Shortly after this plcture was taken of President Roosevelt shaking hands and having a good laugh with a Union and a Confederate Civil War veteran at the site of the battle of Antietam, the chief executive lashed out at dictatorship in a militant Constitution Day speech. He said the Supreme Court must co-operate with Congress and the President if constitutional democratic government is to be saved from the challenge of dictatorship. Chatting with Mr. Roosevelt as the above picture was taken are Corp. Basil Lemley, left, 94-year-old former Union trooper, and Capt. Robert E. Miles, right, 98-year-old former Confederate officer, his mouth open wide in cackling laughter at a bit of Roosevelt humor. The ceremony near Sharpsburg, Md., commemorated the 75th anniversary of the battle of Antietam, bloodiest in the Civil War.

REAL ESTATE

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace outlined a six-point administration policy for a system of permanent cotton control legislation this week at a national meeting of farmers in Memphis. Tennessee

Approximately 3,000 cotton planters, Agricultural Adjustment Administration officials and repreentatives of nine cotton-producing tates heard the secretary strike "middle of the road" policy between unrestricted acreage and a drastic reduction program.

Secretary Wallace hinted at a revival of the processing tax-invalidated in January, 1933, by the U. S. Supreme Court-as "perhaps" a method of making up "for the handicap that the tariff imposes on the South."

"For a full century the cotton producing South has suffered a handicap from the protective tariff policy which the industrial interests of the North and East have imposed upon it." Wallace said. . Since the tariff is so deeply rooted in our economic system ... to eliminate it is a practical impossibility."

The secretary said the administration-approved program to alleviate depressed social and economconditions of the South would rovide:

While signing of the contract between the City of Brownwood and Brown County Water Improvement District for sale of water by the district to the city does not in itself mean that the district's it-

rigation system will be completed, it is the most welcome news

offices in many months. It opens the way for development of the project, and it gives assurance of a spirit of cooperation between the two groups representing the residents of the district which gives promise that the problems lacing, the two will be worked out satisfactorily.

As a matter of fact, it is imperative that the water district's problems be worked out, and that through cooperative effort the water district is enabled to accept the Federal government's offer of $450,000 in a direct grant to complete the irrigation system. The offer is such that the people of this section cannot afford to pass it up, and it comes at a time when apparently this offers the only route by which the primary and only profitable purpose of the lake can be fulfilled for those who financed its construction-the completion of the irrigation system.

The contract itself is fair one, both to the city and to the district. The city needs the water; the district has it. Of course, it would be possible for the city to continue to use water from the Pecan Bayou, and in that light no emergency existed on the part of the city. However, the present water system is inadequat, and the cost of bringing it up to date and making it useful to the people of Brownwood is such that the district's offer to supply water for $25,000 a year becomes a very attractive one.

Approval of the contract by the voters, necessary to its completion, should be forthcoming. It is Brownwood's opportunity to lift itself out of the rut and take its place as one of the progressive cities of West Texas. Failure to grasp the opportunity would be a most serious blow to property values here; is would be the hard way to build a city. ONTRA LATZ

"The average Texas cotton crop covers about 12,000,-000 acres and provides a livelihood for more people than any other one Texas industry. It is the most valuable crop grown in Texas, and the greatest single crop grown in any one State. The total 1936 Texas cotton crop was valued at $217,018,000.

"But cotton raising is just one of the many big Texas industries. Livestock brought $235,000,000 to Texas last year; oil, matural gas and other minerals, $580,000,000; fruits, nuts and vegetables, over $33,000,000. Compared to the toads of a generation ago, modern highways are marvels of excellence. Yet, in spite of this phenomenal development, today's system is woefully inadequate, as Frank T. Sheets Highways of points out in an article in Public Safety. 'Progressive strides have been taken and must continue to be taken in driver education and providing safety regulation for vehicles," says Mr. Sheets, "but the ultimate in traffic convenience and safety will not be reached until we actually provide adequate 10 highways and build safety into them." Today's engineers have designed tomorrow's highways.

These magnificent roads will include terminal facilities in cities whereby traffic will move to various points with a minimum of congestion; main super highways of many lanes, with divisions in the center to prevent head-on collisions, will carry cross-country traffic, avoiding congested, areas enroute; intermediate highways will serve local tralfic needs; even the lowest grade, little-used roads will be given some cheap form of all-weather surface; arterial urban streets will carry into and through cities and towns that part of rural main trunk traffic which has business in the metropolitan area.

This seems a far off ideal, but not long ago, the automobile, the radio, the airplane, the telephone seemed s too. The cost of developing highways and streets of maximum safety on a national scale, will be tremendous-but it will be spent over a long period of time and no form of expenditure by government can better serve the people. Better highways are not a cure-all for the accident-problem -but when we develop our roads to the point where the chance of accidents is reduced to a minimum, a long step toward lowering our ghastly annual toll of deaths will be taken.

15.000 Horses In Panhandle Suffer Sleeping Sickness

An epidemic of sleeping sickness among horses and mules in the Texas and Oklahoma Panhandle regions is holding the attention of Federal and state veterinarians this week.

Dr. T. O. Booth, chief veterinarian of the State Livestock Sanitary Commission, estimated that nearly 15,000 animals in 150 Texas counties have been infected. Mortality has averaged about 50 per cent.

Dr. Booth said the disease, curable when caught in the early stages, is believed carried by mosquitoes. The Panhandle epidemic was blamed on the early southward movement of the insects.
