker may be able to turn out butter having approximately the same composition day after day he tests a sample of butter from each churning for moisture and salt. Both of these tests require skillful workmanship and the use of delicate scales. Because of the highly specialized nature of these tests...

MAKE THE SOWS EXERCISE.

One of the biggest hindrances to the farrowing of good, strong, vigorous litters is lack of exercise for the sows. During cold and snowy weather hogs like to lie around the sleeping quarters and be comfortable. That, however, is not what they should do all of the time. The proper exercise for a brood sow is that which she will take voluntarily and not through force. She should get her corn ration by hustling for it in the stalk fields and not by getting it around the sleeping quarters, on feeding floors, or in troughs. Protein feeds in the form of shorts, tankage, oil meal, or alfalfa hay should be supplied.

technical apparatus used in a creamery the operator of the factory must necessarily be a technically trained man, and in fact many are graduates of special courses at the state agricultural colleges. On account of the large and expensive machinery required the creamery business demands the investment of considerable capital. The small country creamery may possibly be built and equipped for less than $10,000, but many of the larger plants cost more than $100,000.

MAKE A GERMINATION TEST

Home-Made Device Will Tell Value of Seeds—Clean Small Grains Before Sowing—Send Sample to Agricultural College.

The seed trade has voluntarily agreed to label all field seeds with the percentage of pure seed that will grow, giving the purchaser exact information as to quality. The United States Department of Agriculture urges all farmers to buy their seeds only from dealers who comply with this agreement and not to run the risk of buying high-priced, unlabeled seed that will not give a stand in the field.

Make Germination Test.
 Get your seed early and make a germination test of it before sowing. Count out 100 seeds; put them between folds of moist paper or cloth between two dinner plates and keep at room temperature for four days; then count the sprouted seeds. If 95 seeds sprout the seed is good; if only a small part of them sprout the seed is either poor or the test was not properly made. If in doubt as to the value of the seed send a sample to your state agricultural experiment station or to the Seed Laboratory, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., with the request that it be tested for quality.

SCREENING SEED MAY PREVENT NEW DISEASE.

Screening out the shriveled grains from wheat seed before planting will remove one cause of spreading the new bacterial disease of wheat which has been discovered in many states of the middle West. This has been learned by specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture who, in co-operation with the experiment stations of Kansas and Wisconsin, are studying the problem of controlling this disease. Wheat kernels that are plump do not contain bacterial cavities, but shriveled ones often do.

CLEAN SEED BEFORE SOWING.

Cleaning and grading the small grains for spring sowing should be done before the spring rush in preparing the land and sowing the seed. Wheat, oats, barley, and flax can be improved for sowing by running the seed through the fanning mill at least once. The cleaned grain will stand through the drill or other seeding machinery more evenly and thus insure a more uniform stand than can be obtained from uncleaned grain.

SEED DEALERS TO FURNISH INFORMATION WITH PRODUCT.

According to a plan agreed upon by representatives of the seed trade and representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture in conferences last year, seed dealers will provide the following information with all lots of ten pounds or over of field-crop seeds which they sell:

1. Name of seedsmen.
2. Kind of seed.
3. Proportion of pure live seed present, with month and year of germination test.
4. Country or locality of origin in the case of the following imported seeds: Beans, soy beans, Turkestan alfalfa, and red clover from southern Europe and Chile.

Since the seed trade conferences, practically all the larger seedsmen have individually agreed to conduct their business in accordance with these suggestions.

This is important from the standpoint of cost alone when red clover seed is selling for $20 or more per bushel. It is much more necessary, however, to know the quality of seed in order that the rate of seeding may be proportional to the quality, so that enough live seed will be sowed to insure a stand in the field. First know how much of the seed may grow and then sow accordingly.

CLEAN SEED BEFORE SOWING.

Cleaning and grading the small grains for spring sowing should be done before the spring rush in preparing the land and sowing the seed. Wheat, oats, barley, and flax can be improved for sowing by running the seed through the fanning mill at least once. The cleaned grain will stand through the drill or other seeding machinery more evenly and thus insure a more uniform stand than can be obtained from uncleaned grain.

Cleaning grain removes most of the weak and diseased kernels many of which may not grow at all, or if they do grow are likely to produce small, weak plants. Uniformly large, plump kernels germinate more evenly, produce stronger plants, and yield more than ungraded grain containing small, shriveled kernels.

Through cleaning also removes a large part of the weed seeds the grain contains. The preparation of the land for seeding destroys many seeds that are in the ground and thus helps to keep weeds in check, but the work of this work is largely lost if the weeds are sown.

To The American People

There is no foundation for the alleged violations of law attributed to Swift & Company by agents of the Federal Trade Commission and I want to say emphatically that Swift & Company is not a party to any conspiracy to defraud the Government. Nor has Swift & Company been guilty of improperly storing foods or of making false entries or reports.

Conferences of packers, where prices have been discussed, have been held at the urgent request and in the presence of representatives of either the Food Administration or the Council of National Defense. And yet the packers have been accused of committing a felony by acting in collusion on Government bids!

We have done our best, with other packers, large and small, to comply with the directions of the United States Food Administration in all particulars, including the furnishing of food supplies for the U. S. Army and Navy and the Allies, now being handled through the Food Administration.

We will continue to do our utmost, under Government direction, to increase our production and assist the Food Administration. We consider that the opportunity to co-operate whole-heartedly and to our fullest powers with this branch of the Government is our plain and most pressing duty.

The Trade Commission Attorney has, by false inference and misplaced emphasis, given to disconnected portions of the correspondence taken from our private files and read into the Record, a false and sinister meaning with the plain purpose of creating antagonistic public opinion.

The services of the packers of the United States are most urgently needed, and I regret exceedingly that we should at this time have to spend our efforts in defending ourselves against unfounded, unproved, and unfair assertions such as are being daily made public.

MOSEY SIGNS STATE-WIDE BILL

Measure Will Become Effective 90 Days After Adjournment, or June 27.

Anstett—Governor Hobby made history Thursday. He signed house bill No. 8, which enacts state-wide prohibition for Texas. It does not become effective until June 27, which is 90 days after adjournment. It is expected that the law will be contested in the courts; first, on the ground that it was not included in the governor's call, and second, that it violates that provision of the constitution which accords local option to the counties and subdivisions thereof.

With the signing of the state-wide dry bill Governor Hobby has given his approval to all but one of the liquor bills passed by the prohibition majorities in both houses. These include the anti-bottling bill, the ten-mile zone law and the bill restricting liquor licenses to incorporated cities and towns. He has on his desk a bill which would prohibit the sale of liquor in almost

BRITISH FALL BACK TO SOMME RIVER

HUNS OCCUPY PERONNE, CHAUNY AND HAM—FORCE CROSSING OF STREAM AT POINTS.

PARIS SHELLED BY BIG GUNS

Monster German Gun is Located in St. Gobain Forest, 75 Miles From Center of French Capital.

London, March 25.—The withdrawal of the British forces along the battle front in France was long ago planned in the event of the Germans attacking in great force. This announcement comes from the British front through the Associated Press correspondent, who describes the operation of the British army as a masterly withdrawal, made possible by gallant shock troops in the front lines who checked the advance of the Germans while artillery, machine gun and rifle fire worked appalling slaughter among the masses of German infantry as they were sent forward, thus enabling the main body of the British troops to fall back deliberately and without confusion to the line of the Somme river.

This day, it is declared, has been considered a few counter-attacks have been made against the Germans, where the British have stormed the German's newly acquired positions they have driven them back. But each mile of advance makes the bringing up of supplies to the German artillery and infantry more and more difficult, and unquestionably the British strategy as demonstrated since the beginning of the great attack is to let the enemy, so far as he may, wear himself out against a powerful defense.

The town of Chauny southwest of St. Quentin situated on the road to Compiègne, the gateway to Paris, has been occupied by the Germans, and according to the Berlin official communications, everywhere between the Somme and the St. Quentin the Germans are pressing their advantage.

In addition to Chauny the Germans are claiming the capture of both Peronne and Ham, and to have increased the number of prisoners taken to more than 20,000, in addition to 200 guns and large stores of war materials.

It now has been definitely ascertained that considerably more than a million Germans have been brought to the western front to an extent to crush the British army, better known from the capture of the town of the south of St. Quentin.

It is claimed also by the Germans that American and French reinforcements which were brought up to reinforce the British have been defeated, but no further information than this statement has been furnished.

Locate German Gun.

Berlin.—Paris has been bombarded by German long-distance guns, according to the German official communication.

Paris.—The German "monster gun" which has been bombarding Paris, has been located in the forest of St. Gobain, west of Laon and only 75 miles from the Paris city belt. The gun bombarded Paris during the greater part of Sunday.

Considerable Berlin war news attributed to London, "Berlin" but not always "the" concerning the situation in the city of Paris from the news from Paris is reported that in the morning of Sunday the situation in the city of Paris was very quiet, and that the only sound of gunfire was heard from the front lines.

The Evening News, London, reports that the British army has been ordered to retreat to the line of the Somme river, and that the German army has been ordered to advance to the line of the Somme river.

River Jordan is crossed by the British army.

SHIPPING CATTLE

Butord Webb on Thursday shipped two cars of stockers and canners to Fort Worth. Most of the stock were calves with a few cows. Scarcity of grass and water is largely responsible for so many cattle being shipped from here.

Life Was a Misery

Mrs. F. M. Jones, of Palmer, Okla., writes: "From the time I entered into womanhood... I looked with dread from one month to the next. TAKE

CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

"I took four bottles," Mrs. Jones goes on to say, "and was not only greatly relieved, but can truthfully say that I have not a pain."

If you suffer pain caused from womanly trouble, or if you feel the need of a good strengthening tonic to build up your run-down system, take the advice of Mrs. Jones. Try Cardui. It helped her. We believe it will help you.
