The County Fair management has guaranteed eight free trips to the State Fair at Dallas for the four winners in the girls' canning clubs and the boys' pig clubs of Donley County. These splendid organizations will exhibit at the county fair next week and it is expected that sharp competition will decide the winners of the eight trips to the State Fair.

Hon. Leo Satterwhite is launching a new publication in Amarillo, known as the Plains Stockman-Farmer. We knew Leo wouldn't rest until he was firmly astride the tripod and on account of his especial interest in the farming and stockraising industry of the great Panhandle it is not to be wondered at that he has launched a paper catering to their interests. We await the new publication with much interest.

Clarendon's Public School opening was the most auspicious in the history of the city. More pupils were enrolled the first day, and a better faculty is assembled than ever recorded before. After all the matter is not to be wondered at, for when the citizenship of any community follow the leadership of a long-headed school board, who listens to the needs of the school as presented by a superintendent alive to every interest of the school, then real progress is certain to follow. We may expect the greatest success from the standpoint of a strong, efficient public school that we have ever experienced.

Hedley's Community Fair and Free Barbecue will be held the first three days of next week in that bustling little city on the east border of Donley County. The News feels that it is not making the statement too strong, when it says that there will be no better community fair held in the Panhandle of Texas. The farmers and stockmen of that end of Donley County are numbered among the most progressive of this section of the country and their exhibits are always well worth traveling miles to see. The management of the Hedley Fair is working for their own fair first and for the County Fair at Clarendon, next, and are showing a very commendable and appreciated spirit of co-operation. Many Clarendon people plan to attend Hedley's fair and extend an invitation to the good people of that community to return their visit the last three days of the week at the County Fair held in Clarendon, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Clarendon College had a most satisfactory opening Tuesday morning. A large enrollment was taken and pupils from all parts of the Panhandle and Eastern New Mexico make up the student body. One very striking feature of the opening is the fact that according to one of the faculty, there are more boys in the dormitories than girls. This is a situation which is usually reversed and one that has for years been a source of anxiety to the nation. Clarendon College is doing a great work in this part of Texas, Western Oklahoma and Eastern New Mexico and well deserves the support of the people of its territory in a financial way as well as in patronage. Clarendon people should give the school greater thought and its problems more deep concern. There is another thing that every Clarendon citizen may do—stretch out the cheering hand to the pupils who have come into our city for either junior college education. A welcome to strangers is the mark of every coming city. You host Clarendon when you show courtesy to the stranger within our gates.

At that we ought always to give the "devil his due" according to that age-old standard of rough hewn honesty. People of West Texas and the Panhandle have for many months been rather hard on the short-sightedness of Gov. Neff in so far as the interests of this section is concerned. But Gov. Neff is becoming more proficient in Texas geography and sectional values. In the recent appropriation bill the Governor allowed every item of appropriation for the West Texas State Normal College at Canyon to stand. The bill carried a total of $204,140 for the coming year and slightly less for the following year and no shadow of the governor's blue pencil fell across its stipulated amounts. True the drafting of the bill shaved some of the salaries, but the school fared on a parity with other state institutions, and the amount stated above stands by reason of Gov. Neff's pleasure. When Gov. Neff finds time to give due attention to the wonderful possibilities of West Texas and the Panhandle then he will get a still greater vision of the most enticing part of the commonwealth over which he wields executive prerogatives.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 22-23-24, Clarendon will be host to the county and all parts of the Panhandle with the big Free County Fair. The Donley County Fair Association made up of those who have stood firmly and unflinchingly for the home and farm demonstration work projected by the government, have adhered to their policy established some time ago of providing the necessary funds in a local way, and making the fair free of all entrance fees and admission charges. The fair is free, and while the cash prizes are not as large as the members of the Fair Association would like to have them, yet it is no little honor to win the blue and red ribbons for the two best exhibits of any product in a county as famed for her high grade products as Donley County. The Fair Association is urging that every farmer and stockman, who has superior products in his special line have his exhibit in place the very first day of the fair. Besides the local prizes offered, the best will be selected to go to Dallas as part of the Donley County exhibits in the State Fair. Our county won second honors in the state fair last year and with our splendid crops this year there is small reason why Donley County should not be the first among Texas counties at Dallas this fall. Co-operation is what will be required to do this trick. Clarendon business men are putting up the money for these activities; if the farmers and stockmen will co-operate there can be nothing attained less than a signal success. Come to the Donley County Free Fair, September 22-23-24. You are welcome.

MAKE "HANDS OFF" THE MOTTO THRU GIRLHOOD

They were ex-co-eds talking over school days. "Remember how she always came in so indignantly because the boy she'd been out with tried to kiss her good night?" "Remember?" was the reminiscent reply. "It got to be such old stuff after you left that the girls had her up in sorority meeting and told her it had to stop. We told her it was her own fault, which it was. She was always the last girl to come in from the library at night, or a dance or a show. She'd linger on the porch dreamily engaged in her date until all the other girls had passed them getting in, and naturally the date thought that was what she wanted." "I don't believe she was fast, though. What did she get herself in such mix-ups for?" "No. Louise liked thrills. She'd go as far as she dared, then be terribly insulted if he showed a tendency to go a little further. She brought it on herself. She liked to be a sensation and, too, she liked for the other girls to think the fellows were mad about her. She craved popularity." "She craved popularity."—Those few words explain why most fast girls are fast. The majority aren't bad; they do not have evil thoughts; they do not personally enjoy spooning, but they think the boys demand it, and a young girl, before she knows how serious the possible consequences, would almost sell her soul—to be popular.

There is something strange and pitiful in the importance girls put on popularity. It is bred in all natural humans to be sociable, to want to be liked, but between the ages of 16 and 22 there is a special longing in most girls to be liked by the opposite sex. As the reminding ones explained, it is more out of vanity than any other cause, vanity in "showing" the other girls.

But how big the price for so fancied and so passing a glory! Often by their daring, their willfulness, they are in great danger. Not until they are women grown, with daughters perhaps of their own, do they realize how close to the brink they came. Could they but know, in their innocence, the value of keeping their persons sweet, of the cheapening efforts of familiarity, of the regret to be their in future years, how far from submitting to the modern ethics of some would they go. Mentally and morally it cheapens, personally, and in the eyes of others it cheapens; with wisdom it brings mortification and chagrin; would that it never brought more—even heart-aches and disgrace.

sweet, bright, with elastic step, it is abhorrent to think of her as touched by indiscriminate hands. In every friendly scuffle, every lingering pressure of the hand, every goodnight kiss, the bloom fades. The clutching of his arm, the adjusting of his tie, the sitting close or dancing cheek to cheek, all bring a tarnish a gradual letting down of the bars.

Such little things, some may say, the relinquishing of which stamps one as a prude, a priss.

Ah, but the girls made the seal that stamps its own, and they can't undo the harm they have done. For they are greatly mistaken if they think boys like fast girls. A few boys do, perhaps, but not the boys who are the brothers of one's girl friends, who becomes husbands of them all.

On the contrary, many boys and men flirt or attempt fast-and-loose with girls in order to find the one that won't stand for the familiarities that misguided girls permit, and turning from them marry "the girl they couldn't kiss."

Some day, when the real love comes, it will exalt the heart to go to him with a consciousness that every passer-by has not dulled, has not worn the radiance, the bloom, off the gift.

Only by making "Hands Off" one's motto through girlhood days can such exquisite and perfect happiness be known.—Nora Cole Skinner in Dallas News

GOOD WILL IN ADVERTISING

Good will is one of the greatest forces in the world and it is one of the easiest to cultivate or to destroy. In business life it is regarded as one of the chief elements in service and the executives in establishments both large and small recognize its value and make quick note of its absence.

Good will may be the result of nothing more than a smile; it may follow a cheering word, even a pleasant nod. As an example of practical intent to inspire good will, the stores which have grown sufficiently to have floor walkers expect them to meet the customers with that gracious and happy smile that says without words it is a pleasure to give service and this opportunity that has been looked for by customers met in this manner naturally have a kindly feeling for the establishment which has such employees and thus their good will has been awakened. The heads of the house have frequent opportunities to carry it further, both in their personal and written communications to the public.

Good will may be expressed in advertising in a manner that is equally pleasing and often more far reaching than any personal interview.

It is the personal touch that is conveyed by the printed page which goes into expected and unexpected places and carries the messages of end.

good will to the people that wins the good will from them and forms a basis of foundation for the success that is sure to follow.

Good will in advertising is coming to be recognized as one of the essential features in ad writing. It can only ring true with truthful advertising and therefore when expressed so that it carries conviction to the readers it is a guarantee of honesty, reliability and high business ideals. Advertising is passing through a period of evolution and steadily attaining to higher planes. More and more as it advances the elements of good will will appear in it and be carried by means of it among the people.—Ft. Worth Record.

INTERVIEW WITH THE WORLD'S RICHEST GIRL

The enterprising reporter who rushes in where angels fear to tread, lately took it upon himself to "interview" Dellora Angell, 18, heiress of John W. Gates and rated the "richest girl in the world." He found the victim of a $40,000,000 fortune vociferously discontented, declaring her "hate" of money and protesting against the burdensome gold that hangs upon her youthful shoulders. Thus far, of course, the story is not outside of the usual expectations. The real "heart feature" of Miss Angell's interview, as the eagle-eyed city editor would say, is found in the expression of her pet yearning as disclosed to the enterprising reporter. Urged to tell what she wanted above everything else in the world, what do you suppose this poor little girl answered?

"I want a little house for my very own, and no maids or servants—and a nice little kitchen stove and everything."

There it is, the instinct—as old as the sex—and as sacred as the altars of heaven. It's the normal, irrepensible impulse of a woman to "keep house," to make a home—and cook! Nature is back of it. Not only the perpetuation of the race, but its progress and its development, are wrapped up in the stified yearning of this girl whose heart's desire is thwarted by too much money.

Only a woman—a real woman—will understand the deeper meaning of that phrase about "a nice little kitchen, stove and everything." For after all, home isn't much of a home without a kitchen—with affection and intelligence to adorn it. "Careers" and "society" may call; they do call pretty insistently to too many potential wives and mothers. But the true heart of woman aspires intuitively toward a "little house for her very own, with a nice little kitchen and everything."

We'll never believe that impulse is dead or even decadent until they quit selling dolls. And regardless of the cynics, the poor little girl in the interview is not the exception, but the rule, in femininity.—Akron Times.

Miss Orville Headrick, following her attendance at the institute for public school teachers at Canyon, has gone to her position in Amarillo where she is a member of the faculty in the Junior High School.

SOLICITING

A man comes to the door soliciting funds for a home for cripple children. The housewife who answers his ring is busy. She is ironing and there is a pie in the oven, and, oh, ever so many other things on her mind; but cripple children! Of course she can't very well refuse an appeal of that kind.

But later, when a girl comes to ask donations to a hospital, and the neighbor's little boy asks her to buy tickets for the Sunday school entertainment for the benefit of some other good cause, her patience, as well as her time, begins to be exhausted. It is the same way with the man in the office, only demands upon him are apt to be heavier. After a time both the man and the woman find it easy to refuse. The canvassers call them callous. We don't think they are. It is simply that both come to the realization that if they are to give time and money to all who ask they will themselves be candidates for homes for the aged or some other philanthropic institutions for which canvassers will be asking funds.

Business and home affairs cannot be neglected without loss to the whole community; and it is undoubtedly the first duty of every individual to so provide for the future that he will not become a burden upon the philanthropic.

We think that is one interpretation of the phrase, "charity begins at home." Of course, most of us can well afford to spare a little time and money for the accredited canvassers of worthy causes without neglecting our families or ourselves. But the point is that the business of house to house soliciting has been a bit overdone, and as a result needy charities are apt to suffer, along with others that do not deserve as much consideration.—Ft. Worth Record.

COLLEGE P. T. ASSOCIATION ORGANIZED

With the commencement of the present school year, a Parents-Teachers Association for the primary department of Clarendon College was organized. Mrs. J. A. Shawver is the president, Mrs. Paul Shelton is secretary, while Mrs. H. Lott is vice-president. The times set for the meetings of the new association are the second and fourth Thursdays in each month at three o'clock.

The new association is organized as per the usual purposes of such associations, and will commence a campaign for the beautifying of the campus, and for providing better playgrounds. The members are enthusiastic, and feel that the College and the patrons alike will be greatly benefited.

REINDEER IN ALASKA

In a recent trade record review issued by the National City bank at New York much emphasis is given to the recent reindeer experiment undertaken by the United States government in Alaska, and which has proved successful even beyond anticipation. It was only a few years ago that the natives of Alaska were dependent for their animal food supply upon the whale, walrus and seal. Animal food is very essential in that cold climate and when the meat supply was reduced by the raids of the white man for the oil and skins the existence of the natives was threatened.

Following the suggestion by Dr. Sheldon Jackson, an educator who had been doing missionary work in Alaska, the government decided to introduce the reindeer which had been very useful in Siberia and Lapland. The reindeer was unknown in Alaska until 1891 when sixteen head were brought from Siberia to be followed by a hundred head in later shipments the same year. Other shipments followed until 1900 the total number of reindeer imported into Alaska from Siberia had aggregated about 1,200.

"Reindeer masters" were brought so effective have been their teaching and so well have the natives learned their lessons that the reindeer now scattered throughout Alaska numbered about 140,000, and their value is placed at between three and four million dollars. These reindeer herds not only supply the natives with meat, milk, butter and cheese, but the owners are now able to spare large quantities for the white population of Alaska and limited quantities for shipment to the Pacific coast cities and thence to the big trade centers of the country so that at times in the year reindeer steaks may be had in the markets of large cities as far east as the Atlantic coast.

The special value of this reindeer enterprise in Alaska, according to the bank interview, was found in the fact that it turned into food form a natural growth that had not formerly been utilized, and at the same time encouraged a fixed habitation and a domestication of industry on the part of the population formerly nomadic because of its dependence upon the ocean's frontage for its supply of animal foods. The reindeer thrives upon the formerly unutilized mosses and lichens of the Arctic "tundra," which is dug from beneath the snow in winter. The reindeer serves not only as a food supply but also as a draft and pack animal in transporting mails and merchandise and the skins furnish clothing and shelter for the natives.

There is a vast amount of room in the frozen North for the reindeer to increase many fold and it is not unlikely that within the next decade there will be several millions of them in Alaska and throughout all of the cold stretches of North America. The importation of sixteen original reindeer may prove to be the foundation for a new source of wealth in a country which has heretofore been almost unknown and they may lead to the development of that country so that it shall become populated and in fact prove a pioneer field for the progressive people who are seeking new homes.—Ft. Worth Record.

AMERICAN COLONIAL POLICY

For one national talent at least the United States has reason to congratulate itself. We have the talent of colonization. No nation of history has been more successful than we in building up and holding new states. In one way our western territories have been considered colonies.

They were states in preparation and, even in the colonial stage, were given representation in our national body. As soon as possible they are incorporated in our nation and are colonies no longer. The same progressive policy, though with different ends, is manifested in our national attitude toward the more remote possessions of the Philippine islands. Here the objective is autonomy but the autonomy, like statehood, must come through growth and development in the inhabitants themselves of the ability to stand alone.

Current thought in regard to the Philippines is confirmed by Bishop Brent, for many years bishop of the Philippines, and now of the diocese of western New York. He expressed the belief the other day that when complete autonomy comes to these Pacific islands, it will come through "mutual understanding between the United States and the Filipinos themselves." There is no place in our colonial policy for a revolution for independence and no need of it. It is simply a policy of progress, of aiding the development of true internal independence and when that has come of recognizing it.

Fortunately for the independence of the Philippines they are now governed by a man who is in complete accord with American colonial ideals, and will lead the islanders along the road that leads to real autonomy.—Ft. Worth Record.

RED CROSS NUHEALTH

Trachoma

Trachoma is a disease old as the Bible, yet it has been known in the United States only a matter of 20 odd years, having been brought into this country by infected immigrants from Syria, Armenia, and other countries near Turkey.

The disease is highly contagious and is seldom cured although cure is not impossible. It manifests itself for a long time, giving a granulated appearance to the eyelids. So serious are the consequences of this malady that it is classified by the Department of Immigration as one of the "loathsome and dangerous contagious diseases."

A fine of $100 is inflicted on all steamships who bring an immigrant into this country infected with it and the victims are not allowed to land.

In the preliminary stages of the disease there is comparatively little suffering. The constant friction of the eyelid against the eye ball soon carries the disease to the eye and the real suffering sets in with the beginning of the destruction of sight. Surgical treatment does much to check its progress.

Persons with trachoma should instantly be excluded from schools of all kinds as soon as the infection is discovered and from all gatherings where they may be in close contact with other persons.

The disease is most frequent in persons under 18 years of age and thrives in congested districts. A physician should be consulted as soon as the first evidence of suspicious symptoms appears.

ENTANGLING ALLIANCES

The Clarendon News' Americanization series

Washington refused to be a candidate for a third term of the presidency; and, in May, 1796, he set to Hamilton a rough draft of his farewell address, asking for his criticism. After much revision by both, the document was published September 19th, and was read to the House of Representatives. The advice contained in it has ever since exercised a profound influence on the policy of the nation. Washington says in part:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificialities in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships, or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected. When belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

'Tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies. Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish, that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit; some occasional good, that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism, this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude of your welfare, by which they have been dictated.

TURN THE BLOWER ON FIRST
Turn the machine blower on and leave it on for at least two minutes before anyone is permitted to enter a partly filled silo. Unless this rule is followed the result is likely to be dead men says the United States Department of agriculture.

Annually fatalities occur among farmers and their helpers as a result of the workmen entering half-filled silos after the deadly carbon monoxide gases have had a chance to accumulate directly above the freshly ensiled corn. A few days ago two Illinois farmers were killed and another rendered seriously sick by silo gases which are almost as dangerous as the poisonous mustard gas used during the recent war.

In this instance one of the farm workmen entered a 50-foot silo which had been half filled the previous day. Some time elapsed and when he did not come out, another of the hands ascended into the silo. Neither reappeared though the other workers shouted to them repeatedly to come down.

Fearing an accident the farm owner finally climbed into the silo. He also was immediately overcome by the poisonous fumes and only forced open the extra silo doors and carried him into the open air saved his life. The two other men were suffocated immediately.

Each year a number of accidents of this kind occur, due largely to carelessness and ignorance of the proper methods of eradicating the dangerous gases. The preventive measures are simple and efficient and where they are followed, there is no danger.

No workman should ever enter a partly filled silo, after the ensiled corn has had an opportunity to develop poisonous carbon monoxide gases over night until the machine blower has been started. The fresh air dilutes and scatters the obnoxious gases rendered harmless. After the silo has been operated for two minutes it is perfectly safe for the workmen to enter. Another precaution which should be practiced religiously is not to wedge the silo doors into place until they are needed to prevent the waste of the ensiled corn. Many farmers follow the practice of placing most of the corn before any great amount of corn is cut and deposited in the silo. This prevents free circulation of air through the silo which operates to favor the accumulation of carbon monoxide and other deadly silo gases.

Miss Lillian Steed, of Groom, has returned to this city and is attending the high school where she is a senior. She is making her home in the Sam Lowe home.

RUSSIANS READ POSTERS IN LIEU OF NEWSPAPERS

It has been a long time "now" since any Russian sat at breakfast buried behind his daily newspaper. The only way he can get any idea of the news is to go out on the street and read the papers posted on the walls.

And the papers so posted are really nothing but official bulletins. Not a single human interest story every appears.

Murder, scandal, society, baseball, humorous cartoons simply have no place. Theatre notices appear, but an actress might see her husband for divorce, or shoot him because she is jealous and she will not get a line.

If all of the people die of typhus or hunger or cold, there will be a short paragraph of statistics—nothing more.

News from the front and developments of relations with foreign countries are the only subjects that are given space for full informative news. And curious and inconsistent and typically Russian is the fact that in these official sheets, called by the grace of the soviets, daily newspapers, always appear poetry.

This poetry is usually the verse of some soldier or peasant about some burning question of the day.

For example, during the Kolchak and Denikin days these generals vilified in the press daily in crude songs.

In Moscow there are three papers: the Pravda, Izvestia and the Economic magazine. This last is a weekly and is only for use in the office. Government officials are also supplied with the dailies. All these are Bolshevik papers.

All opposition papers were suppressed about the time of the terror. I heard of one or two Menshevik papers being published legally, but I did not see any. There are a number of magazines, but owing to the great shortage of paper these do not come out periodically.

I saw several very creditable theatre magazines and a number of red army papers. The army magazine correspond a good deal to our army papers and were very cleverly illustrated. As soon as the interventionists were defeated, most of these went out of existence.

Russian newspapers are not very interesting to look at or exciting to read. There isn't a single advertisement and there are always statements from the various government department and political arguments.

In the provinces there are no daily papers. Local papers are printed whenever there is enough material. Decrees are posted on the walls and Moscow papers are sent to the main cities and villages.

In 1917 most of the peasants could not read, but there were schools back of the lines, so that the majority can read today, but it is no uncommon sight to see one soldier reading to a crowd of other soldiers, or to see one peasant reading to other peasants.

Books and posters are all printed in the government printing plant. Gorki has charge of the whole department. He had wonderful plans and really did print thousands of classics which were to be distributed to every household, but, naturally, the paper shortage prevented the carrying out of his dream.

But Lunacharsky and Gorki encourage the work of new authors, but the soviet scheme in this respect does not work out very well. An author is an artist with an artist's temperament and he feels a dwarfing of his individuality in handing over his book to the government. New plays and poetry appeared in the art and theater magazines.

Lack of news has a depressing effect. In spite of the fact that around the foreign offices one caught more or less the pulse of the outside world, to be anywhere in Russia without regular newspapers soon gives one the feeling of being entirely out of touch. In the provinces and most of the towns people are truly shut out of the towns, people are truly shut out from Europe and America.—Ft. Worth Record.

AT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Both services at the Christian Church will be conducted by the pastor on next Sunday. The morning service will begin at 10:50 and the subject will be: "Reasonableness." At the evening service 7:30 he will use for his subject "The Woman with Wings." Don't forget that this is one of the series of sermons being preached and in which so many have expressed themselves as very much interested. This will be the most interesting of the series yet preached and no one can afford to miss it. The pastor has given much thought to this message and it will be worth hearing. A good crowd heard the message last Sunday evening though it was a rainy evening and the house is expected to be well filled at the evening service Sunday. Strangers are always welcomed to any and every service. Those who want to hear a message that will build them up and help them walk close to God should not fail to hear this sermon. Remember the time for evening service is thirty minutes earlier than before.

NOTES FROM THE CHURCH OF CHRIST

Verily the Lord is blessing our work in this field. Our labors with this great-hearted people seem to be appreciated. On every hand there are evidences of the faith that works by love. To draw the line between the world and the church is very necessary these days. Many souls are hungering and thirsting for a purer religion, a "closer walk with God." Our meeting at Lella Lake at this writing is still growing in interest. Thirteen have been baptised and five restored to their first love. This meeting will continue over next Lord's day. On account of the conversion and the consequent baptism of Dick Allen's mother, there will be a service at the Church of Christ in Clarendon Wednesday at 4 p. m.

We will conduct a series of meetings in Clarendon at the close of the Methodist revival. We greatly desire to contribute our part to the moral and spiritual uplift of our town. It is not likely that people learn too much Bible, or become to spiritually minded. Prove all things and hold fast to that which is good.

Thos. E. Milholland.
