HEREFORD'S PUBLIC SCHOOLS and the influence on the home and marked.

One of the Institutions of Which All Dre Proud Is the Factory Where Boys and Girls Are Prepared for Life's Work

The town of Hereford has a num ber of public enterprises and institutions of which her citizenship are proud. She points to her magnificent courthouse as a monument to the enterprise and progressiveness of the people of the county. Her churches, well attended and supported, stand as evidence of the city's deep interest in the things that are spiritual and moral. Her public utilities are all above the average in equipment and service for towns of this size.

However, in none of these things do all the people take more interest or give more loyal support than to the public schools where the boys and girls to the number of more than half a thousand are being trained for future citizenship.

Few towns the size of Hereford affords a better school building or one better equipped for efficient work. In addition to the central building, an excellent three story brick structure with about twenty rooms and auditorium, there is a separate building for the primary grades and another for the manual

The work of the school is divided broadly into high school, grammar school and primary department. The primary work covers four years, the grammar work three and the high school four years, with some elective work in science, manual be acquired to get thoughts from the training and domestic science.

The high school offers four years work regularly, including four courses in history and civics, four in latin, four in mathematics, four in English, one-half course in science and four year's work in domestic science and four in manual training pupils as they pass from the preadoand mechanical drawing.

The work in the high school done under the direction of well trained teachers who have all had college or university training and are specialists in their respective departments.

The science work which includes physiography, physiology and physics is conducted in a fairly well equipped laboratory and the board are adding to the equipment from year to year as the school grows and their means will permit. The science work is very popular, about 50 pupils taking physics this year. For the work in mathematics, Latin and English the school library is very well equipped with supplementary works and is under the direction of specialists in their line.

The best equipped department of the high school is the domestic science and in fact few schools in the state have a better selected equipment for this work than Hereford. This department of the school alone was equipped at a cost of nearly two thousand dollass. The work in this department is open to all the pupils from the sixth grade up. At the present time about 75 girls are taking some of the work.

the linking of the school life with the home life will be far reaching.

In the manual training department good work is being done. Last year this department was in basement of the main building, and splendid work was done under the teaching of Mr. Vaughn, but owing to the increased interest in this work among the students, the School Board made an increased effort to meet the demands by setting aside a it up with indispensible machinery, tools, etc., as they thought their finance would permit. Now there is a splendid equipment and some real good work is being done under the instructions of Mr. B. P. Castell who is well qualified to fill this important

There are 45 boys enrolled in this department and they are given work in mechanical drawing until they can take specifications of fairly difficult work and make a very clear mechanical drawing of it. Patrons can best get an idea of what is being done in this line by seeing the boys at their benches.

The cost of filling up this department was about $3,000.

The grade work of the schools from the primary to the high school is in charge of especially trained teachers of experience and here an excellent foundation is laid for the work of the high school.

The grammar school is well described by the name it bears. In this school it is insisted that pupils do not learn to read but read to learn. More and more ability must written or printed page, more and more ability must be acquired to express these thoughts in words and phrases that are one's own. It is the policy of the teachers in the grammar school to carefully conserve the interest and strength of lescent age to the adolescent age. It is well noted that in this age memory and imagination are keen and active and these psychological conditions are taken advantage of to teach gems, descriptions, words, language, and all those important factors of an education that involve these peculiar mental traits. It is intended to make thorough preparation in the grammar school for work in the high school.

The course offered in the high school is not extensive but it is the policy to make it intensive. Four courses in history and civics, four

A Good Woman Passes Away

After a long illness, Mrs. Lee Alice Norton, wife of R. H. Norton, died at the family residence Monday April 5th, at 7:40 p. m. The peaceful end came while she was surrounded by the members of her own family, visiting relatives and neighbors. Loving hands had done everything possible to relieve her of her suffering and to make the last days as quiet and peaceful as possible. She knew the end was near and bade the members of her family a loxing farewell, assuring them by word and expression that she was fully prepared to make the change from Time to Eternity's shore.

The funeral services were conducted at the First Christian church. The Sunday School auditorium was filled by the friends of the family, at the hour 2 p. m. Wednesday, Rev. G. A. Faris. pastor of the church, preached the sermom, taking his text from the story of the great woman of Shunem, whom the scriptures describe as a good woman, The minister paid high tribute to our departed friend and neighbor, extolling her virtues and advising emulation on the part of those who would make their lives useful.

Easter at the Churches

Special services were held at most of the churches Sunday in observance of Easter.

At the Baptist church the services both morning and evening were in keeping with the Easter spirit. The facts and the beautiful eignificance of the resurrection was sung by the choir in chorus and given emphasis in a strong sermon by the pastor, Rev. R. E. L. Farmer. The morning discourse was based upon "The Seven Miracles in the Gospel of John," and in the raising of Lazarus Rev. Farmer made the application of the resurrection as a fact for all humanity-that "Life is," indeed, 'ever Lord of Death and Love can never lose its own." At the evening hour the services were in charge of the Salvation Army staff that have been in the city for several days. The addresses and music were full of earnestness and inspiration.

At the Christian church both services were distinctively in harmony with the Easter-tide. At the morning hour the music consisted solely of the old hyms which have for so long expressed the faith and devotion of the church. No other music can ever take the place of these old songs which have come down to us as a precious heritage not to be lightly prized, and the fact that they were given first place, added much to the spirituality of this part | put the black giant to sleep. of the worship.

The beautiful easter story was the theme for the sermon both morning and evening and spoke its message of love, and comfort, and hope; in two earnest and forceful discourses by the pastor Dr. Faris. The story so simply and beautifully told, received added strength from the wonderful personality always so evident force this week and the lettuce and in Dr. Faris' addresses.

I've imbibed gallons of sickly tea and eaten pounds of cake and tarts and jam, and I've listened to would-be artists rave for hours about their souls and their temperaments. I'm sick of it."

"Won't you go just this once—this afternoon? I promised you would be there and I believe you'll really like Caroline Becker. She has no temperament and of course I find her rather

"I'll go," interrupted her brother. "Any person living in a studio and having a tea and that you can find dull must be an oddity."

George turned away, whistling. He had a sincere hope that his sister would develop some common sense after she had a season or two of New York studio life. She was young.

As they walked briskly down Central park west toward the studio building in which Helen's "dull" artist friend lived, George Moore began to be curious about his hostes's to be.

He was more than curious when he took her proffered hand and felt her warm, strong grip as she welcomed him and his sister to her studio. The girl was beautiful, in a simple, sweet way. She was like the girl he knew in the West, not a particle like the girls his sister "adored" and who lived in the studios he had been frequent-

Neither was this studio like the others. It looked more like a real home than anything he had seen in New York. There was no oriental scent in the air; there were no dimly lighted candle lamps, no smoking

"This is so cheerful and homelike, Miss Becker," he found himself saying after he and his sister had admired the picture that had won the Academy

"Oh, it is, really?" asked Caroline, earnestly.

"It is, indeed," George repeated. "That's been one of my main objects in the furnishing of it and in all my little entertainments. I've tried to have the home atmosphere the you something." She ran behind a my back, especially when I stooped screen and returned with a stone crock in her arms.

Each of the guests took a round it were the best thing they had ever

"I wouldn't exchange this cookie for all the French tarts or pate-de-folegras tid-bits in all the studios in New York," said George Moore more enthusiastically than his sister had heard him express himself since he had left

"They are good," admitted Helen. "It's just that—they remind me of home," said Caroline.

As George reached for a third cookie his sister frowned upon him.

"George Moore! You laugh so loud and eat so much. I'm ashamed of you," she admonished.

"Don't be, please, Miss Moore," pleaded Caroline, putting a friendly hand on Helen's arm. "It's so good to see and hear him. It's like homeitself."

And after that the guests began to arrive so that George and his sister could not monopolize their hostess. Helen had to drag her brother home and as she usually had to urge him to remain even a polite length of time she was more than amused. "That is the first real girl I've met at these tea fights, sis," he said as they walked home.

"Yes?" replied Helen, raising her eyebrows. "She's very pleasant."

"Pleasant! I should think she was she's a peach! She's a real genuine girl and I intend to see much of her. And I hope that cookie crock will not grow empty for I intend to make many George laughed. "I'll forgive you for taking me to this one, sis-honest

"For you saw the handwriting on the wall of Caroline Becker's studio, didn't you?" she asked, teasingly.

He nodded, "I did; did you?" And apparently the writing was there, for the girl with the stone cookie crock and the man who did not like studio teas went to housekeeping in a real home within twelve months from the day of their meeting.

Thick-Headed. "You don't seem to think much of adson's intellectual powers."

Well, why not?". Because I feel quite sure that if a

It is a universal stride to conquer Nature and Nature's ills. The world has anounced more discoveries and inventions in the last quarter of a Century than at any other period of equal length, since the dawn of Creation. Just a few years since medicine was a single profession, with no division or subdivisions. Today, Modern Medicine consists of more than a score of Specialties blended with such exactness that the ending of one is the beginning of the other. We find the Political and Theological bodies looking foward to a unity of purpose, they are discarding dogmatic superstitions and subterfuges. The wonderful changes in our great profession are well manifested in every nook and corner of this mighty country, as well as abroad. Then may I ask, Is the Medical Profession found wanting? I answer superlatively, NO. We have offered with the coat of sectarian medicine. We know the "isms" and "pathies" The curtain has been hoisted and the public allowed to view the doctor as he is, and as he should be. The people are no longer credulous. Hypotheses and conclusions will no longer satisfy a progressive and intellectual public. Scientific tacts demonstrated beyond all probity are the only means by which we may be able to hold the profession upon that high plane of intellectuality which characterizes the age in which we now live. Just a few years since, a slight kaowledge of Anatomy, Physiology, Chemistry, Materia-Medica plus a very poor clinic, covered almost in "to-to" our college advantages. If we possessed an unfaltering determination we kept pace with the progress of time. The first and greatest movement was in raising the requirements of a general education, making it a pre-requisite, and indispensable to admission into a well founded Medical school. The second step foward was when the

EDUCATING FOR PRODUCTION

We hear much these days about the high cost of living. Many are the causes assigned for its existence and the remedies suggested for putting it to flight are even greater in number. Still high cost of living still soars in the clouds and getting the monthly bills paid is the one great problem with "Dad."

Bankers, real estate men, lawyers preachers and newspaper men are all telling the farmer how to manage his business so that he may feed the world and yet the high cost of living goes marching on.

Statesmen and politicians (you'll note there's a difference) have been making laws and suggestions from regulating Standard Oil to a law to prevent the killing of heifer calvesand the price of tough steak and gasoline still soar. Now if you will permit an humble newspaper man to suggest a cure and will take the fin. medicine as prescribed, the malady known as the "high cost of living" and which has caught almost every one, will release its grip on the body politic and the patient will be convalescent.

Let us educate for production instead of for consumption. There are entirely too many of the genus known as consumer, compared with that very useful although often less ornamental microbe known as the producer. Let the banker, the real estate man, the lawyer, the doctor, community?-Luther Black. the newspaper man, and in not a few cases the preacher—take a few Gladys Ivy. doses of his own medicine as recommended and be a producer. Because if ninety percent of the lawyers, seventy-five percent of the realesate men, fifty percent of the doctors, all the loafers and some of Carroll Shaw. the preachers would turn farmer and go out and tickle the soil with their genius this world would be much happier and much better fed at lower prices.

We have been educating our youth to be doctors. lawyers, traders and professional men of all kinds, joining the ranks of consumers rather than farmers and artisans and taking their places among the producers. What we need is a "right about" not only in books but in public sentiment. Let our youth be taught that to be a consumer without being a producer of wealth in some form for which there is a real need, is a disgrace. Teach the youth that overalls and a hammer or a hoe makes a more popular outfit for a young man than a white collar and a typewriter. Set the world to producing what the world wants and needs.

The negro help employed on Storm's father's farm are fleeing because a great skeleton hand appears at night upon a hill near by. Storm is baffled in his investigation, but Zudora learns that her uncle has employed Jimmy Bolton, a half witted man, thus to annoy Storm's parents. Howard dies, but Zudora, nearly famished, is rescued by and Baird find the Zudera gold mine.

Mrs. Copeland's jewers are stolen, but recovered through the cleverness of Hun and Baird. They investigate the mysteries of Mme. Du Val's house. A map of a mine is stolen from Zudora, who later is kidnaped and held prisoner.

CHAPTER XVIII. The Cipher Code.

UT Storm found no one at Craig island; for the simple reason that his approach was seen and Zudora and all things belonging to her were nicely hidden out of sight. He returned to the city disconsolate. He let work go and haunted the office of Hunt for the greater part of each day. But Hunt was still in Africa or was on the high seas.

And when Baird and Hunt did return, as recounted in the preceding chapter, they learned that they had been nicely fooled. Radcliffe had not left Africa at all, but had decided to remain at the mines until he had fully recovered from his injuries in the wreck. And a fine idea came into his head while convalescing.

The idea was this: The man Hunt was sailing close to the wind. He was getting nearer and nearer. Why not gather all the stones possible as a move against Hunt's winning out in the last phase of the game? No half a dozen fine stones, but the last six months' total output, something prince ly, like that? He, Radcliffe, was not needed in New York. The banging up he had received at the hands of Baird and subsequent wreck had left him in a shaky way. The voyage to Africa and back would put him firmly upon his feet once more. On the voyage Radeliffe took partic ularly good care of himself, drank nothing and, moderated his smoking, forswore cards and went to bed early. By the time he reached Cape Town he was something like himself again-that is to say, ready for any deviltry, During these hours of loneliness he thought a good deal. Much as he loved Mme. Du Val, she had au iron hand, and the fact was beginning to irk him. Why couldn't she accept his idea to quit now and go away while the going was good, to use the parlance of the day? Money? They had plenty. The game, the game; that was her eternal cry; the sport of it, the excitement. She went out of her way dozens of times to court danger, and there was danger, real and menacing. They had all kinds of documents to substantiate their claims to Zudora's fortune, but there was many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip. She was like a gambler who had played for high stakes. She never again could find zest in a friendly game. Perhaps she was only playing with him, having need of him as a chessman in her dangerous game. If that was the case, she would indeed find it a dangerous game. No woman had ever yet made a fool of Captain Radcliffe.

The next boat sailed in two weeks. So, instead of going down to Cape Town, he idled about the mine, picking up odd bits of information which he stored away for future use. There was no excess lumber in Captain Radcliffe's brain. Where was that other find? Neither his side nor the other could as yet locate that mysterious bed of crystals. He started out to do some exploring on his own hook, but nothing important came of it.

But he was tired of the incessant war against Hunt and Baird. He wanted a fling, a month or two of princely gambling, ten or twenty thou sand to do with as he pleased. For weeks he had crushed down the instinct, but this enforced inactivity had given it renewed life. He must have his fling.

When he stepped on board the ship which was to carry him back to America it was the happiest moment he had known in months. Back to little old New York, with its confusion, its noise. its lights, its excitement! No more Africa for him if he could prevent it.

and giving a generous tip. Then he returned to the smoke room and played Canfield until dinner. He won two games out of twenty and felt quite satisfied with himself.

Bruce was busily engaged in work when the wireless arrived. He smiled and spread it out on the blotter and with pen and ink began to decipher it When he completed the translation be was highly elated. He would not have been, however, had he known that every move he made was being watched, that nearly every move he had made since his return from Africa had been watched either by Baird or by Hunt. It was Baird who was watching him at this particular moment from rather a perilous position outside the office window.

Bruce thrust the cipher between the two blotters of his writing pad, picked up his hat and coat and hurried away. He must see Mme. Du Val at once.

No sooner was he gone than Baird entered quietly. He tiptoed to the desk, watching the door as he did so. Bruce might return unexpectedly. From out of the blotters he drew the wireless cipher and the translation. He rubbed his chin and smiled. He had begun to feel rather bored watching Mr. Bruce day in and day out, with no definite results. If Bruce knew anything regarding the whereabouts of Zudora he kept this knowledge most carefully to himself. Hunt would enjoy reading this dispatch. It was really the smashing proof he had been seeking for menths. Here was his smuggler, all nicely done up in a package, ready for delivery. Arrive New York steamer Aurenta.

Will throw rubber bag of diamonds over board before landing. RADCLIFFE.

Both of them! All depended upon getting hold of that bag of diamonds. Uncle Sam would do the rest with pleasure. Baird made a copy of the wireless and its translation. The Marconi company would back him up in case Radcliffe denied sending such a cipher. It was all as easy as falling off a log. He would have taken the originals but for the fear that Bruce would return and find them gone and warn Radcliffe. So he had to content himself with copies.

He immediately sought out Hunt, with whom he found Storm, pale and thin through worry and anxiety re garding his sweetheart.

"I've got them, Hunt!" "Zudora?" cried Storm.

"No, my friend. But I've got two game. I have followed Bruce for days, but if he knows anything about Zudora's prison he's keeping it to himself. I've seen him with no suspicious characters. Here, Hunt, read these and cheer up."

"Fine work, Baird; fine work! You drop your newspaper business and hang your shingle up with mine. And the boat comes in this afternoon. Let's get down to the dock. Will you go along, Storm?"

"Heaven knows I haven't anything else to do. That note in the bottle took me nowhere. I couldn't find anything at the island. Well, there is this much to say-I'll kill with my own hands any man who has harmed or offered indignities to Zudora."

"And we'll help you, boy," agreed Hunt. "But let us first trap two precious rogues. Who knows? We may by taking them into custody find ourselves pretty near Zudora."

"What do you mean?" "Keep your hair on and follow me." "Have you found out something?" cried Baird.

"That remains to be seen," answered the detective noncommittally.

So the three of them started off for the water front in various degrees of excitement.

In the meantime Zudora waited and watched the sea from her window. Time after time she saw motorboats headed for the island; time after time she saw them change their course and go chugging past, too far out of range for a call. She dared not call out unless she was absolutely assured that the motorboat contained rescuers. She was in truth greatly afraid of the terrible old hag who acted as her jailer. Several times during drunken spells she had pinched Zudora's arms cruelly "No; just the Brooklyn bridge." Rad- and Jeered at her. One day she spoke to the old woman "Can you get me some warmer clothes?"

"Oh, it's warmer clothes, is it? Any kind o' furs you'd prefer? Black fox is fash'nable jest now."

"But I am cold. I will give you thousand dollars if you will free me!" "All right. Fork over th' thousand an' I'll land yuh home tonight."

Zudora turned away so that the miserable old woman would not have the satisfaction of witnessing her tears. "Write a note, dearle, an' I'll see if I can't get yuh some fresh toga. But mind, no tricks; plain English and no cipher stuff, or it don't git off th' island." "You mean it?" cried Zudora, with wild excitement. "Yes. Hurry up. I'm goin' t' have visitors inside of an hour.'

Zudora found a magazine, ripped off a page and scribbled on the margin: Mrs. Ramsey, 16 Willow Grove Avenue: I am not permitted to tell place of my imprisonment. But please give bearer a change of clothing for me. ZUDORA

The hag carried out the note and locked the door.

By and by Zudora heard the rumble of a motorboat. It landed at the dock. Later she heard a low murmur of voices and once the hag's raucous laughter. They had fooled her a dozen times. Maybe they would fool her again.

The visitor was Mme. Du Val. She read the note carefully and signified that there could be no danger in letting Zudora have some fresh clothes. She would have Gyp take the note, and Gyp was the hardest young man in New York to follow. Things had gone so smoothly for Mme. Du Val that she had begun to crave a little excitement.

There certainly was excitement when Mrs. Ramsey received that tattered note. "It will take me about five minutes," she said as calmly as she could. "Would $1,000 be of any use to you?" Gyp smiled. "Nothing doing in that line, madam. Just get me the clothes, That's what I'm here for." As Mrs. Ramsey went up to Zudora's room another idea occurred to her. She telephoned Hunt what was taking place, and that was the shrewdest thing she could have done. "What's the chap look like?" asked Hunt over the telephone. Mrs. Ramsey described Gyp accurately.

"Good work! That will be Gyp the gun man, I'll keep watch. Don't worry, and don't attempt anything on your own hook."

Mrs. Ramsey got together some of Zudora's winter clothing. From one of the skirts she ripped a hem, and haside this she placed a little note of cheer and courage, sewing it up with The the Property and ra's attention. She managed to stretch out the promised five minutes into nearly half an hour. After that she

When the clothes came to Zudora she experienced the first bit of pleasure since her imprisonment. Clean clothes to a dainty woman such as she was meant pleasure under any circumstance. She came upon the white thread and eyed it wonderingly. There had been no tear in that skirt the last time she had worn it. And Mrs. Ramsey certainly would not have used white thread. Her heart bounded. She felt the crinkle of paper under her fingers. In less than a moment she had the note in her trembling hands. She read it, then destroyed it and hid the bits of paper in the four corners of the room. Hunt would find her: The reaction caused her to break down

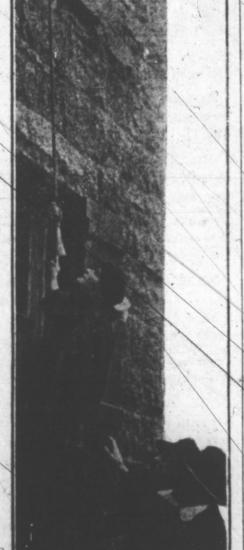

The old hag heard the sound, but accredited it to a bit of sentimentalism.

Hunt did not go directly to the ship dock. Instead he engaged a motorboat and a dinghy. Even Baird was curious to learn what was going to happen. "I'm not saying a word; just wait There may be trouble, but I want the biggest trouble out of the way first."

"You know where Zudora is, and we are going for her," cried Storm. Hunt shrugged and gave the engi neer orders. They left the motorboat about a quarter of a mile off the island and rowed toward shore in the dinghy.

Zudora was, always looking out of the window, and when she espied the dinghy and a moment later recognized a familiar head she almost fainted with joy.

Storm laid his finger against his lips and tossed up a rope's end, which she caught. She drew it inside and made it fast. Then Storm went up the rope sailor fashion. At the bostom of the rope was a slip noose. Into this Zudora put her foot, and Storm lowered

Baird sighed. He wondered if there was in all the world a woman for him. "Where now?" he asked of Hunt.

"Why, I thought that we'd run alongside the Aurenia. If there's a bag of diamonds going overboard I'd like to be on hand. Well, Miss Zudora, it took it. Your wanting fresh clothing was a good idea. Now, Storm, when Baird and I reach the motorboat you raw to the old dock. There'll be a taxi near by. You two get into it and hike for home."

"God bless you, Hunt!" said Storm. "Don't let that worry you. Nothing pleases me better than to trip up a precious crook when he thinks he's got the better of me. Go home and good luck with you. And, Storm, if you let any one steal her away from you this trip I'll take no hand in bringing her back to you. There you go?"

Hunt and Baird climbed into the motorboat and waved their hands. Storm took up the oars again.

"I'm so tired, John, so tired!" "I've had no sleep for weeks. I've traveled a thousand miles and followed ten thousand clews. And I'd not have you in this boat, girl, but for a streak of luck and a bit of foresight on the part of Mrs. Ramsey, who called up Hunt on the telephone when the fellow came for your clothes. From the Kitchen.

Has it ever struck you what a number of terms belonging to cuisine are applied to man under different circumstances? Sometimes he is "basted," he "bolls with rage," is "baked" with beat and "burns" with love or jealousy. He is often "cut up," "devoured" with a flame and "done brown." We "dress" his jacket for him. Sometimes he is "eaten up" with care, and occasionally he is "fried." We "cook" his "goose" for him, and often he makes a "goose" of himself. We make a "hash" of him, and sometimes he makes a hash of something else. - He gets into "hot water" and sometimes into a "mess," is made into "mincemeat" and is often in a "pickle." We are often asked to "toast" him, and he is frequently put into a "stew" or is in a "stew," no one knows why. A "soft" is "half baked," and one severely handled is well "peppered." A cheeky young imp is a "sauce box," and a rich father is made to "fork" out.-Dundee Advertiser.

First Wheel Clock

Some say that Archimedes made the first wheel clock as early as 200 B. C. Others give credit to Wallingford, who lived so late as the beginning of the fourteenth century. But the most per fect water clocks were, long before the latter period, furnished with wheels, so that the only improvement was the substitution of a solid body to act as a moving weight instead of water. The oldest complete clock moved by weights is probably that sent by the guiran of minutes de top brick !! 1232. In the thirteenth century many of the church steeples in Italy were furnished with clocks moved by weights, which struck the hours. Hele of Nuremberg is supposed to have constructed the first watch in 1500, and to him must also be given the credit of the spring clock. Eyen the simplest law transactions seem to be beyond the comprehension of some people. An old farmer went into a grocer's shop a short time ago, ordered a sovereign's worth of goods and when they were ready for delivery laid down a five shilling piece in payment thereof.

"Oh, yes, that's all right," replied the man. "I've got permission from the judge to pay 5 shillings in the pound. A peculiar feature in the berring trade is that an exceptionally large catch during one season has no effect whatever upon the next year's supply; also, large as is man's consumption of berrings, naturalists say the number killed by fishermen is quite insignificant as compared with the quantity destroyed every year by sharks, por poises, cod, dogfish, ling and other fish, each of which must have its daily meal of from one to two score berrings, to say nothing of the sea birds, which practically live on surface feed ing fishes. Herrings are not at all a modern article of diet. A vast commerce in them was carried on in northern Europe all through the dark and middle ages. The berring's chief food consists of minute organisms, which it strains from the water by its gills, but It also eats worms and at certain sea. A Lich Gate

A lich gate is a shed, generally of oak, over the entrance of a churchyard, beneath which the bearers paused when bringing a body for interment. Here the clergyman met the body and read the introductory part of the burial service as he preceded the funeral train into the church. Examples of old lich gates are still to be seen in many country churchyards. In Wales they are more modern and are usually built of stone. Some of the old lich gates are formed with one wide door turning on a central pivot and self closing by means of a rude pulley wheel in the roof and a stone weight inclosed in an iron frame, a primitive but effective piece of machinery. In Herefordshire they are also called "scallage" or "scallenge" gates. "Lich gate" is derived from the Anglo

How To Give Quinine To Children. FEBRILINE is the trade-mark name given to an improved Quinine. It is a Tasteleas Syrup, pleasant to take and does not disturb the sinmach. Children take it and never know it is Quinine. Also especially adapted to adults who cannot take ordinary Quinine. Does not nausente nor cause, nervousness nor ringing in the head. Try it the next time you need Quinine for any purpose. Ask for 2-ounce original package. The name FEBRILINE is blown in bottle. 25 cents.

Penny Wise and Pound Foolish

Hard times make every woman look to see where she can save money, which, of course, is sensible and proper if not carried

In the case of food it would be foolish to attempt to substitute sawdust for a breakfast food because it is cheaper. Everyone knows sawdust has no food value and its use would be a positive detriment to the health.

Alum baking powders may cost a little less than cream of tartar powders like Dr. Price's, but many of the highest food authorities both in this country and abroad have declared them to be injurious and not safe to use.

To attempt to cut the cost of living by using low-grade alum powders is unwise economy.

"I Never Spent Any Money That Did Me So Much Good as That | Spent for Vinol."

Bellefontaine Ohio.—"I wish every tired, weak, nervous woman could have Vinol for I never spent any money in my life that did me so much good as that I spent for Vinol. My nerves were in a very bad condition, making me very weak, tired, and worn out and often drowsy headaches. I had tried cod liver oil, doctor's medicines, and other preparations without benefit.

"One day a friend asked me to try Vinol. I did and soon my appetite increased, I slept better and now I am strong, vigorous and well and can do my housework with pleasure."—Mrs. J. F. LAMBORN, Bellefontaine, Ohio.
