

Lions Tale

BY GENE ALDERSON

The Clarendon Lions Club held its regular meeting Tuesday at noon at the Lions Hall with twenty-four members present. We had one transfer member who is Rev. W. R. Lawrence, who transferred from the Borger Evening Club. Visiting with us was Jack Blum of Lakeview who is associated with Charlie's Market of Clarendon. Mr. Blum is a former member of the Memphis Club and was the guest of Lion Home Estlack. Following our regular opening ceremonies, Boss Lion Courtney read a letter of invitation to our club from the Downtown Amarillo Lions Club to attend their 60th Anniversary Banquet to be held at the Hilton Inn in Amarillo on August 10th. Their speaker will be Lloyd Morgan, President of Lions International. Lion Morgan is from New Zealand, and it is quite an honor to have him in our area. Let's be sure our club is represented at the banquet.

After much diligent work, Lion Paul Bivins came up with an excellent program for today's meeting. It was brought by Doreen Miley, District Scout Executive for the Adobe Walls Council. Doreen gave us some highlights of district Scout activities which our local Scouts participated in this summer including seven Scouts attending Camp M. K. Brown, two Scouts attending Order of the Arrow this past weekend and several participating in the Cub Scout Day Camp and Lad and Dad Campout. Clarendon was also represented in the Scout Superstars activity in Pampa in April. Doreen then told us about a six day Florida "Gateway to High Adventure" sailing trip which she and several adult sponsors and eleven Scouts and Explorers attended this summer. The group used a 37 foot and a 43 foot sailboat. In addition to sailing, the group did quite a bit of snorkeling and reported seeing many beautiful fish and coral formations. ...

Federal money for school programs

Federal payments to states for the school lunch and breakfast programs have been increased to reflect a 6.68 percent increase in the Consumer Price Index for food away from home during Nov. 1978 through May 1979, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carol Tucker Foreman said today. The new national average payment for school lunches is 17.0 cents per lunch, up 1.25 cents, effective July 1. States and territories are now authorized by the agriculture department to pay schools up to 23.0 cents per lunch. The special assistance payment for lunches served to needy children has increased from 71.50 cents to 76.25 cents for a free lunch. Maximum total reimbursement states may pay schools increased from 102.25 cents to 108.25 cents for a free lunch. Under provisions of regulations announced by Foreman in January, 43 states have established a maximum reduced-price lunch charge to children of 10 cents or less. These states will receive reduced-price special assistance payments of 66.25 cents per lunch served. The remaining 13 states charge the maximum 20 cents for reduced-price lunches, and will receive 56.25 cents in special assistance for each reduced-price lunch served. For the school breakfast program, the national average payment increased from 12.75 cents to 13.5 cents per breakfast. The additional average payment for each reduced price breakfast increased from 23.75 cents to 25.5 cents. The additional average payment for a free breakfast increased 31.75 cents to 33.75 cents. The maximum rate of reimbursement for breakfasts in schools with severe need increased from 49.50 cents to 52.25 cents for reduced price breakfasts, and from 54.50 cents to 57.25 cents for free breakfasts. The rates of payments for the school lunch and breakfast programs and regulations governing federal payments for reduced price lunches are scheduled to be published in the July 20 Federal Register.

Energy-Shortage

The following article is reproduced from 'Answers to Economic' problems by Howard E. Kershner, Visiting Professor of Current Economic Problems, a monthly commentary from the Department of Economics, Northwood Institute, P. O. Box 58, Cedar Hill, Texas 75104, July 1979.

Government controls 96.4 percent of land in Alaska, 86.4 percent of Nevada, 66.2 percent of Utah, 63.7 percent of Arizona; in all, approximately one-third of mainland United States.

These lands are often referred to as "federal lands" implying that they are the property of government and not necessarily of the people. The management responsible for these lands is spread among 24 government agencies, and 47 sub-units of the government. The largest amount of land is managed by the Bureau of Land Management, an agency of the Department of the Interior. These lands contain 50 percent of all known U. S. energy resources; 40 percent of all U. S. coal, 70 percent of all low sulfur coal, 75 percent of all U. S. oil shale; 85 percent of all U. S. tar sands; 15 percent of all U. S. developed oil reserves; 15 percent of all U. S. discovered oil resources; 33 percent of all U. S. estimated oil resource base; 20 percent of all U. S. developed gas reserves; 25 percent of all U. S. discovered gas resource; and 43 percent of all U. S. estimated gas resource base.

In spite of this, in 1976 only ten percent of U. S. energy production came from these public lands. The "withdrawal process," which has been used to declare the majority of public lands off-limits to energy mineral production, was originally devised for withdrawal and reservation of lands for certain uses, such as Indian reservations, trading posts, pony express stations, lighthouses, and military bases. Today it is being used for preservation purposes, on the greatest scale ever conceived by man. Unfortunately, the bureaucracy has allowed itself to lower its guard on the subject of land withdrawal. Until October, 1977, when Congress ordered otherwise, any federal agency could effectively withdraw land by merely filing a request to do so in any local Bureau of Land Management office. Neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the President had to know about it, let alone anybody—not even the federal government—has been keeping score on exactly how much of the public land has been withdrawn.

The shock came when two Department of the Interior employees started to add up the amount of land withdrawn from just those records which were readily available. They came to the startling conclusion that most of the public lands are no longer available to the public—at least not for prospecting for or digging up minerals. Still worse, the great majority of these withdrawals have occurred recently. In 1968 only one-quarter of the lands were withdrawn, but in 1974 almost three-quarters of the lands were withdrawn. The process continues.

Besides withdrawing public land, the federal government is making leasing of those lands more difficult. The shelf-wells (offshore wells) are by far the largest producers in the U. S. In 1976, in spite of the fact that only 3 percent of U. S. wells are located offshore, these wells produced 20 percent of the nation's oil and gas. Worldwide, 17 percent of all crude oil produced came from offshore. Estimates are that if permitted, oil production from the shelf could reduce American imports by 30 percent by 1985.

So far, only 4 percent of federal offshore holdings on the continental shelf have been developed for oil, and this nearly all off the producing states of Texas and Louisiana. At present, Interior estimates the minimum lead time requirement for first production of new wells in the Gulf of Mexico, off the California Coast, off the Atlantic Coast, and the Gulf of Alaska, to be three, four, six, and eight years, respectively. However, they also estimate the present and proposed federal regulation will increase this time requirement by an additional two to four years.

Another point of interest is the economics of the continental shelf oil and gas production. Between 1953 and 1976 the production from the shelf had a gross value of 127.6 billion. Of this, 122.9 billion was paid to the federal government in the form of bonuses, royalties, and rentals. That's right, 83 percent of the gross (before taxes) went to the federal government. Federal policies today clearly discriminate against offshore oil and gas production. As a consequence, in 1974 we drilled only 830 offshore wells whereas in 1967, the peak year, we had drilled 1,365 offshore wells.

Last year the Chase Manhattan Bank analyzed the cash flow of 30 major oil companies. These 30 companies had collectively made $13.5 billion in profits, $5 billion of which had been distributed to the shareholders as dividends. They had invested $27.8 billion in new projects and they had paid $65.2 billion to governments. Thus, in 1976, payments to governments by these 30 oil companies were 13 times dividends and five times profits!

In 1978, when the Bureau of Land Management published its estimated budget requirements for the next several years, it said no new coal leases would be issued until fiscal years 1980 to 1982. Is the federal government really trying to solve the energy problem?

The evidence is mounting that the policy of the federal government is to withhold America's energy resources from our use. While we may be fighting an energy battle which the President has declared as "the moral equivalent of war," the federal government has embargoed the very resources which are necessary for us to win the battle.

Dr. Peter Flawn, president of the University of Texas at San Antonio and an eminent geologist, has put it this way: "As in all wars, we are seriously threatened both nationally and individually. Losing the war will result in a profound economic depression with attendant massive unemployment, crippled industry, and an agricultural system unable to feed, at anything like its accustomed level, a population with a greatly reduced mobility.... Democratic institutions are not likely to survive the kind of social unrest that losing this war will produce."

Flawn, being from an oil and gas producing state, also points to the regional problems involved with the present federal crude oil and natural gas pricing policy.... "The producing regions of the United States want to receive a fair price for their products. When the government suppresses the price of domestic goods and pays higher prices to foreign producers for the same goods, it produces bitterness, political confrontations, a depressed domestic industry, and a threat to national security.... Those who would protect the consumer must address the security of the supply as well as the price of the

"Please explain hypocrisy?" In Bible context, Jesus gives a working definition in Matthew 23 as He warned the multitudes and disciples in vs. 1-12. Especially in verse 3, "they (Pharisees and Scribes) say things and do not do them..." Then He uses examples, specifically pointing to burdens, their alms, their misuse of the Mosaic Law, their vain desire for honor and positions which denote a certain "respect" — even in use or misuse of titles and positions of service.

The Biblical Greek denotes "A pretender" (Thayer's Lexicon). The Classical Greek writers Aristophanes, Xenophon, Plato, Aristotle, Dionysius and others use the meaning of an actor — or stage player. He is the player that changes masks to portray different characters in a one-man production. The pretenders of Matthew 23 were indicted by Jesus and adjudged guilty of persecutions, riotings, and murders because of the far-reaching influences of their attitudes and acts of godlessness. He pronounced seven "WOES" upon these hypocrites, then lamented over their generation seen in desolation, Matt. 23:38. Jesus was not wrong in giving these examples of hypocrisy, for in these we see the attitudes of the Pharisees and Scribes toward God's will. They were selfish and only wanted to enrich themselves as the custodians of God's will, while taking liberties according to their own manipulations of that Holy Will. Today such attitudes of intolerance and false liberty pervade our society and daily lives. Serving such demands is quite enough to keep the psychologists couches and asylums well filled. It is out of such confusion that liquor merchants and drug traffickers are enriched at a skyrocketing rate. The things that we have in common with the hypocrites of Jesus' day is the lack of insight into God-given principles and the lack of faith in God's daily providing of inner courage, strength and stamina. Anyone who claims to be a Christian yet lives without depending upon and communicating with God will starve to death, spiritually!

Library Boards meets

Members of the City-County Library board met Thursday, July 26, at a regular meeting in the board room at city hall, with Naomi Green chairman.

In other than routine business it was announced that 70 children had participated in the summer programs at the library. This summer activity will end Tuesday, July 31, the last day of the month.

A new ruling regarding book renewal was adopted and is now in effect. The ruling is: Books must be renewed in person with the book to be renewed in their possession for stamp dating. In addition from this date on no book may be renewed more than one time, consecutively.

There was a committee report on the first draft of the constitution and by-laws for the City-County Library which will be presented for approval by the board at a late date.

A new board member, Betty Williams, was included to replace the position of Verda Hinds of Hedley, who resigned because of prior commitments.

Persent was one guest, Sarah Cline, Naomi Green, chairman, Shirley Clifford and Lawrence Neece.

The library is asking for records of clubs, minutes book and year books which members may have in their possession without adequate facilities for storing, to add to their records.

Some material of this kind has been given by the Ashtola Community. These records will aid in the research and historical sections of the local library and be safely stored and available to the readers. The librarian and the library board will appreciate your help.

The library is asking for records of clubs, minutes book and year books which members may have in their possession without adequate facilities for storing, to add to their records.

Some material of this kind has been given by the Ashtola Community. These records will aid in the research and historical sections of the local library and be safely stored and available to the readers. The librarian and the library board will appreciate your help.

Clarendon 4-Her at Houston meet

Phillip Moreman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Moreman, attended this 1979 Texas 4-H Congress July 19-22 at the

Shamrock Hilton Hotel in Houston and completed his year as Chairman of 4-H District 1 and as a member of the Texas 4-H Council. Phillip sums up his years and term of office this way. "The benefit of the experience of the year in office far out weighed the responsibility. It was a real opportunity for a learning experience and I enjoyed it very much."

More than 500 4-H members from throughout Texas as well as a host of adult leaders and county agents with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service heard a number of officials give their views on our nation's energy situation. And for the most part, they painted a rather dim picture.

Dr. John McKetta, an engineer at the University of Texas who served on several energy policy committees under the Nixon and Ford Administrations, said that "we are facing a great upheaval in our society due to the energy situation. We want plenty of energy but we don't want pollution--we demand air quality that we can't attain. We could save one and one-half billion gallons of oil per day if we would decide to live with a less purified air."

McKetta called for a number of conservation measures that could save some three and one-half billion barrels of oil a day. These include reducing auto and home air-conditioning and heating, drying clothes outdoors rather than in dryers, shutting down escalators when they are not being used, driving smaller cars, car pooling, mass transportation, abiding by the 55 mph speed limit, reducing weekend driving, raising the legal driving age to 18, recycling solid wastes, constructing more energy-conserving buildings and using refined lubes.

"At the same time, government should take some steps to match this same saving of three and one-half billion barrels of oil per day," he emphasized. Among his recommendations were eliminating forced busing, eliminating catalytic mufflers and thereby allowing lead in gas, changing ICC (Interstate Commerce Commission) rules to allow more efficient trucking, increasing coal use in industry, and eliminating unnecessary regulations in the market place that hamper decision-making and discourage the production of energy.

Another speaker Ken Murphey with Gulf Oil Corp., reiterated the opinion that people want plenty of energy as well as a "risk-free" environment. "People want energy but don't want to pay the price," he emphasized. "We do not live in a world where something is available for nothing. We are building political roadblocks to the energy we so desperately need," he said, referring to political and environmental decisions that have hampered energy production.

"We are not running out of possible sources of energy."

Murphey assured the 4-H group. "But we are running out of developed and readily available sources of energy."

To survive the energy crisis, Murphey said that "we must adapt to change and we must enable the business community, not our political institutions, to make decisions. There is currently something amiss in our society. We must work together to deal with the true issues rationally and effectively," he emphasized.

D. A. Buell with Houston Lighting and Power Co. reviewed some of the current and future sources of energy and emphasized that his company is going to use what's available, including coal and nuclear energy. "Nuclear power last year produced more energy than could have been delivered by the Alaskan pipeline in full operation for an entire year," he said. "Nuclear power is real and I hope it's here to stay." He said that the uranium in the surface of the United States today could produce energy equal to the total world oil reserve.

He challenged the 4-H'ers to use their abilities and resources to work toward solving the nation's energy problems.

The true story that has captivated over 8,000,000 readers.

A Moment for Meditation

The Door Was Shut

Mt. 25:10

BY INEZ G. LAWRENCE
These four words describe the shocking reality which each of us experiences somewhere in life. Something stops, unexpectedly perhaps, but finally. A door we thought would remain open has closed.

These sobering words come from one of Jesus' parables but the truth is very up-to-date. Life does have its finalities. There are opportunities which must be used immediately or they are gone. The poet may have been thinking of a closed door when he wrote, "Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these: It Might Have Been". So we stand outside and are sorry because we did not enter while the door was open.

There are countless examples of doors which may close at any time. Take the commandment, "Honor thy father and mother". Too often we neglect to express our love and appreciation before death closes that door permanently. Or take Paul's advice, "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath". The advantage of being an adult in command is being sometimes, especially after a hectic day at work. So a child's bid for love and attention may be ignored, rejected or even punished. The communication door is wide open now, but may close unexpectedly. How many parents lament, "My Children won't talk to me about anything that is important to them".

Then there is the door of friendship which opens and closes for each of us. How long it remains open depends on how

U.S.D.A. propose limit

USDA is proposing to limit the sale of any food sold in competition with federally subsidized meal programs which does not have at least 5% of the U. S. recommended dietary allowance for any of the eight basic nutrients.

If the proposal becomes final, soda pop, water ice, chewing gum and other candies could not be sold until after the end of the school lunch period each day.

often we pass through it to others. The writer of Proverbs put it simply, "To have friends, a man must show himself friendly". Certainly this rules out negligence or indifference toward our friends. There are other doors which might have been such as education scorned when it was available, business skills unlearned because of laziness or creative ability untapped through carelessness. But the most haunting one is "What have I done that was really worth doing? Who is a better person because I lived? Is my community help by my presence in it?" There is still time now before more doors are shut. There is time to show love to family and friends, to contribute our efforts to community betterment. So let us arouse ourselves to these precious opportunities lest we hear once more, "The Door Was Shut."

Jones-Wilson wedding read in Memphis

Cynthia Ann Jones and Randy Wilson exchanged nuptial vows on Monday, July 16, in the Travis Baptist Church of Memphis at 2 p.m. with Rev. V. L. Huggins, minister officiating at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Jones of Clarendon and Mr. and Mrs. Mac L. Mackay, of Denver. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Wilson, of Memphis.

Altar decorations were white baskets of large yellow and white mums and greenery flanking an arch of greenery in the center. Brown satin ribbon bows marked the pews carrying out the bride's chosen colors of yellow and brown.

Escorted to the altar by her father, the bride was lovely in a gown of white silk chiffon fashioned with a portrait neckline edged with lace and pearl applique. The bodice was fitted with an inset girdle, long slim bracelet length sleeves with gathered, lace edged flounces falling free at the bracelet length. The skirt of gathered tiers edged with pearl applique lace was over a hooped under skirt of white taffeta. Her full length cathedral veil was attached to a satin headband with lace applique and pearls. Wide scalloped lace edged the veil and it was interspersed with lace and pearl applique flowers. For her jewelry the bride wore a triple strand of pearls belonging to her grandmother.

Maid of honor was Betty Roberts, of Memphis and bridesmaid was Karen Aderholt, of Denver, they wore identical dresses of pale yellow silk voile styled with a vee neck, cape sleeves edged in white lace and a wide, gathered flounce at the hemline. They carried a single stemmed yellow silk rose.

The brides bouquet was of white and yellow silk daisies, brown silk leaves and tied with brown satin streamers tied in love knots.

The groom wore a white tuxedo and his boutonniere was a pale yellow carnation.

Wedding music in the traditional style was provided by Stacy Lemons, of Memphis.

Best man was Ricky Evans and groomsmen were Chris Richardson. Ushers were Ronnie Wilson and Kenneth Jones Jr. The best man and other attendants were dark brown tuxedos and white carnation boutonnieres.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the church parlor. The brides table was spread with a simple white satin cloth and centered with a floral arrangement of large yellow and white mums and fern. The three tiered wedding cake had separated tiers on columns and was decorated with white and yellow flowers. White satin wedding bells holding wedding

Consumer tips Fertilizer from sludge

The U. S. Department of Energy has released an article explaining the procedure of using irradiation to convert sewage sludge into fertilizer and animal feed supplements. Sandia Laboratories, at a pilot treatment plant in Mexico, is investigating this procedure.

There are approximately 5 million tons of mud-like substance, composed chiefly of solids that settle out of raw liquid sewage, are generated annually in the United States. Anyone interested in this information may obtain a copy from this office.

Federal rural grants

The United States Department of Agriculture announced on June 29 grants totaling $19.2 million classified as Rural Incentive Programs. The stated purpose of the grants is to assist rural areas in overcoming unemployment, poor housing, medical care, water facilities and other community services. Grants announced include only one for Texas. This is to be a community agency for self help in Crystal City, Texas to develop water, sewer and housing and economic improvements for low income residents in Zavala County. The amount of this grant is $26,250.

U. S. Food dollar

USDA reports that the 1978 U. S. food dollar is divided as follows: farm value 32c; labor 32c, packaging 9c, transportation 5c and others 22c. The 1973 food dollar was divided as follows: farm value 38c, labor 30c, packaging 8c, transportation 4c and others 21c. These figures do not equal $1.00, due to rounding.

Economic Policy changes

Our Economic Policy blows hot and cold.

The cycle seems unending. Government policymakers busily stoke up the fires beneath the pot--expanding the economy, creating jobs, bringing prosperity. Then, the pot boils over into inflation--driving prices skyward, shrinking the value of the dollar--and they start throwing water.

The policymakers aren't trying to put the fire out. They want to dampen it just enough to keep the pot bubbling without boiling over. But current economic policy lacks the precision of a modern kitchen range, it's more like cooking on a wood-burning stove, and the fire inevitably goes out.

We must break this hot to cold, boom to bust cycle that our economy goes through. As chairman of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress I was pleased by the recommendations our committee made in its Annual Report issued earlier this year.

The report was unusual in two respects. It was unusual, in the first place, because it was the first unified report issued by the JEC in 20 years. This was the first time in 20 years that members of the committee had issued a report as U. S. Congressmen rather than Republican Congressmen and Democratic Congressmen.

A second distinction about the 1979 JEC Report was its recommendation that this country turn away from the economic dogma of the past 40 years. Since World War II--and even before that--Policymakers have concentrated on trying to manipulate the demand side of the economy.

Economic Policy for dealing with recession has invariably called for incentives to persuade consumers to spend more money. Policy for coping with inflation tries to persuade them to spend less.

We have been an incredibly rich nation, blessed with such bountiful resources that no one has paid any attention to the supply side. It's just been assumed that if people could be talked into buying more goods, then American industry had a boundless capacity to produce whatever was needed.

The Arab oil embargo of 1973 signalled an end to that kind of thinking and the lesson has been reinforced this year by the gasoline shortages of 1979.

Under the new approach recommended by the Joint Economic Committee you fight inflation by putting more goods on the shelf, not by trying to discourage consumers from buying whatever goods are there.

The only thing you really accomplish in trying to fight inflation the old way is to bring an on bad times and throw hundreds of thousands of Americans out of work. The built-in flaws on the supply side of the economy remain, and while a job-destroying recession may force inflation down temporarily, when the economy picks up again the cost of living goes up right along with it, usually worse than before.

What are the built-in flaws? The most important one is lagging productivity, or output per manhour. The U. S. has recently done very poorly compared with other nations when it comes to money for investing in such things as modern equipment and plants. Because of this the rate of productivity growth in this country fell to .8 percent last year. By way of comparison it had been clipping along at a 3 percent a year rate in the 50s and early 60s.

I recently joined with several of my colleagues on the tax writing committees in Congress to offer legislation that will substantially boost productivity.

It's called the "10-5-3" depreciation bill. It sets new, lower, depreciation schedules of 10 years for some investments, five for others and three years for others.

Under this bill, if a company buys, say, a new $1 million weaving machine that can double the amount of cloth they make, they can receive a depreciation tax deduction for the full $1 million over five years--plus an investment tax credit--instead of spreading the depreciation over 10 years as they now have to do.

Over the long haul, year by year, this innovative tax change can mean the difference between profit and loss. It can mean the difference for this company--and for hundreds of thousands of others--between modernizing their plants and chugging along with outdated equipment.

It doesn't take a genius to figure out that this approach--and other efforts to boost investment, such as tax incentives to individuals to increase savings--will create more jobs and produce more goods; and do all that at cheaper prices too.

It's time we brought economic policy up to date.

Garbage = Electricity

Recycling municipal waste could provide up to two percent of America's energy requirements, in the form of electricity, according to the Solid and Hazardous Waste Research Division of the EPA's Municipal Pollution of air, water, and land, as well as decrease the amount of land used for shopping centers, including discarded food, paper, plastic, and metal. Recovered waste could be ground up and mixed with coal for burning, or burned directly to produce steam.

Bears turn green But it's not envy

Polar bears at the San Diego Zoo have an unusual live-in guest--green algae. These tiny spherical plants, a common freshwater variety, are not just clinging to the fur, but are actually growing inside the hollow hair shafts. Since polar bears hairs contain no pigment to block sunlight, the algae are able to continue photosynthesis, at the same time being protected from algae-eating organisms. Zoo veterinarian Phillip Robinson thinks that algae from the bears' pool entered through breaks in the tips of the hair or by canals connecting the hollows to the surface. Although the algae doesn't cause the bears any discomfort, he is brewing a salt solution to kill the plants, and make the bears white again.
