The essence of sport ...

Next to a pickup game on the schoolyard, the NCAA basketball finals may well be the last pure sporting event left in America sporting event left in America. I realize that's a bold statement, but I've thought it out carefully. Monday night's smashing upset of Georgetown by Villanova finally convinced me that here was the essence of sport: some of the most talented athletes in the world competing for nothing more than the right to call themselves champions.

School spirit sounds trite, but that's what you saw if you watched that game. Also brotherhood, courage, determination, stamina, high joy and deep sorrow. It was the human experience all wrapped up in a bright gymnasium — even television commer-cials couldn't dim the glow.

I've managed to isolate myself one-on-one with the TV set for at least the final game every year since I can remember, and I can't ever recall being disap-pointed. I can't make that statement about any other sporting event — even (sigh!) the World Series. My love for basketball goes back to when Patrick Ewing was a mere shrimp. I remember John

My love for basketball goes back to when Patrick Ewing was a mere shrimp. I remember John Wooden's great UCLA teams that dominated the sport through most of my formative years. I was watching when David Thompson and North Carolina upset Bill Walton's Bruins and ended the era, and I'll never forget the duel between Earvin Johnson's Michigan State team and the Indiana State squad led by ever-incredible Larry Bird.

Then there was the year Marquette won it for Al McGuire, just before he retired from coaching. There was Denny Crum's Louisville team, paced by spring-loaded Darrell Griffith; the disappointing years when Houston's talented Phi Slamma Jamma teams came so close; the last-second dunk that made North Carolina State a national champion — I think you get the message.

Almost every NCAA final I've ever watched was dramatic, emotional, like a good Alfred Hitchcock movie or a novel about a boy and his dog.

This year's game was no different. A Hollywood script couldn't have delivered more drama: Villanova's old coach, who led them to their first NCAA tournament berth in 1939, died the morning of the finals. The team dedicated the game to their aging manager, suffering from Lou Gehrig's disease, who had to be rolled to courtside in a wheelchair. This grinning bunch of lean and hungry athletes played with the intense joy of a high school team in the state finals. Their feisty Italian teddy bear of a coach alternated between firing verbal machine-gun

Every senior who was on the court in that final agme will earn a college degree, on time, this spring. boyhood Monday night, and they were playing for a heckuva lot more than money. There have been some thrills in sports over the past year: Mary Lou Retton and Carl Lewis and Joan Benoit in the Olympics, the Detroit Tigers' powerful baseball champions, San Francisco's dominance in the Super Bowl — but even the Olympics seems ir-retrievably tinged by politics, controversy and commercialism. In the NCAA finals Monday night, I saw people play at the highest level of their sport and still have fun. I don't have the opportunity to turn on my TV set and see that kind of competition anymore, anywhere else. As the years go by, the NCAA playoffs stand out

As the years go by, the NCAA playoffs stand out more and more boldly from the dark background of dope, disloyalty and greed that seem to characterize the sports world. Don't ever change, guys. Some of us need you.

Stenholm speaks for small hospitals

Congressman Charles Stenholm last week urged the release of a report on the effect of the new system of Medicare payment on rurgh hospital system of Medicare payment on rural hospitals. Speaking on behalf of small hospitals, Stenholm called for the "prompt delivery" of a report on a study being conducted by the Department of Health and Human Services. The report, which was to have been released seven months ago, will determine the effect of the Diagnostic Related Group (DRG) system of payments on rural hospitals. Stenholm and other area representatives believe the current system favors urban areas and is unfair to small-town hospitals.

Muenster Memorial Hospital ad-ministrator David Bright says the things Stenholm is saying (see story above) about the plight of rural hospitals hold true for the 33-bed facility here. "He should know it by now," Bright said Monday. "Enough of us have written and told him."

Monday. "Enough of us have written and lold him." Muenster Memorial Hospital was in the last group to go on the DRG system of Medicare reimbursement, starting when their fiscal year began last July 1. Under the system, a price is established for each illness, with a particular pricing system for each hospital based on both that hospital's history and regional averages. "I have no argument with the pricing structure," Bright said. "The cost-reimbursement system we were on had a lot of problems. I favor a system that is firm: that says 'This is what you're going to get, now do a good job." "I'd have a problem with the way the rural people are being treated versus the way urban people are being treated versus the way urban people are being treated." he said. Bright explained that while a hospital in Dallas has a "labor market" of nurses, technicians and other health-care workers to draw on, a trual hospital such as Muenster Memorial has to recruit people to move into the community. Often, housing problems or just the slower pace of small-town life work against that effort.

against that effort. "Labor costs us less, in some respects, than it does in Dallas, but in some respects it costs us more. We're not as bad off as some of the smaller hospitals that are closer to the metropolitan areas — they have to compete directly with big hospitals because people can commute." The advanced age of many Muenster Memorial patients is one of the main pro-blems the hospital has breaking even under the new Medicare system, Bright said. Pa-hospitals; — rural areas have a dispropor-tionately higher percentage of elderly residents than most elderly residents than most metropolitan areas, and those citizens require more care and a longer hospital stay, on the longer hospital stay, on the average, than younger people. To make his point, Stenholm noted that the median age in the United States was 30 years accor-ding to the 1980 census. The me-dian age in 27 of Stenholm's 35 counties is higher than the na-tional average — the highest being Coke County with a median age of 44.3.

tients of advanced age often require more care than the DRG system will pay for. For example: Under the DRG, Medicare will pay Muenster Memorial Hospital $1,670 to treat a case of simple pneumonia and pleurisy in a patient over 70. The "mean" length of stay for that treatment is 8.5 days. In other words, if MMH can get the pa-tient out in 8.5 days or less, they should be able to break even or nerhaps come out a liiable to break even or perhaps come out a lit-

Ite ahead. But if the patient stays in the hospital 29 days, the hospital still just gets $1,670. After that, through a special provision called a "day-outlier", the hospital can be paid an additional $196.50 a day — a rate determin-ed by dividing the original $1,670 by 8.5 days.

So if the patient is in the hospital a total of 35 days. So if the patient is in the hospital a total of 35 days, Muenster Memorial will get the original $1,670, then, after a required two-day grace period, they will get $196.50 a day for the last three days, for a total of $2,260. But through February of this year, the ap-proximate cost for a patient at Muenster Memorial was $257 a day. Thus, while the hospital only received $2,260 for the pneumonia patient, its costs were actually more than $9,000. By law, they cannot recoup that loss. "There are ways to recover more than the

"There are ways to recover more than the original DRG amount, through the outlier provisions," Bright said. "But the cost of care has to get so high, you're going to lose your shirt before that kicks in."

On top of that, there is a nationwide limit on the amount of outliers that can be paid. "I haven't found anybody yet who has been able to get any outlier business," Bright

Another problem is the misunderstanding many, if not most, Medicare patients have about the system. According to Bright, the government has not educated the beneficiaries as to the strict admission stan-

In addition to a higher median age, the percentage of residents over 65 is also higher in this district than in the rest of the na-tion. Nationwide, elderly citizens make up 11.3 percent of the population, but in the 17th Con-gressional District the number is 15.6. The county with the highest percentage of elderly is Coleman County, with 25.6 of its 10,439 people over 65. In Cooke County, 14.5 percent of the 27,656 people were 65 or

A provision currently in the plan is design-ed to gradually phase in prices on the na-tional average instead of a hospital's own historical costs. That shift to national averages will help the Muenster hospital, but Bright said it ''is being fought tooth and nail'' by larger hospitals in the northeast whose historical costs are much higher than the national averages. Fette installed as Beta Kappa president

Jan Cain turned the president's gavel over to Pam Fette, Monday night, as Beta Kappa held its in-stallation and awards banquet at Cooke County Electric Co-op.

Mrs. Cain welcomed the group and Janet Hess led the invocation before a Mexican buffet dinner. The tables were decorated with red, yellow and blue runners, can-dles, Mexican hats and a lovely bouquet of bright fresh flowers.

Following the dinner, the outgoing president led the jewel pin ceremony, admitting four new members. Then she and Lynn Dangelmayr presented awards. Those receiving the First Pearl were Lora Hennigan, Rose Hen-scheid and Missy Dangelmayr.

Pallas Athene-First Degree awards were given to June Bartush and Wanda Flusche. Marcy Wilde accepted her Pallas Athene - Second Degree award. Pam Fette received her five year service pin and Jan Cain was presented with her ten year service pin.

Eight members achieved perfect attendance for the year. They were: Jan Cain, Lynn Dangelmayr, Pam Dangelmayr, Wanda Flusche, Lora Hennigan, Martha Koesler, Dolores Miller and Marcy Wilde. Lora Hennigan was named outstanding first year member. Outstanding Member of the Year was Jan Cain.

A roundup of area sports happenings

Track on tap ...

Both Muenster High and Sacred Heart track teams got rained out last weekend, as downpours turned Saint Jo's cinder track into a sea of mud and scratched the big meet they had scheduled. With a two-week rest under their belts, the local track teams will venture to Pilot Point Friday for an all-day competition there. The meet, which used to be held over two days, will be crammed into one this year, starting with the coaches' scratch meeting at 8 a.m. and continuing through the afternoon. Saturday, junior high tracksters from both schools will enter a meet at Saint Jo, hoping the track is dry.

Texoma cats 'excellent'...

Lake Texoma reports water murky, 51 degrees, normal level; black bass fair to four lbs. on fliptail worms; striper fair to 18 lbs. in clear water coves trolling Hellbenders and live bait; crap-pie slow; white bass poor; catfish excellent to 35 lbs. on trotline, jugline with live bait. Moss Lake northwest of Gainesville reports water murky, 51 degrees, three feet above normal level; black bass fair to two lbs. on minnows and deep-diving lures; crappie slow; white bass slow; catfish fair to seven lbs.

Farmers in Texas are under severe financial stress, the same as in other states throughout the country, according to an economist with the Extension Service. Net farm income in Texas in 1984 totalled only about half of what it was five years ago; thus, the purchasing power of the Texas farmer is only about 25 to 30 percent of what it was in 1979 due to depressed crop and livestock prices, steadily increas-ing costs, adverse weather conditions and high real interest rates which not only increase costs, but strengthen the dollar abroad and reduce export sales. and reduce export sales.

Farmland values slip ...

After bucking the trend of declining farm real estate values over the rest of the country, farmland prices in Texas finally slipped a little the past year. Texas farmland is now worth about $725 per acre in non-irrigated areas, a decline of almost seven percent from the past year. Irrigated cropland also declined slightly to about $980 an acre, and ranchland dropped by about two percent to $600 an acre

Prospects for 1985 indicate that Texas farm real estate values will continue to slip despite urban sprawl and potential income from natural resources.

Cattle outlook 'bullish' ...

Fed cattle marketings will likely be declining in the months The tapering off of fed cattle marketings along with reduced feedlot placements should help strengthen overall cattle prices, according to a Texas A&M economist. While beef supplies should decrease, pork and lamb production is also expected to be down although some gains are expected in poultry.

Local dairymen attend meet

Cooke County represented at AMPI convention

David Schniederjan, Lee Wolf and Marvin Rauschuber of Cooke County were among the elected officials who took part in the Associated Milk Producers, Inc.

Associated Milk Producers, Inc. (AMPI) annual meeting in Chicago, March 27-30. During their four days in Chicago, the dairy farmers worked with colleagues from 20 Midwestern and South Central states in determining cooperative policy. The 1985 Farm Bill was a major tonic of discussion policy. The 1985 Farm Bill was a major topic of discussion. AMPI is the nation's largest dairy farm cooperative, with 30,000 members producing 11 percent of the nation's milk sup-ply. Local dairymen are members of the organization's Southern Region.

Region. Wolf, the dairy farmer from Gainesville who serves as Southern Region president, outlined the progress dairymen had made in balancing the supply and demand for dairy products.

Milk production dropped almost three percent nationally, from 140 billion pounds in 1983 to 135 billion pounds in 1984. Sales increased by approximately two and one-half percent during this same period. Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) purchases were cut in half, and the cost of the dairy price support programs was reduced by one billion dollars. E.L. Wise, Southern Region manager in Arlington, reported the manager in Arlington, reported the region's production decreased 5.5 percent in 1984, nearly twice the national average. A greater proportion of the Southern Region's supply was sold to Grade A handlers than in the previous years, increasing from 72 to 78 percent of the milk produced. This and other services. The eight plants that the Southern Region operates — in-cluding the cheese plant in Muen-ster — continued to play a key role in the cooperative's marketing program. The plants processed over one billion pounds of milk and produced a variety of produc-ts including butter, dry milk powder, ice cream and ice cream blends, condensed milk and Cheddar cheese. Packaged butter and other services represented an increase of 95 million pounds. The Southern Region collected over $20 million in premiums over and above the minimum prices established under the Federal Milk Marketing Orders. Region operating costs were reduced through greater efficiencies and the use of technological advances in data processing, manufacturing and other services. education program.

Resolutions on promotion and component pricing dominated the discussion at the Southern Region delegate session. These resolutions delegate session. These resolutions originated at district meetings throughout the Region and were brought to the annual meeting through a system that provides members with an opportunity to be involved in establishing the operating policies of their cooperative.
