"YOU! HER HUSBAND?"

Synopsis.-Tom Shelby, a rancher Ponca, looking for a good time after a long spell of hard work and loneliness on the ranch. Instead, he runs into a funeral-that of Lad Calkins, a retired army man of whom little is known. A girl, still in her teens, survives Calkins. Mc-Carthy, a saloon keeper and Ponca's leading citizen, decides that the girl, now alone in the world, should marry. She agrees to pick out a husband from the score of men lined up in her home. To his nation, she selects Shelby who had gone along merely as a spectator. The wedding takes place and the couple set out for Shelby's ranch. With them is "Kid" Macklin, whom Shelby has hired as a helper. On the way the girl tells her husband her name is Olga Carlyn, and also tells him something of the peculiar circum-stances of her life. Upon their arrival at the ranch Shelby is struck down from behind and left for find that Macklin and his wife have He starts in pursuit. He learns his wife is an heiress, that her abduction has been carefully planned and that she has been taken to Wolves' Hole, a stronghold of bandits and bad Indians Reaching Wolves' Hole, he is discovered by "Indian Joe" and forced accompany him into the Hole.

Shelby rode away silently between the two, conscious that this brief conversation had in no way improved his position. To be sure he had escaped an immediate meeting with Hanley. but the fact that the latter had entirely failed to mention his probable arrival must have left an unpleasant suspicion in Laud's mind. The fellow said nothing, however, and apparently took no precautions, but Shelby was nevertheless fully aware that the other watched him cautiously, and would be quick to detect the slightest movement. They rode at a walk through a darkness so profound that he could not be sure they were even allowing a tenils. "All right, then; 'tain't much farther, enyhow. There's the high rock, Juan; the light'll show round the next turn."

It did, shining out like a star, and they drove up in front of a log shack, an odd-shaped, rambling affair, built close in against a wall of rock. The door opened in response to the sound of the horses' hoofs, and a young woman appeared in the entrance, peering forth.

"That you, Juan?" she asked in Spanish. "SI; there are three of us, Pancha," but obey. Suspicion caused him to feel a thrill of apprehension from Indian Joe's curt manner, yet there was nothing in the words to resent, and his only chance of safety lay in an outward appearance of satisfaction. The girl drew aside, and he stepped forward into the room. An instant she lingered, as he glanced hastily about at the plainly furnished interfor, then ciosed the door, and began busying herself in arranging the tathe was young, not over sixteen, he judged, with dark hair and eyes, decidedly pretty, and with a quick movement, like the flight of a hird. Once Shelby caught his eyes looking across at him, but except for that one glance the fellow seemed oblivious of any other presence. Finally he pushed back his chair, pulled his feet around to where the butt of a revolver was within easy reach of his hand and his eyes glared straight into Shelby's face.

"Had enough?" "Plenty; Pancha is a good coo't." "She is that. Thought I'd walt till after supper before we talked business. Now, Churchill, or whatever your name is, maybe you'll tell me where you got that bronc with a Three Star brand on him?"

Your story ain't sounded just right to me from the start, but I'll give yer a chance to prove it. I ain't goin' ter plug you now; not if yer've got sense enough to behave yerself. Tomorrow I'll see what Matt Hanley has to say, but till that time yere goin' to be locked up. Goin' ter make any row over that program?"

"Not the least." "All right, then. Juan, you take the gent's gun; he's better off without it. That's right; now feel him over an' see if he's got any other weapons. Better stand up, Churchill."

The ranchman, comprehending the utter futility of any attempt at resistance, did as he was told, managing to retain the same cool smile on his lips, The murderous eyes of the squawman never once deserted his face and doing. Laud was in no mend to be argued with,

He felt his way cautiously about the room. which was of small dimensions, containing only a single stool, and a cot; the floor was puncheon and the walls of log, heavily plastered with mud. The place offered apparently no opportunity for escape, and Shelby sat

He could distinguish the voices of the three without plainly enough to determine who was speaking, but their words were indistinguishable. Then the murmur finally ceased, and he thought one of the men had left the house, perhaps both, yet that was hardly likely. Someone remained certainly, for there was movement, and the sound of feet, mingled with the clink of dishes. Pancha was evidently clearing off the table. His thought centered on her. Had he made a mistake in thus suddenly confiding his true story to her ears? Yet, so fer as he knew, she had said nothing to infure him, and had made no effort to reveal his secret. Indeed her actions had rather expressed fear of Laud. and a certain sympathy for him; surely that was what he had read in the depths of her eyes. Yet how could this be accounted for? She must certainly be one with these others; brought up probably from childhood in the atmosphere of crime, and ceruninly loyal to her brother, if nothing else. What then could possibly influence her to show him the slightest consideration?

He sat with head in his hands, endeavoring to solve the mystery, and, out from the dark, a possible explanation flashed into his mind-Macklin. Could any relation she might have with this fellow account for a desire to wish his escape alive? It might: the fact that he was already the husband of the woman Macklin planned to marry would quite naturally explain the entire situation under certain conditions. If that rascal had made love to her, and now deliberately planned to desert her for another. the Spanish blood would account for all the rest. By heaven; that must be it! He recalled the insistence of her questioning; the flash of her eyes, the threatening gleam of her white teeth. Unconsciously he had touched the secret spring, and unloosed the tiger. Jealousy was the weapon-a love turned to hate, the fury of a woman scorned. To get Olga out of her path forever, she would risk anything, dare anything. Here then, was his one and only chance.

But could the girl serve him, even if she desired to do so? He realized the seriousness of his position; his helplessness without some outside aid. He had been a blind fool to venture into this den alone; and even a blinder fool to claim friendship with Hanley. The morning would find him completely exposed, and he had little doubt what form vengeance would as-

These efforts were utterly useless; there was not a spot of weakness to be discovered. If the place had been originally constructed as a prison it could not have been more securely built. Mentally and physically exhausted, he flung himself upon the floor, and lay there, quivering from head to foot, with nerves completely shattered.

The silence became ghastly; any sound would have been a relief. There was no one moving about even in that other room, and the door between fitted too closely for him to perceive any gleam of light. He listened intently, holding his breath, but his head sank back once more in dejection. Why in God's name hadn't he fought it out like a man? Why had he ever permitted himself to be thus caught like a trapped rat? The frenzy of disgust he felt caused him to sit up and stare once more at the single star shining through the window. What was that? A shadow? Surely something out yon-

Lead is said to act like steel at or dinary temperatures in liquid air. It will serve as a helical spring, for example. This behavior of soft non-elastic metals is interesting. It shows how very important temperature is. Just as iron is soft and inelastic at a high red color, so lead is dull and soft at ordinary temperatures, for it is well on its way to be melted.

Wedding Superstitions. The popularity of June for weddings is due to the pretty omen that Juno takes an especial interest in marriage and she protects and blesses all who are wedded in June. The girl who becomes a bride on Christmas day has nothing to fear. If a widow marries a second time in the same month in which she was married before, she will be a widow twice.

Birds That Speak Ravens, crows and magpies are al better speakers than parrots. They are not so versatile and the sounds they utter are less varied, but their voices and articulation are far more human. A crow's talk in the next room may easily be mistaken for that of a person. Parrots are the best imitators; that is to say, they mimic whistling and other noises, particularly laughing, to admiration. It has been remarked that their voices in speaking are like that of a crazy person.

The Milkweed.

The milkweed, a plant that has a much longer name than that, but one which would not be nearly as attractive for us to use, is especially wellknown in America. In the autumn when the pods have opened and there is a brisk breeze, the wind carries their seeds far and near. Then the downy seeds are seen flying like tiny airships almost everywhere, in search of a homelike growing place, where northern or Mediterranean limit in the they may appear in the spring as tall, slender stalks.
