For He's a Jolly Good Father

In our permissive society, the role of father is more important than ever. Juvenile authorities tell us that 99 percent of the time, a child becomes delinquent only after the father has relinquished his role. The father must be head of the family, just as the mother is the heart.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the importance of a father in raising children. Christ set the example. He taught us to refer to the First Person of the Trinity as "God the Father." When the Apostles asked Jesus how to pray, He taught them to call God "Our Father."

The father must exercise his role as head of the house, not turn it over to the mother by default. He is not just a good provider. He must be much more. He must provide spiritually as well as materially. He must strengthen children's character by not giving them too many things. He must help them to grow by rearing them in the school of hard knocks. He must not deny them the struggles that enables him to succeed.

The generation gap between parent and children becomes a problem only when the father tries to be a pal instead of a parent. Children pal with one another, but they look to their parents for guidance and example. The fathers we honor today are those who provide both.

By leading his children along the path of virtue, a father creates goodness that will continue for many generations. The influence of such a father will continue long after he has gone to his reward.

Truer Words Never Spoken

Most of the young fellows graduating from college are up tight about Vietnam. They don't want any part of it. They are isolationists and against the draft. They don't want the government "gambling with their lives."

Vietnam overshadows everything else. Everything. The draft has a history of being unpopular, but at least the people of my vintage recognized its necessity. We groused about the way the draft was administered and who administered it, but we knew we needed it, an army to fight Hitler and we figured we had better fight his troops and those of the Japanese on foreign soil. It was that or on our own shores.

There is every evidence that Ivan is an imperialistic bully. He is going to take everything he can get, but too many young Americans won't, or don't recognize that they have a future and a way of life worth defending.

War is stupid, but it is better than being enslaved.

If You Don't Owe For Income Tax Get Form W-4E

If you are a student who is working during the summer and you will not earn enough to owe any income tax ($1700), it's not too late to go back and talk to your payroll office about completing a Form W-4E. The "E" stands for exemption.

A recent change in the tax law allows your employer to let you take home all your pay under these circumstances. The new law allows your employer to stop withholding on students who will not earn enough to owe any income tax. It also saves the government the trouble of sending you an income tax refund next January or February.

It pays to advertise with the Muenster Enterprise.

The 3 Targets of Leftist Films

"Cotton Comes to Harlem" is a film which not only glorifies sex and violence, but also takes a rather nasty poke at Christians. It is quite logical that the proponents of the sexual and leftist revolutions should be anti-Christian. Both the Jewish and Christian religions condemn promiscuity and violence, and demand respect for the person and property of others.

M.A.S.H. is another of those anti-establishment films which indulges in ridiculing Christianity. The only establishment that is immune to the mockery of the leftist filmmakers is the Marxist establishment.

The Church, the army and the family correspond to our belief in God, country, and matrimony. They correspond to our ideal of fidelity to our Creator, our people, and our dear ones. Western civilization has been built on this ideal. These three institutions, whenever strong, impede the spread of Communism. It is not surprising, therefore, that leftist films propagandize against the Church, the army, and the family. The three are generally lumped together for ridicule.

"For God and Country" is an anti-war film whose title indicates its primary targets. Anti-war films are generally anti-religion and anti-family films. They assume that we should not be free to defend those beliefs and values which mean the most to us: God, nation, and family. In their place, the leftist ideologist wishes to substitute the State, at least his idea of the State: one that will make all our decisions for us and determine what we are to believe and not believe.

There is no difficulty in recognizing a leftist film. The propaganda is never subtle. It is always the same. It always attacks the threefold foundation of western morality and civilization, with the hope of paving the way for the barbarian invasions of the East, the Communist East.

To call a film an "anti-war" film is really a misnomer. This type of film is really anti-freedom, anti-patriotism, and anti-homeland. It condemns anyone who thinks he has the right to defend his freedom in a western democracy. It is funny that there are no anti-war films criticizing the Russian oppression of Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Berlin and the Jews. It is only western democracies that have no right to defend themselves. Leftists approve a certain type of war: the ones that serve them.

High Morale Notwithstanding

"Who is number one in women, in food, in scenery?" asked a recent Gallup Poll survey. In all three cases, Americans chose America. Despite the media's addiction to presenting the worst in American life, the average American still believes that his country is number one in many of the basics of human life.

Gallup Polls are a good corrective for the pessimism of the news media. The polls generally show how little the media express the values and spirit of the majority of Americans. For example, who would have believed on the basis of daily news coverage that President Nixon, Vice President Agnew and Billy Graham would turn out in a Gallup Poll survey to be the three most popular Americans?

American morale is not reflected by the national media. It is much higher than the networks would lead us to believe. Nor are American values as few and morals as low as the media present them.

There is a serious gap between the American people and those who control the media. The latter seem intent on demoralizing those whom they should be serving. The vast majority of Americans believe in God, family and country. Very few Americans want to see the media attack these values through the promotion of the sexual and leftist revolutions.

The morale of the masses who daily build America is high. Polls often indicate this. The same masses rightfully expect the media to report the truth of their basic optimism and beliefs. People resent a minority's manipulation of news media for endless anti-government propaganda. We freely elected our government and we feel our values are represented by that government. Let's stop downgrading ourselves.

No Time For Nonsense

A lot of knowledge about human nature can be picked up by a judge sitting on the bench. Federal Judge Simon Rifkind has something important to tell us about the right versus the wrong way to improve society: "We are told to listen to the young, that they have an important message to deliver and I heartily agree. Everywhere I meet young people who are earnest, intelligent, well-informed, thoughtful. . . . But in not a single instance have I encountered such positive performance from the exhibitionists, the impudent loud-mouths, the stone-throwers and the window-smashers."

"The nonsense that I believe can and should be stopped includes these notions: The proposition that the way to improve the human condition is to extirpate all of the operating institutions of society. . . . That force and violence are appropriate means by which to accomplish the restructuring of our universities. . . . That the right of dissent includes the right to shout down and drown out the voice of those with whom you disagree.

"That the life of the scavenger pignon is appropriate for civilized human beings, i.e., to sleep where you pause, to feed on the bread others have labored to produce, and to practice none of the arts of civilization except self-indulgence.

"That sexual morality, family integrity, and responsibility for child-rearing are obsolete vestiges of a repressive society, no longer relevant to modern life. . . . That public decisions should be taken, not by the constitutional organs of a democratic government, but by reference to a community sentiment as determined and expressed by self-appointed oracles. . . .

"I do not believe that the way to paradise is through the jungle of Hippieland; I do not believe that a free society is achieved by drowning our disagreement; I do not believe that an open society can be achieved by self-segregation."
 — U. S. Press Assn.

Good Citizenship

A top business leader has called upon businessmen to stand up and be counted and to re-affirm their belief in free enterprise. A portion of his remarks went far beyond the narrow field of business when he said, "Many observers have noted the recent growth of a group of critics who have launched, and have pressed, an assault on the reputation of America. . . . The damage they do is greatest among our young, who are no longer even given the time to judge our system by their own experience. Instead, their ideals are aborted, at an age and often in a place — in our schools — where ideals ought to be instilled rather than destroyed."

"The current disparagement of America holds many ironies. One is that the country is criticized for the relatively narrow area of shortcomings without credit for the broad range of achievement. The nation is credited less with a superior system of public higher education than it is criticized for not making it freely available to all, even the unqualified. The nation is credited less with an incomparable transportation system than it is faulted for its traffic jams. The nation is credited less with having two thirds of its families own their own homes than it is condemned for its slums. . . . some who criticize our system would substitute other systems that have fallen far short of ours."

Much of today's criticism is aimed not at improving American institutions but at destroying America. Businessmen who perceive the trend have an obligation to speak up. Their obligation is not merely a matter of good business, but a matter of good citizenship.

Housing a Nation

A natural resource — even a renewable natural resource such as timber — might as well be located on the moon so far as utilization is concerned, unless it can be brought to market in a form that people need and at a price people can pay.

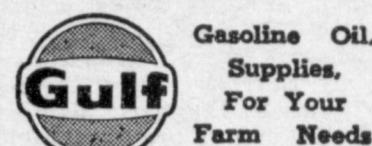

A leading authority in the timber business made this point clear as he reviewed the operations of the wood products industry.

Major producers of wood products not only must work to achieve maximum sustained-yield timber harvesting operations on the 16 percent of U. S. timberlands owned by industry but also must work to meet long-term production needs. This is no small task. The authority expressed fear that a sudden upsurge in demand could result in undesirable price escalation. His company is taking steps to avoid this contingency. It is increasing its 1971 lumber production by 11 percent over 1970 levels, and the authority states, "We are making capital investments of $248 million in logging, forest management, improvement to existing mills and construction of new mills in 1970-71 to meet increased demand." The nation is growing about 12 percent more wood that it is cutting each year, due in large part to the timber growing operations of the larger companies. This particular company, its spokesman noted, has adopted advanced forest management practices to its 5.6 million acres of commercial forest lands. These practices are increasing tree growth up to one third more than natural growth.

No one can calculate the stabilizing influence on construction costs of the far-sighted managements of timber companies who know only too well that an abundant supply of wood products at stable prices is a greater national necessity than ever before as home requirements soar.

Leonard Hackers, Newlyweds, Make Valley View Home

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard James Hacker are making their home on a dairy farm at Valley View since returning from their honeymoon trip to Corpus Christi.

The bride was Miss Patsy Jo Luttmmer before her marriage on June 12 in St. Mary's Church, Gainesville. She is the daughter of Mrs. Leonard Luttmmer and the late Mr. Luttmmer and the bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Martin Hacker, all of Valley View.

Father Anthony Gajda, pastor of St. John's Church, Valley View, celebrated the Nuptial Mass at 5 p.m. and performed the double ring ceremony.

Joe Luttmmer of Gainesville presented his niece at the altar. She wore a gown of white satin-faced organza combined with Venise lace. Empire lines featured a sheer square yoke edged in lace with full bishop sleeves caught to wide cuffs edged in lace. The slimline skirt had a cluster of fullness toward the back and unfolded to a full cathedral train enhanced with three rows of the lace. Her circular veil with lace edging fell from a pearl crown. She carried a bouquet of white sweetheart roses around a purple-throated orchid.

Mrs. Danay Clifton of Kalamazoo, Mich., was her sister's matron of honor and another sister, Miss Sandra Luttmmer, and Miss Debbie Maniss were bridesmaids. Valarie Heintzman of Pilot Point was junior bridesmaid. They wore formal length orchid gowns designed with lace bodices, short nylon sleeves and bonded crepe skirts with trains. Purple velvet ribbon accented the high wastlines. Each carried three orchids.

Tammy Clifton of Kalamazoo, niece of the bride, was flower girl wearing a white floor-length dress of organza and taffeta. She carried a white basket or orchid and white roses.

Glenn Hacker was his brother's best man and Wallace Hacker, another brother and Jimmy Prescher, a cousin, were groomsmen. Interest Grows in Freeze Branding in Cooke County

by Neil Tibbets

Recently considerable interest has arisen in freeze branding of cattle.

Freeze branding is a technique whereby a branding iron is chilled to an extremely low temperature and placed on an animal's skin for 35-60 seconds. The result is regrowth of white hair in the area of the brand, contrasting with the remaining coat color on dark animals. For white colored animals the iron is left on an additional period of time. This destroys the hair follicles. The hair comes out leaving a clean sharp hairless brand with no damage to the hide.

The freeze brand is painless. It does not damage the hide and there is no ruined portion that must be cut out when tanned for leather as is necessary with the fire brand.

A satisfactory means of identification of cattle has long been a problem. It is difficult to keep records on the Beef herd without some system of identification. The freeze brand is easy to read from a distance at any time.

Different materials may be used to cool the branding iron. Best results have been obtained by Cooke Countymen by using dry ice and alcohol. The iron should be held on the skin for 60 seconds. A heavy copper iron conducts the temperature better than the normal branding iron. The Cooke County Beef Cattle Improvement Association purchased a set of the irons to be used by the members.

A Styrofoam ice chest does a good job as a container for the dry ice and alcohol for cooling the irons. The irons will cause the alcohol to bubble when placed inside. When the bubbles slow down the irons are cold enough for branding. The area to be branded should be clipped and moistened with the alcohol. Clip the area as close as possible.

Most alcohols will work and do a good job but they must be at least 95%. Alcohols that contain less than 95% will get musky when the dry ice is applied and will not get the irons cold enough.

Cooke County ranchers have branded more than 1,000 animals in the past 12 months with the freeze brand method. The technique has been developed and good success can be obtained.

New Federal Law On Tire Safety Becomes Effective

The Chairman of the Tire Industry Safety Council today urged all motorists, tire dealers and distributors to familiarize themselves with the new tire identification and record keeping system and help make it work for safety's sake.

"The system is designed to give added safety benefits to the tire buyer," said Ross R. Ormsby, Chairman of the Council. "In the unlikely event that a defect is discovered later in a certain lot of tires, the manufacturer will be able to notify everyone who bought one of those tires."

The new system of tire identification and record keeping went into effect May 22, under federal law. All tires manufactured after that date must carry a new type serial number which identifies the manufacturing plant, the tire size and type, and the week of manufacture.

The tire retailer is required by law to record the name and address of the person who buys each such tire, along with the new serial number, and return it to the manufacturer. The manufacturer then stores the information for later use, if necessary.

"The full cooperation of everyone in the chain of distribution is absolutely essential to make the system work," Ormsby said. "A great deal of expense and some inconvenience is involved, but it is the law."

The manufacturers have set up elaborate and costly programs, usually with computer help, to handle the huge volume of record keeping. The U.S. industry produces about 200,000,000 passenger car tires a year. Only a very tiny fraction of them have been involved in safety defect investigations.

Record keeping is not required by law for tires manufactured before May 22. As a result, registered and unregistered tires may be sold side by side for some months.

The new serial number will appear on the sidewall of the tire, near the rim of the wheel. It might look like this: DOT WYL9 ABC261.

"DOT" means the tire meets or exceeds Department of Transportation safety standards. "WY" is the code number assigned by DOT to the manufacturing plant. "L9" is the tire size, in this case G78-14. "ABC" is a group of up to four symbols, optional with the manufacturer, to identify the brand or other significant characteristics of the tire. "261" means the tire was made during the 26th week of 1971.

The Tire Industry Safety Council is made-up of all U.S. manufacturers of passenger tires.
