PATENT BILLS:

The House passed five bills which intended to speed up patent procedure. A Senate Committee reported Senate bills that are expected to create a Circuit Court of Patent Appeals limiting the life of a patent to twenty years from the day the application is filed. This is to prevent dragging out private control of the invention, which can sometimes run for over forty years.

FLEXIBLE FARM LEASE:

The farm Security Administration has distributed within the past year 1,000,000 copies of its written lease form designed to improved rental arrangements between farm tenants and landlords. Both have applied in large numbers for this "Flexible Farm Lease" which is intended to take the place of oral agreement that still prevail in many sections of the country. The lease form is designed to encourage statement of landlord-tenant agreements in clear-cut terms and minimize the misunderstandings that arise from word-of-mouth greements. The "rental rater" clause carries a suggested form for stating exactly the share of each crop or the cash payment the tenant is to give the landlord. The "improvement compensation" clause in the lease form provides for an importial sharing of responsibility for property improvements-both permanent and removeable. The amount of compensation the tenant is to get for improvements he makes on the landlord's property during his tenancy has often caused disagreements under oral leasing. Another matter of concern to the landlord and tenant is the prevalent tenure practice. In many cases, Farm Security Administration officials say, this procedure works to the disadvantage of both parties. Tenants hesitate to initiate crop rotations landlords hesitate to make changes or repairs in buildings which may not be needed by succeeding tenants. To provide for such cases the "Flexible Farm Lease" contains an "automatic renewal" clause. This clause in effect causes the lease to remain in full force until either party wishes to terminate his contract. Termination of the lease is in accordance with a period of notice fixed in the contract. Experience has shown that the use of a lease of this kind makes for better protection of the land-lord's property and for more security for the tenant and his family. ********
