CREAMERY AT UMBARGER

Arrangements Being Made to Erect Modern Butter Factory at Little City of the Plains.

I. Mantz, who was here last Saturday, announces that the business men and farmers of Umbarger will erect a modern butter factory. Mr. Mantz is taking a leading part in matter and has already secured the promise of nearly 300 cows. That these people will succeed is assured as many of the farmers are from the Elgin community and understand how to run a farm dairy and to handle cream. They are enthusiastic over their project and many of the German farmers of that community were here last Saturday to hear Mr. McHenry, the Roswell creamery man.

Rev. Story Promoted.

A much deserved honor in the way of a promotion for Pastor J. W. Story was the pleasant news from the Annual Conference at Clarendon. He was made presiding elder of the Clarendon District. The many friends of Mr. Story outside of his own flock are glad to know of his appointment and while they regret to see him leave Hereford, they wish every success in his new field of work.

His successor in Hereford, Rev. Jas. M. Sherman of Merkel will preach his first sermon Sunday week. He comes to the Hereford Station with the full endorsement of the Conference and his reputation as a good preacher has preceded him to this city.

Turkeys Arrested.

One of the last acts of the big sheriff of Deaf Smith was the arrest of a number of Thanksgiving Turkeys—yes, real live fat turkeys, and a number are now in jail in various parts of the city. In his usual spirit of generosity, Sheriff E. F. Connell ordered a number of the emblems of Thanksgiving to be sent to his friends and the first thing anyone knew about it was the noise of the grocery boy trying to break into the chicken coop in the backyard with a big turkey, when it leaked out how it all happened. No doubt Mr. Connell's friends will eat a good turkey for Thanksgiving with a real satisfaction and a kindly feeling for their big sheriff and friend. The editor of this country weekly expects to eat several generous slices with cranberry sauce on account of the generous generosity of the big sheriff.

Rev. J. W. Story will Preach.

On account of the inability of the new pastor to arrive in the city in time, Rev. J. W. Story will fill the pulpit at the Methodist Church next Sunday at 11 o'clock and at night.

STRIKES OIL IN DEAF SMITH

Oil Well Brought In By Drill Company in Northwest Corner of County

A wire to E. F. Connell yesterday announcing that the Drilling Co. near Glenrio, a new town on the Rock Island, had struck oil in a new well, created some little excitement in Hereford. Mr. Connell left at once for the scene of action. It has been known for some years that the oil indications were strong in that section but not until recently has anything been done. Another company known as the State Line Oil Co. has laid out over a hundred claims just over in the Mexico territory, and preparations are being made to sink a number of wells. The promoters of Glenrio are sure of bringing in some good producers. A train load of sight-seers and others went out from Amarillo yesterday to make examinations on their own part.

The two wells already drilled are located in the extreme northwest corner of Deaf Smith county.

Floyd Elliston Improving.

After a weeks intense suffering and the necessity of undergoing a most difficult operation, Floyd Elliston, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Elliston is improving rapidly and will be up in a short while. This will be good news to his many friends.

T. C. U. MAY GET $200,000

Rockefeller Foundation Fund May Help Other Texas Schools. Baylor Gets $200,000.

Texas Christian University may be made a beneficiary of the John D. Rockefeller educational endowment fund. Wallace Butterick, secretary of the general board, spent Sunday in Fort Worth as a guest of Dr. Clinton Lockhart, president of the university, and members of the board of trustees, who made formal application for a portion of the endowment. No action will be taken until the next meeting of the board when Mr. Butterick will make his report.

Secretary Butterick was driven through the university grounds in an automobile accompanied by President Lockhart and trustees. He expressed his approval of the opportunity to dispose of a portion of the endowment fund in a gift to Texas Christian University, but said that the proposition would have to be laid fully before his board before any answer could be made.

It is possible that other members of the board will inspect the completed buildings of the university before a decision is reached. The proposition made to Dr. Lockhart is similar to that made to Baylor University which will get a donation of $200,000 from the fund, to be increased by $400,000 which Baylor authorities must raise.

Secretary Wallace Butterick is spending today in Waco, arranging for the gift to Baylor University.

ROBBERS DYNAMITE TEXLINE BANK

After Two Attempts They Take Freight and Escape to the Mountains as Citizens Surround Bank.

Dalhart, Texas, Nov. 14.—The bank of Texline, 30 miles north of Dalhart, was dynamited last night by yeggmen. Two explosions were made when the people living near were aroused and the robbers driven away. The burglars failed to get into the safe and did not get anything. This bank is a branch of the First National Bank of Dalhart.

Responding to telephone calls, president Slaughter, with the sheriff and his deputies went to Texline on the first train and are now in hot pursuit of the robbers, who took to the mountains of New Mexico.

All damage to bank and its fixtures is covered by insurance.

Texline, Texas, Nov. 14.—The safe of the Texline bank was blown open about 1 o'clock this morning. The explosion was heard by citizens who surrounded the bank at once, but the burglars escaped without securing anything.

Windows were shattered all around by the explosion.

The robbers entered the bank by breaking open the front door.

There is no clew to those attempting the robbery.

The sad news of the death of Mrs. J. H. Stinson Wednesday night at Amarillo was received here yesterday. Mrs. Stinson and Mrs. Dr. J. W. FARMERS MAY BUILD CREAMERY

Meeting Held and Question Discussed. McHenry of Roswell Addresses Farmers.

Last Saturday a number of farmers and their wives met at the Fox building and there discussed the various topics pertaining to the dairy business. Mr. McHenry of the Roswell Creamery was present and during his address answered many questions about the cream and butter business. He advised that the dairy farmers begin with a few good cows and ship the cream to some nearby creamery until a sufficient number of cows were in the community to justify building a home or local creamery. He explained that from 300 to 500 cows would be a beginning. Further, he said that a small creamery with a capacity of 500 pounds of butter per day should not cost over $1,500 complete and warned the farmers not to be skinned by promoters.

He explained how the cream was tested by the creamery and that the Roswell concern would pay within 3 cents of the Elgin butter market for all cream that may be shipped from Hereford.

One hour was spent in the meeting when an adjournment was made to Jarrott & Wilkinson's store where a test was made of some cream brought in by Mrs. Fulkerson. This was quite an interesting process as many had never seen how it was done.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Hawkins to Leave Hereford

Rev. D. W. Hawkins having received an appointment at the Clarendon Conference to a station at Ocheltree, he and his family will leave in a few days for that point. The friends of this family will regret to see them move from Hereford. Mr. Hawkins was for six years principal of the Hereford Public School in which position he made a noteworthy success, retiring upon his accord. For the two years following, he was business manager of The Brand, and he met with no less success in that capacity. For some time while connected with this paper, he had contemplated entering the ministry, but not until September last year did he enter actively upon the duties of his chosen profession. For a year he has looked after the Hereford mission preaching at a number of points in the community. His appointment to a station was expected by his many friends, but even they had forgotten that the bishop's appointment would take him and his family from them. Mrs. Hawkins came to Hereford as a bride from Dallas in the fall of 1906 and has many warm friends in the community, all of whom will regret to have her change her home. The Brand wishes for this most estimable family a goodly portion of the abundance of Providence in their new field.

SMALL GRAINS UNDER IRRIGATION--W. H. OLIN

The small grain crops are food crops for either man or beast and are therefore, usually the first crops grown on irrigated lands. They bring quick returns, furnish feed and mature within the period of the greatest water supply.

For these reasons wheat, oats, barley, and rye are the new land crops, especially the first two. The period for maturity of these crops does not extend beyond the flood period or the period of melting snows in the mountains, storage water is not required, consequently grain crops fit into every rotation on an irrigated farm.

The type of grain used varied with the locality, market conditions, and character of farming followed. Barley in the irrigated regions of the west is fast becoming the corn of the farm. For years California has grown it both for grain and forage feed for horses, sheep and hogs. When it is rolled or flaked it is readily digested and the grain has as great a nutriment or feed value as corn.

Take the best types of feed barley and under good farming and careful irrigation they will yield 80 to 100 bushels per acre, whereas the very best results the writer has been able to obtain or know about, with irrigated corn, is forty to sixty bushels per acre. California Feed Barley, in a favorable season yielded for a good barley farmer in northern Colorado in 1908—145 bushels per acre, the highest yield the writer has ever known.

Any barley, be it hulled or hull-less, should be ground, crushed or flaked before it is fed to stock, since this will insure a much larger percentage of it being digested and therefore increase its feed value.

Under irrigation, choice brewing barleys can be grown since they seldom have weather-stained kernels and give a desirable uniform malt.

The oat crop is a most important one to the irrigation farmer. Experience shows that a high yielding type of white oats brings the best market price and gives a meaty fine quality grain for either milling or feeding.

Probably the most universal grain crop for irrigation is wheat. Each locality has its local environment that determines the type for that section, be it spring or winter wheat. The universal wheat which seems to give desirable results where it has been grown under irrigation from Canada to Mexico, is Turkey Red.

The spring wheats vary from a club wheat to a soft berry wheat like Sonorra, Defiance, Colorado No. Fifty, and the Blue Stem wheat of the northwest.

Rye is not very generally grown under the ditch. It is a hardy crop and is considered the surest and most certain grain crop above the ditch.

PREPARATION OF SEED BED

It is highly important to prepare a good seed bed for irrigated grain, no matter what may be the method of irrigation. The seed must be seeded at a uniform depth on leveled or "floated" ground that has the proper amount of moisture for quick germination and rapid early growth if one wishes a good stand and a sturdy crop.

When the season opens dry and windy and the soil has not the proper amount of moisture, the writer urges a thorough irrigation before plowing, wherever possible. This will make the ground plow much easier and each days plowing should be put in proper seed bed condition before leaving the field, thus retaining as much of this moisture as possible to keep the ground "mealy and moist" for quick germination at time of sowing.

After the field is all plowed and well harrowed down, give it a good leveling with the farm level or "float". This fills all crevices or cracks and checks the tendency to quickly dry out, puts the ground into proper physical condition for good results with the growing crop and also prepares the ground for better and more desirable results in crop irrigation, be it by flood, check or corrugation method.

Seed only with a grain drill. If the drill does not have press wheels, follow drilling with a good cross harrowing to insure all seed being well covered. When seed is well up and firmly rooted either roll the grain with a corrugated roller and follow this with a spiked tooth harrow, crosswise of rows, or give a good cross harrowing only. This gives a good soil mulch, checking evaporation of moisture, and also cultivates and thereby invigorates the growing grain.

WHEN TO IRRIGATE THE FIRST TIME

This is not very easily determined since much depends upon the character of the soil, physical condition of same and prevalence of rain in the early season of plant growth.

Soil taken a few inches below the plant together with the appearance of grain plants, is a practical index used by most farmers. If the earth has sufficient moisture to retain its shape after being squeezed in the hand, irrigation is not yet needed. When the soil thus squeezed will barely hold together the indication is that the moisture seems deficient and should be supplemented at once. When normal moisture conditions prevail the grain has a light green color. When it begins to suffer for water it takes on a dark green color and the lower leaves soon begin to fire.

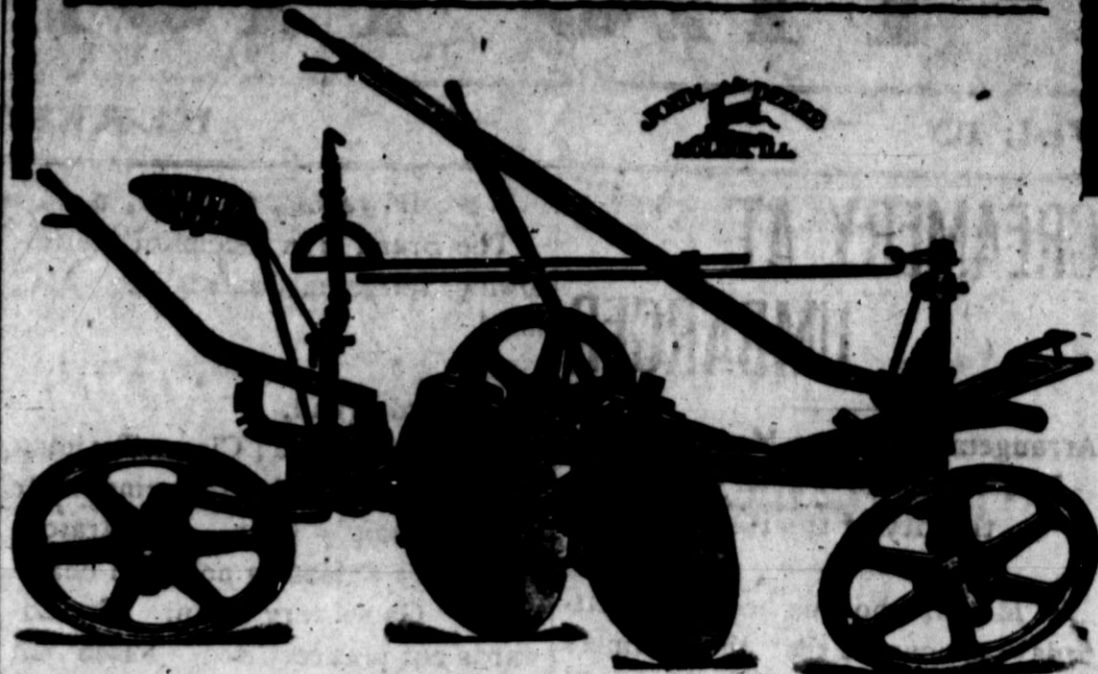

Stooling grain needs ample moisture and if not present in the soil, it must be supplied. At this season of the year the water is cool and this is an advantage, for cool moist weather is ideal, for the grain covers ground, this first irrigation tends to form a crust of the surface soil, and for this reason it should be followed by such tillage as shall break up this crust and not seriously impair the growing grain. Usually a light harrowing or running over the field with a corrugated roller proves beneficial, but harrowing is preferred.

When you irrigate give a thorough wetting and uniformly distribute the water so all parts of the field obtain the same proportion of water.

This is far easier said than done. Since most of the farmer readers will use flood irrigation for grain, the writer will describe this method in a general way as practiced by our most successful grain farmers.

1. Drill the grain with the slope of the land unless the land be too steep and there be a tendency for the water to cut or erode the soil. These drill furrows help the irrigator in distributing the water over the field.

2. Locate the field ditches or laterals with the lay of the land and determine the distance between field laterals by the character of the soil. The more sandy or gravelly the soil, the easier water percolates and therefore the narrower must the space be between laterals, for there is danger of too much wetting through percolation of the land close to cross ditches or laterals. The more clayey the soil the less the percolation and hence the wider may the laterals be placed. This distance varies from seventy-five to two hundred feet or more. On rolling land these ditches are run on the ridges and the water is directed down the slopes by the irrigator in such a manner that all the ground is uniformly watered.

Where the ground has one uniform slope the following plans show the usual plan of distribution.

Plan 1. Where the field has a uniform diagonal slant and water readily flows from lower bank of upper ditch down the slope to the next succeeding ditch.

Plan 2. Where the slope runs at right angles to the supply ditch for the field. Here water can be turned down both sides of the cross ditch or field lateral by means of canvas dams.

The grade given these ditches must vary with the character of the soil where the cross ditches are run across the slope and seek to maintain as near a level as possible and have a good flow. In this way when checked up the water will flow evenly over the bank onto the land to be irrigated.

The usual slope of field ditches is one and one-half to six inches per 100 feet. Heavy soils permit of more slope than lighter soils. The grade of the ditch, where possible, must not be steep enough to cut out the bottom of the ditch. Where ditches, must be run down slopes, put in checks and drops to prevent cutting.

It is always best on new land for the ditches to be run with either a surveyor's level or a true carpenter's level mounted on a tripod with a plumb bob and operated by one who knows how to run levels.

It is money saved to take no chances in first running of ditches. The inexperienced can not trust to the eye in the running of field ditches. After a few years experience cultivating and irrigating the fields, the farmer may then trust to the eye with safety, but it takes experience and, until one has acquired it, he better depend upon the level to tell him when and where to run his ditches for water will not run up hill, although it may appear to do so to many in this western country.

MAKING THE FIELD DITCHES

Supply ditches bring the water to the fields. These are permanent. Field ditches are those used, in the field by the irrigator to distribute the water uniformly over the field.

These ditches vary from two to three feet wide on top and nine to eighteen inches deep to three and four feet wide on top and two and a half to three and a half feet deep. The smaller ones are made by plowing a dead furrow with a common plow or plowing with a double moldboard plow and smoothing the banks and removing loose soil by a V or crowder. This is a V-shaped tool usually homemade of 2x12 inch plank, some 6 to 10 or even 12 feet long, steel shod and joined in a V-shaped edge, beveled to make a sharp cutting edge. One side is hinged usually so this V can be either widened or constructed to fit the size of the ditch. Several furrows can be run and then the V is used to throw out or push out the soil. Usually twice through the ditch with the V puts it in serviceable condition.

The larger ditches are made with a regular ditching plow built expressly for this purpose. It requires from eight to ten horses and once through, both digs and cleans the ditch. This is only recommended for long level stretches of ground where water can be carried a considerable distance and a large head effectually used.

The writer has seen grain fields with these large field ditches more than a mile long and as straight as a gun all the way.

The Blackburn Ranch, Wyoming, has many hundred acres in grain this season (1910) and all field ditches are made by the last named method.

The Buckeye Ranch, Northern Colorado, has 1,600 acres in grain with all ditches made by first named method. The Blackburn Ranch has practically level land over its entire surface but a gravelly loam soil. The Buckeye Ranch has some rolling land but mostly a comparatively level contour and a soil largely a clay loam of reasonably fine texture.

A medium head of water can here be most advantageously used. These farms fairly well represent the two types of ditches—large and small—which are commonly used in flooding fields.

writer thus studied the sign at a clearer vision. Beyond the vista of the imagination, the writer saw a convention of barnyard biddies. Lady Dominecker seemed to be presiding and Lady Wynedotte was addressing the assembly. Straining a wireless auditory nerve, the singing voice of the lady hen speaker floated gently through. She was seemingly in the midst of a strike organization, and was discussing the advisability of ordering out a general strike in all the henneries. Her remarks were evidently enjoyed by the assembled co-layers. We have labored all summer and have regularly produced our daily lay-out without a murmur, and then have been compelled to scratch for our own living. The land lord has wootenly removed the products of our egg factory, sold them in the open market or put them into cold storage, and we have suffered all the indignities of poor and scanty food, inadequate and unsanitary quarters, and have been compelled to associate with races not of our own class. It is time that we demand our rights. Let us go out on a strike and make the Christmas egg market known in history as the "Christmas without eggs." Lady Wynedotte took her seat amidst the applause of the entire convention hall and Lady Domerneck ordered the original motion.—Resolved that Two Eggs are worth Fifteen Cents at the Elk Hotel.

TO THE HONORABLE CITY FATHERS OF DALLAS.

The Brand is authorized to offer to the people of your city a supply of pure, fresh water for domestic and commercial purposes, free of cost and without stint or limit. Not even a meter will be used. The only condition being that the great Dallas News shall publish from time to time that the City of Dallas has its water supply at Hereford, Texas, the town of the Panhandle famed for its abundance of pure water. That's all. But how can Dallas the metropolis of North Texas, obtain the water? Ask Los Angeles, a city almost lashed by the ocean breakers, why she goes 200 miles for her water. From what source does Dallas obtain her natural gas? And why not build a double pipe line from Hereford to Dallas and allow the water, after being pumped from its untainted underground lake, run down to the Central City by the force that makes the apple fall. Easy! Hereford is 3000 feet above Dallas and water runs down hill. And it's only 330 miles beeline from here to that city. A half dozen gypsy towns along the route might find a chance to drink pure water—something many of them never tasted.

TWO EGGS FIFTEEN CENTS.

When the writer was in the Cafe of the Elk Hotel at Amarillo only recently, among the wall decorations of fish, fowl and flowers that met the gaze of the hungry guests, there appeared one sign hung in a conspicuously open wall space, that bore a most striking legend and it was this

TWO EGGS FIFTEEN CENTS.

Not content with the price of two eggs on the menu, the haughty and austere proprietor flaunts the cost of high living in your drawn and hungry looking face by displaying a bold printed sign of your wonton extravagance. The sign did not say what kind of eggs these wonderfully high priced products were, whether the speckle eggs of a chickadee, the cackling alarm of old spec, the hidden treasure of Roman sentinels, or the twin sacrifice of the big bird of the ostrich farm. While waiting as patiently as an empty stomach could, the fumes from burning grease and steaming stews floating peacefully and unmolested thru the dining room, and made the guests see visions of straight-ups, turn-overs, ship-wrecks, at Two for Fifteen Cents. But only the millionaire corner dared to order the specially advertised luxury of the Elk Hotel. The sign did not say, but the writer concluded that no other hotel in the city served the rarity. Perhaps second hand eggs were dished up by the hotels and cafes of the metropolis of the Panhandle. Then again the sign may have been displayed as a warning to extravagant customers not to order beyond their pie. Rolling the special menu and using it as a telescope, the

Just then the waiter placed a half stew on the table, and the vision of dreams passed away, leaving the stern fact that three little dead oysters were not as good as two real eggs.

 If you are run down, do not fail to make a request to the Woodworth Laboratory, 1161 Broadway, New York, for a sample of Pep-Senna, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, which is curing thousands. The well known saying that "delays are dangerous" applies more fully to kidney, liver and bladder diseases than to anything else. Diseases of the kidney, liver and bladder will stand no trifling, because there is no disease so deceptive, and nothing more fatal.
 Look backward and recall to memory the many sufferers, and others who have died during the past year. Have you ever stopped to think how many of them could have been made well and happy just by the use of Pep-Senna, this great health restorer? If you feel down hearted and discouraged, send for a sample today.

Keeping in at School.

Modern pedagogy has developed such that is valuable over the methods of the ancients and has left far to the rear the masters of the middle ages. In fact the advance during the past half century has been something phenomenal but in some of the smaller details of the profession the great mass of teachers utterly balk and refuse to follow the valuable precepts of their wise leaders.

For years and years all authors on pedagogy, worthy of notice have strenuously condemned the practice of "keeping in" as a punishment and yet it is today more uniformly practiced than any other mode of punishment. So common is this practice that one need not go far from home to find a teacher who so habitually "keeps in" that she rarely ever gets a whole recess and frequently does overtime thirty minutes or more.

Authorities on teaching tell us that such punishment is wrong and ought never to be used for several reasons: 1st, it deprives the child and teacher of their proper amount of fresh air and recreation; 2nd, it prevents a proper ventilation of the room; 3rd, it gives the child a distaste for its books, causing it to regard them as enemies instead of friends; 4th, it always becomes so common that it loses its effectiveness; 5th, it brings up trouble with parents, where children are kept after school and it may be seriously questioned whether the teacher has the legal right to keep the child longer than the regular hours.

Add to all these valid objections the still more potent one that "keeping in" rarely ever has much beneficial effect and you have an array of reasons that should cause any teacher to think seriously before resorting to such a subterfuge for punishment.

Why then, we may ask do so many teachers resort to this practice if it is open to so many objections and condemned by all authorities on school teaching? The answer is that it is the easiest kind of punishment to enforce, requiring no tact, no courage, and little brains. For any teacher to say to a class that all who miss two words in a spelling lesson will have to stay in at recess or 30 minutes after school is but another way of announcing that she will henceforth keep in from one to a dozen pupils and both she and the pupils could pick out the ones that would be kept in before the farce begins. The fact that it is the same poor victims that get caught every day is ample proof that the rule is failing to correct the fault.

The Post believes it is time the people rebelled against so much "keeping in" both in the interest of the pupils and the overworked teachers. They need the recreation and the fresh air. Some of them may never set the world on fire but their physical health demands that every child and every teacher enjoy every intermission.

Not having visited the Childress schools the writer does not know how generally this fault prevails here but he must insist that it is wrong if it prevails at all.

That teacher, who habitually keeps children in is either ignorant, weak or vicious and in either event is unworthy of her position and should be relieved at the first opportunity.—Childress Post.

NORTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE ADJOURNS.

Pulpits of Protestant Churches at Clarendon Filled by the Visitors.

Clarendon, Tex., Nov. 12.—After a day of religious feasts the appointments of the bishop were announced. The Northwest Texas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, tonight adjourned its first annual session.

The pulpits of the several Protestant Churches having been tendered were occupied by members of the conference.

The Methodist Church was crowded with an immense congregation long before the hour for the 11 o'clock service to hear the great sermon of Bishop Atkins.

Rev. W. L. Harris, who is perhaps the oldest member of the conference, presided over the time-honored "conference love feast."

At 3 o'clock this afternoon, Rev. R. E. Goodrich preached an excellent sermon at the Epworth League rally.

Elders—W. M. Beavers, O. P. Clark, J. B. McCarley, V. H. Trammell, L. Roberson, D. B. Doak.

At the evening service the usual resolutions of thanks were tendered to the citizens, the press, railroad and telegraph officials and all others who had extended courtesies.

Honor Roll of High School.

It was the intention to publish this week, both the Roll of Honor, and a Tardy Roll. Upon the former would appear the names of all pupils who made during the last month an average of 95 per cent or more on their studies; on the latter would appear the names of all pupils who had been tardy twice or more during the month. Owing to irregularity in the reporting the tardy pupils, their names will not appear this month, but will be given at the close of next school month. The fact that no pupils name appears as being tardy twice, appears on the Honor Roll, is worth considering.
