DAVIS—Mrs. Louisa Caldora Davis, 73, daughter of Welcome Williams Chandler, credited with being the first settler of Brown county and its first county judge, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. Baker, in the Salt Creek community, Friday night, October 27. Mrs. Davis had been ill for more than a year, but her condition was not serious until a week ago. Mrs. Davis was a native of Brown county, having been born February 1, 1860. She had lived in the county all of her life. She was widely known as a member of one of the earliest pioneer families of Brown county, and her passing caused grief among her host of friends. Her parents came to what is now Brown county in 1856, and about a year later built a log cabin near the Pecan Bayou, on what now is the Lucas pecan orchard. This is credited with being the first home built in Brown county. Brown county was organized in 1858, and Mr. Chandler was elected the first county judge. The election was held in the Chandler home, and shortly after the organization and election, the first Brown county court house was built near the Chandler homestead. Brownwood's first postoffice was established in the Chandler home, with Miss Jane Chandler as postmistress. Judge Chandler was probably the best known of the early settlers, and many stories have been published about his achievements during the early days of the county. He died in 1870, and Mrs. Chandler died in 1892. Mrs. Davis was married in 1880 to W. T. Davis, who preceded her in death some eleven years. She had been a faithful member of the Church of Christ for more than 50 years. Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon, October 28, at Staley cemetery, with Rev. John Odall of Rising Star officiating. Interment was made at Rising Star. White & London Funeral Home had charge of arrangements.

Surviving Mrs. Davis are three sons, W. F. Davis of New Mexico, R. V. Davis and Neal Davis of Brownwood; three daughters, Mrs. John F. O'Reilly of Bellingham, Washington, Mrs. A. Baker, of Salt Creek Community and Mrs. F. H. Flowers of Brownwood. She also is survived by the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Ella Star-

Came the sad day when Oscar was fired. The porter at the Hotel Barbary had been caught trying to pocket a letter from Annie. Naturally, the manager of the hotel retrieved the letter and fired Oscar. Annie, desperate, had made an assault on the hotel, in an effort to get the letter, which was addressed "E. Worthington Manville," "No "E. Worthington Manville" being known at the place, the letter was just being returned to its sender in far-off Spain, when Annie, through sheer luck, managed to get it back. Annie left the fringe manager and weaved her way into the crowd on the sidewalk. Anxiously she ripped open the letter, and regardless of the pedestrians who peered at her, she read. For a few moments a warm glow enveloped her face. Then, slowly, it was replaced by a look of fear which grew as she read on:

"So by the time," Annie read, "you receive this I will be well on my way to New York. Carlos' father, Count Romero, is coming with us. He wants to meet you, before he consents to the marriage. Why, isn't it? But that's the way they are over here. Very strict. I'm so awfully, awfully happy. Mother, Carlos is a darling—and I'm mad about him. I know what a pleasant surprise Count Romero has planned for him when he meets my lovely mother. When he sees me so socially prominent you are, I'm so thrilled at the thought of seeing you, I simply can't sit still."

Shakespeare interrupted. "Yeah—that's it. There ain't no pan-handlers on Broadway."
"What!" The Dude almost roared.

Shakespeare shook his head, mystified. "Hope my mother croaks if that ain't the truth—I walked all over town for hours. There ain't a beggar on the streets. Gee, the town looks funny."
"I suppose," the Dude bellowed, "they've all gone to Europe for their vacations."
Shakespeare gulped. "Search me. The thing's got me scared. The town's like a morgue."
The Japanese servant entered. "Man here to see you. He name Schultzzy."
"Schultzzy? A blind man?" asked the Dude.
"Yes. He no can see."
"Bring him in." The Dude turned to Shakespeare. "They're not around, huh? You better get that dizzy blonde off your mind."
"Aw," Shakespeare sulked. "I don't think about her in the daytime."
The door opened and blind Schultzzy came in, tapping his cane before him.
"Hello, Schult—" The Dude's cheerful greeting died in his throat and he started in amazement at the picture that unrolled before his eyes. A parade of panhandlers of every known variety and specie of beggar trailed behind Schultzzy. Some hobbled in on peglegs, others on crutches—the last, Smiley, rolled in on a little board fitted with wheels.
Dude, Happy and Shakespeare stared at the odd parade scattered around the room. Smiley finally broke the silence.
"Hello, Dude."
Dude found his voice. "What do you mugs want?"
"It's about Annie," answered Schultzzy.
"What about Annie? I been looking all over town fer her," said the Dude.
"She's in an awful jam," an old woman replied.

"MY ROOM" BEFORE AND AFTER
By Mildred Page, Bedroom Demonstrator, for the Winchell 4-H Club

Lots of people would have called it a hopeless task to make over my room if they had seen it as Miss Malone first saw it. But after her encouragement we have made it into a room of which I am proud now, and thanks to her.
First we tore off the old ragged dirty wall paper one Saturday while I was at home to help. Even the clean canvas looked better. The next Saturday we went to town and bought the paper and paint which cost $2.55. The doors and windows and ceiling had never been painted and we had no base board. These we added and painted all ivory as the paper is light with a very delicate tinted small flower.

It happened when Mrs. Jessie Costello, a fellow revivalist, accidentally barked her shin. It bothered her considerably—until Sister Aimee brought her to the platform and administered to her in prayer, as shown in this scene.

Legislators Poke Fun At Income Query

AUSTIN—If the questionnaires which legislators recently answered, as to their salaries from other sources, produced nothing else, it produced plenty of samples of legislative wit.
The questionnaires were supposed to show names of any corporations from which members had accepted fees since taking their oaths of office; membership in organizations which seek or foster legislation, and relationship with persons now employed in any branch of the government.
While many members answered the questionnaires straightforwardly, many another took the occasion for wisecracks. Samples were:
Bob Alexander of Childress reported he had a first cousin who works for the highway department "who does not speak to me because I cut his salary."
No Occupations
Lon Alsop of Carthage assumes that mothers-in-law are relatives, and reports that his is a county superintendent of schools.
In the space on the questionnaire asking the legislator's occupation in private life, Bullock Hyder of Lewisville wrote "none," and Harold Kayton of San Antonio, "unemployed." Traylor Russell of Mt. Pleasant also listed his occupation as "none."
Joe Greathouse of Fort Worth has taken retainers from corporations as an attorney, and "I shall continue to do so or I will have no visible means of support and become a subject to vagrancy prosecution."
Harold Hankamer of Fort Worth said he didn't know of any relatives on other state or county jobs but "the woods are full of my relatives and I am not my brother's keeper."
The only member who reported turning down fees since taking the oath of office was George Butler of Bryan.
Representative Sam Duvall of Hallettsville had no relatives on state jobs "at this time."
As a lodge or organization which "seeks or fosters legislative action" Representative T. H. McGregor lists his membership in the Democratic party.
He's Not Sure
George Moffett of Chillicothe was not sure what was meant by relatives "of the third degree of consanguinity or affinity," but thought he had none such on payrolls.
Harley Morrison of Terrell offered the ex parte observation that it wasn't likely he ever would need an expert to figure his income tax.
W. E. Pope in the line dedicated to corporations paying him retainers since he took the oath, wrote: "None; I have offered, but have no takers."
Dennis P. Ratliff of Haskell comes from a large family and wasn't sure about his relatives: "my father has nine brothers and sisters; my mother, 13 brothers and sisters, and I have 10 brothers and sisters."
Regarding his retainers, Representative we did it, because the result is entirely satisfactory and the expense was small; to be exact, we will list the items and prices:

representative T. J. Renfro, newlywed of Fort Worth, answered, "Much to my chagrin and regret I must through necessity, answer 'none.'" W. T. Savage of Dallas, was the only member listing legislating as an occupation. He listed "lawyer-legislator."
One member listed the Presbyterian church among "affiliations interested in legislation."

Ordered long enough ago to give you this low price. These Winter O'coats

14.75 and 19.75

It was a cold day last February when we placed our advance orders for these coats to be made up in the slack season. They were marvelous values then.

Today, we own these coats without any advance whatsoever . . . and instead of charging today's price . . . we're out to make additional friends.

You'll be interested the minute you see these coats . . . if you are interested in a new coat this year . . . and the more you've been around and know the ropes about o'coats, the less our salesman will have to say.

What are the Instructions of Your Family Doctor?

Repeat the Dosage

Repeated dosing for relief from parasites in the animal is just as necessary as repeated dosing for human illness.

Prepare your sheep and goats for the cold weather ahead. Help them to withstand the winter weather and produce an increase in wool, mohair, lambs and kids.

You still have time for two dosings before winter.

Repeated dosing with ARSATE is safe, economical, and effective. ARSATE rids the animals of parasites, builds blood, aids digestion, and makes a better animal.
