Fates Proved Unkind to Spanish Explorer

Capt. Pedro De Quiros long had been intrigued by tales of a vast continent in the Southwest Pacific ocean and finally coaxed Phillip III of Spain to let him go in search of On July 27, 1605, at Callao, Peru, he drew a flourish under his signature, commissioning the captains of his two ships, and was ready to sail on "the discovery of the unknown austral regions of this South sea by the order of the king." One of the captains presented himself, respectfully asking De Quiros to lay down a course for them to follow:

"Let her go as she is," returned De Quiros grimly. "God will take us somewhere!"

In the following year they sighted one of the islands of the New Hebrides group, and De Quiros, under the impression that it was his long sought land, named it La Autralia de Espiritu Santo. Followed sickness and discontent, the crew mutinied and forced a return to Mexico. But not before De Quiros had caught a glimpse of a long, mysterious coast line, that to this day some believe was the Australia of his dreams. Another expedition was organized by him in Spain, but on reaching Panama he died of a fever and there he lies buried in an unknown grave.-Detroit News.

Nest of Three Rooms Required for Stork

A three-room tenement is built by the hammer-headed stork for the housing of himself and family. He is a native of Africa, and in his gonstruction work utilizes enorpous sticks which he fixes between the branches of a tree. Any ordimary boy could creep into the lower compartment. From this a passage slopes up to another flat decorated with bright pebbles and bleached hones. Above this is the nursery, the walls of which are lined with mud to keep out drafts. A curious mest is the one the swiftlet builds in Borneo, and which is known to commerce as the edible nest of the Chinese gourmet. The bird builds in caverns around the coasts, and nest-seekers go with torches and tear, them down and export them. It is said that edible nests to the value of $1,500,000 are imported into China every year. The nest is woven from a secretion the bird bence its food

Old Cities in Tiers

The Inca museum at Loma, Peru, has recently come into possession of 300 mummies of aboriginal Pemuvians brought back by an expedition to the Pisco region. From these and other discoveries it would seem that there was an advanced givitization in that part of the counery long before the time of Christ. Cities of different periods were found, one built over the other, the earlier ones having been buried. The expeditions also returned with great wealth of embroidered tapesaries, beautifully decorated pottery, some in the shapes of animals and serpents. #### Vandals Damage House Belonging to C. H. Dyar

An act of plain vandalism, the perpetrators of which should be punished if they could be located. has just come to light in this county.

C. H. Dyar, City Commissioner of Hereford, owns a farm one mile west of Progressive school house. There is a small, unoccupied house on the place. Not so long ago Mr. Dyar put in new windows and otherwise fixed up the place for occupancy. He then boarded up the windows on the outside to save them from possible damage.

Last week Mr. Dyar went out to inspect his property and found that some one had entered the house and kicked or broken out every window pane in it. In some instances even the window frames had been smashed. Mr. Dyar estimes that it will cost him at least $25.00 to repair the damage less

There is no way of telling who pulled this stunt. It might have been small boys whe probably did not realize what they were doing. or it may have been some "drunks" who were in the same condition. At any rate it was a costly experience for Mr. Dyar and one that the light of publicity should he thrown or of the culprits ould be located.

Always a Way to Help Cupid

By AD SCHUSTER

WHEN Lattimer Nyse, artist in the attic, stopped in the hall to talk to Carol Deming, first floor, an instructor in piano, Sally Soomes halted on the stairway hugging herself in delight. Sally was the "lady of all work" in the rooming establishment of Mrs. Byron Driscoll and Sally's pleasure was the pursuit of romance.

Thereafter when she swept the studio of the musician she made reference to artists and to the splendid pictures she saw when she worked in the room up under the skylights.

"You wouldn't believe it, ma'am," she said, "but that Mr. Lattimer can just talk with a paintbrush. That's what it is. He makes the darlingest little cupids you ever saw, and when he has a cow standing down by the water it's so real and artistic with the reflection and all that you can turn it upside down without knowing the difference." She looked at and went on:

"And, yes, ma'am, there's one picture of two old gentlemen playing cards, and you just know pretty soon one is going to cheat. I just know some day I'm going to tip the

And in Latimer's room the privileged Sally talked of music, of a girl who was so kind to the children who came for lessons.

"To see her with those kids, now," she said, "would make you just declare she should have some of her own. And the way she can play the piano. Really, there ain't none of those mechanical ones, no matter how much they cost, can do a bit better."

As the friendship between attic and first floor increased, Sally's heart sang with the joy of matchmaking. It was all her doing, and

Phillips Oils-Good as Phillips 66

N winter a motor oil must circulate I freely and not congeal when your engine is cold. That's what is meant by low "cold test." In summer a motor oil must not vaporize or burn out in your engine. That's what is meant by a high "flash and fire" test. . . Phillips Motor Oils are made for constant and complete year round lubrication of modern high compression motors. They successfully combine the low "cold test" and the high "flash and fire" test. . . There's a grade for your motor -equal in quality to Phillips 66 gasoline.

Controlled Viscosity

Motor oils have a tendency to congeal in winter and to thin out in summer. Yet the temter and to thin out in summer. Yet the tem perature inside the crank case of an engine at high speed is the same in hot or cold weather. Proper Viscosity enables an oil to fully lubricate at all seasons of the year. Phillips, with entirely new refin-ery equipment, is able to control the Viscosity of motor oils for unvary-ing performance the year round.

The Texas Museum.

The bill providing for a state museum appears to have reached the stage where a number of leading cities are getting ready to make bids for its location. Dallas is going to do its best to secure it, and no doubt every other city will put forth as great efforts. The interest shown by San Antonio in the Witt Memorial Museum indicates that that city would give it much helpful support. Many think it should be at Austin and operated there in connection with the University of Texas, where it would be open to the largest student body of the state. A well equipped state museum would afford greatly increased opportunity for many branches of study. The Witt Museum at San Antonio has recently acquired a sizeable collection of African specimens and an additional wing is being considered for housing it and other valuable specimens from Africa that will be presented the Museum when ever space is provided.

Peggy at the Stag Dinner

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

BOBBY was struggling with a refractory tie and muttering strange sounds under his breath, for the hour was advancing, and it was nearly time when he should be arfying at the annual dinner-that amous dinner which had been held every year for the past ten and or which there was an increasing by heavy fine each year for even moment's tardiness.

The other twelve men would be already cooling their heels and wonering whether Bobby Granville would appear or whether he would be fined the one hundred dollars mposed on any one of the thirteen friends who failed to appear for the annual dinner.

The first year the fine for nonappearance was ten dollars and ach year it jumped up another ten. In their early twenties, ten dollars had seemed a lot of money; now in their thirties, the hundred didn't eem quite so bad-still it was mough to be there. Besides, the dinner was a grand and glorious affair and especially as it was the only time during the entire year that some of the friends were able to enjoy a personal meeting.

The telephone rang imperiously as Bobby was slipping into his immaculate dinner coat. A forceful word flew from Bobby's lips as he picked up the receiver.

When he hung it up he looked dejected. Seeing his sister Peggy flitting past his door-a billow of fluffy pink-he shouted to her. "Peggy-you've got to do me a favor tonight. The hospital's just called me up-urgent case-I must No time to get a substitute for the dinner and I can't stand the racket just now of that hundreddollar fine. Hop into your eveing cloak and into a taxi, quick. You've got to be a sport and represent me at that dinner. Be a darling, Peg-they're an awfully decent bunch of men-"

"But, Bobby, it's a stag affair-I should be the only girl-" "Never mind-you can stay only for the soup or fish and then retreat. I just want you to be my proxy-save the fine. Hustlethere's a dear." So Peggy, her cheeks like crimon roses and her eyes like stars, had rushed to do her beloved brother's bidding. She quaked inwardly as she neared the doorway where she knew those twelve men would be gathered to welcome Bobby; but outwardly she was the picture of feminine charm.

When the door of the private dining room opened and the twelve men looked up expecting to see their thirteenth member, there was first a stunned silence, then a swift pushing back of chairs as they one and all rose.

"I-I have come as Bobby Granville's representative," she began haltingly and feeling the ordeal of so much admiration all at once a bit disconcerting. "He suggested that I just sit down and-welltoy with the first course or twothen leave you-to enjoy your dinner in Eveless peace."-

Even the married men of the twelve and those that were nearly in double harness realized the fact that Bobby Granville had played a rather mean trick on them all these years in having concealed a sister like this from them,

John Manners felt it most keenly. He was about the only one of the to the matrimonial yoke. He felt he should like to shake Bobby into an explanation. He, John, had been circling the globe in search of such a wonder woman as this sister of Bobby's and now she was going to be snatched from his grasp after the soup or fish course. "I say," he cried loudly to the eleven men-who were still wonder-A plat how to arrange a somewhat delicate situation, but were all feeling a certain desire to keep this vision in their midst ; "couldn't you a hnrry and get them here for this dinner. Sprint out to the telephone booths and get busy, and I'll speak to the waiters about doubling the places. What do you all say?" "Great head-that's what we all say," came a quick response.

Meanwhile, Peggy stood by and inwardly laughed. Men were certainly amusing creatures. She felt glad that this particular man who had taken the matter in his own hands and was now having a heartto-heart talk with the head waiter had time also for a swift glance in her direction.

It wasn't until he saw the extra chairs being brought in and the table being drawn out to accommodate double the number it had been arranged for that he came to sit be-

It was while a mass of pink flowers was being brought in to decorate the table-flowers that exactly matched the glorious pink of Peggy's frock-that Bobby's sister realized how wonderfully thoughtful some men could be-in fact, John Manners. Would any other have thought of such delicate flattery?

And it wasn't long-at least it didn't seem but a moment to John and Peggy-before wives, fiancees began trooping in to make the room merry and far more lovely to look But John kept a close guard on Peggy and as a matter of fact Peggy didn't mind in the least.

Her entrance to a stag dinner and also to love had been a simultaneous affair.

Our Biggest Debt

Every man owes something to his community besides the payment of his taxes. He owes loyal support to local business institutions and enthusiastic backing to every worthy community enterprise.

This debt to the community we regard as of paramount importance. And we seek to discharge our obligation by supporting local enterprises initiated for the purpose of making Hereford a finer and more prosperous community.
