HISD okays latchkey kids program

By JOHN BROOKS
Managing Editor

The Hereford school board approved Tuesday a pilot latchkey children project to be operated at three Hereford primary schools during the first semester of the 1991-92 school year.

Bettie Dickson, administrator of the Hereford Day Care Center, presented the program to board members Tuesday. She explained that the center cared for 52 students after school last year, but hopes that the program will serve 100 or more students this year.

"We feel the time has come for us to come into the school system and provide after-school care for these children," said Dickson. "We feel that after 21 years of doing business the time is here for us to meet this need in the community."

The program will be available for students up to 13 years old, with fees to be based on a sliding scale yet to be approved by Hereford Day Care directors. Dickson said a probable fee would be around $17.50 per week.

The program will be located at Northwest, Tierra Blanca and Aikman primary schools, and students will be bused from Shirley, Bluebonnet and West Central intermediate schools.

At the beginning of the school year, at least two Hereford Day Care employees will be at each school to help care for the students. Additional help will be hired if the need arises, Dickson said.

Only children who are enrolled in the program through Hereford Day Care will be allowed to participate.

Hereford Day Care and the Hereford schools have reserved the right to review the program at the semester break.

The board also approved a plan to revamp the alternative school program to better meet the educational needs of students placed in the program. The special school will have two full-time teachers that will be fully responsible for each child's educational need, instead of relying on the students' teachers in the regular school setting to provide materials. There will also be a part-time counselor assigned to the program to assist students.

The board also:

--Heard the annual performance report from ServiceMaster, which coordinates the HISD maintenance program.

--Approved school policy updates to coordinate with changes in state law approved by the 72nd Legislature.

--Contracted with First National Bank to serve as the district's repository for the next two years.

--Okayed the juvenile probation office contract.

--Heard presentations from two architectural firms, one of which may be hired for the high school remodeling project.

--Recognized Cathy Guseman and Benny Sapp as employees of the month.

The board, following executive session, accepted the resignations of Shirley School Principal John Dominguez and his wife, Aurora (assistant principal at West Central). They have accepted positions in Amarillo.

Also resigning were Christy Horn, Randy Williams, Eleanor Goen and Luis Zavala.

Employed were Kristi Powell, Rex Burke, John Morrow, Elva Rodriguez, Hilda Fuentes, Tonya James, Brett Stegall and Ruby Emry.

New CED has initial meeting

A new County Education District board of directors, created by the 72nd Texas Legislature, met for the first time Tuesday at the Hereford school administration building.

John Fuston and Dennis Newton, members of the Hereford school board, and Jim Bob Perrin and Ted Eicke, from the Walcott board, are members of the new special district.

The CED was formed for the limited purpose of exercising a portion of the taxing power previously held by the local school boards. The CED, within the next three months, will set a countywide school tax rate, but Hereford and Walcott schools may impose taxes above that rate.

The CED must set a minimum effective tax rate of 72 cents per $100 valuation, which means that the CED must consider the historical rate of collections (about 92 percent) in setting the rate. That means the county tax rate will be higher than 72 cents per $100.

The funds will be split, according to student population, between the Hereford and Walcott school districts.

business for the CED will be an election on August 10. Voters will consider the imposition of taxes on tangible personal property (like automobiles), the exemption of 20 percent of the market value of homes, and the exemption of $10,000 for homes of persons over 65 and disabled persons.

"Voters need to defeat the tangible personal property tax and vote for the other two items," said

Hereford Superintendent Charles Greenawalt.

On the same day, voters will consider two state constitutional amendments, including a provision legalizing the CED election.

Starving countries refuse free MREs

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Pentagon is trying to give away food rations left over from Operation Desert Storm to millions of starving Africans. But it hasn't found many takers for the much-maligned Meals Ready to Eat.

The MREs were never very popular. Three lies in one, complained U.S. troops sent to fight Iraq. Meals Rejected by Ethiopians, was another oft-heard refrain.

But the Ethiopians, it turns out, are among the few who have agreed to take the food. The provisional coalition of rebel groups running the country has accepted 1 million MREs and given them mostly to former soldiers left stranded and hungry by the fall of the government in May, U.S. officials said.

The tiny country of Djibouti has also taken in about 500,000 MREs for Somali and Ethiopian refugees stranded there, although it's unclear whether the food has been distributed, said the officials. All spoke on condition of anonymity.

Attempts to give away another few million MREs stored in Saudi Arabia haven't met with much success - due to a combination of political, religious and bureaucratic hassles.

"We're really disappointed that the relief agencies won't take the food," said Roger Winter, director of the private U.S. Committee for Refugees. "When you're hungry, you'll eat anything."

Sudan, a largely Muslim country where as many as 9.5 million people risk starvation, opposes taking the meals - partly because some contain pork, which is strictly forbidden by Islamic dietary laws.

The United Nations, which is directing relief efforts despite government harassment, held off accepting a shipment of MREs destined for southern Sudan because it worried that distributing the food would create the appearance of American military help for the rebels who control that area, U.S. officials say.

The rebels are mostly Christians and animists who aren't bothered by pork. But U.N. officials say the Sudanese may prefer sorghum - the staple of international relief efforts in the region - to the prepared military meals.

Meanwhile, about 96,000 of the meals destined for southern Sudan are piled up at the airport in Nairobi, Kenya, where they were brought last month by a giant U.S. transport plane, the officials said.

Another two flights of giant C-5 cargo planes scheduled to leave for Kenya Tuesday with MREs, blankets and tents have been suspended until the United Nations decides whether to accept the food, officials said.

Two shipments of surplus food en route to the Kenyan port of Mombasa were also stopped at sea this week, said the officials. Winter's refugee organization had strongly encouraged the Bush administration to offer the surplus food to the countries in the Horn of Africa, where an estimated 15 to 17 million people face starvation.

The Defense Department, for its part, figured that sending the millions of meals from stores in Saudi Arabia to nearby Africa was far cheaper than shipping them home. The Pentagon was stuck with many more meals than it needed for the war, which lasted 43 days, and millions of MREs are stored in Saudi Arabia.

A check conducted by the State Department for the Pentagon, however, found the U.N. relief agencies reluctant to take the food - even though it and the transportation were offered free.

Lottery foes ready for battle

AUSTIN (AP) - Anti-lottery forces are ready for battle against the state-run gambling game if lawmakers consider it during the special session that opens Monday, a gambling opponent says.

"We knew there would be another attempt," said Phil Strickland, director of the Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission.

"I do not know of any attrition in our votes. I don't know of any votes that we've lost since the regular session. We may even have gained a few," he said.

House Speaker Gib Lewis this week said that a lottery, combined with sweeping spending cuts recommended by Comptroller John Sharp's audit of all agencies, would help close a $4.7 billion gap projected between the 1992-93 income and estimated government spending.

And while past lottery proposals repeatedly died in the House, Lewis said he would "push for it very hard" in the special session that begins Monday.

A spokesman for Gov. Ann Richards said Tuesday that should the Legislature need to raise more money to pay for the next state budget, she again will back a lottery.

"Once (spending) cuts and (agency) consolidations are done, if we still are looking for revenue, the lottery is an awfully good way to do that," said Chuck McDonald, the governor's deputy press secretary.

"And that will be included as one of the revenue measures to look at."

"We'd like very much to see a constitutional amendment passed by the Legislature to put the issue before a vote of the people," he said.

According to the comptroller's latest estimates, a lottery approved by voters in November could begin operations in July 1992. It would bring in $475.1 million during the two-year budget cycle ending Aug. 31, 1993.

When fully operational, a lottery is estimated to earn the state more than $1 billion annually, said Andy Welch, the comptroller's director of tax information.

Lottery opponents argue, however, that a lottery is a bad way to raise money. It encourages people to gamble, and it takes money out of the economy that otherwise would buy goods and services, they say.

Strickland said he doesn't believe that the Legislature's budget problems will be enough of a lever to win passage.

"They're certainly attempting to use the budget crisis as a lottery lever. But it doesn't make a good lever because there are not enough dollars in it to even begin to solve the budget needs," he said.

Texas is the nation's largest state without a lottery. But public opinion polls repeatedly have shown large majorities favoring the gambling game.

Despite an unprecedented gubernatorial push, which included Richards' testimony to legislative committees, lottery backers failed during the regular legislative session to find enough support for a constitutional amendment on lottery.

The House voted 90-56 for the game, but 100 "yes" votes were needed.

Eclipse watchers gear for Thursday

TROPIC OF CANCER, Mexico (AP) - Bob and June Hoover are eclipse-chasers - a special breed of thrill-seeker with telescopes under their arms and poetry in their hearts.

They are first-timers, who planned four years and traveled 973 miles from their home in Vista, Calif., to reach a remote spot on the edge of the Pacific Ocean near the Tropic of Cancer.

Thousands have converged on the rugged mountains and remote beaches of Baja California Sur, where sky and sea are a dazzling blue.

The 1991 eclipse of the sun will be one of the longest - nearly seven minutes, the maximum - and most widely viewed in history.

It will darken a path 160 miles wide and 6,000 miles long from the western Pacific to Brazil by way of Hawaii, Mexico, Central America and Colombia.

Hoover, a 52-year-old retired Navy officer, said their big thrill should come shortly after 11 a.m. local time (1 p.m. EDT) Thursday, when the shadow of the moon turns the bright desert day into night.

"We wanted to see this curtain of red light sweeping across the sea, followed by a curtain of darkness," he said, flinging his arm out toward the crashing breakers.

He looked at his wife and smiled broadly.

"And then we're going to be standing in the cool shadow of the moon."

June Hoover, 56, recalled when their journey began - four years ago.

"I was looking across the breakfast table at Bob and I said: Why don't we drive to Baja and see the eclipse?"

Baja's clear skies and relative proximity made it the obvious choice.

"We don't have any money to speak of," Hoover said. "So our first problem was how would we get here and where would we stay."

Thursday's Eclipse

The eclipse begins at 11:49 p.m. Thursday.
The peak time for the eclipse in Hereford is 2:30 p.m.
The eclipse will end at 4:15 p.m.

He constructed a camper on their old Datsun pickup from scratch. It took him almost a year.

They scraped, saved, planned, packed. Finally, on June 24, they pulled out of their driveway in Vista, north of San Diego.

Six days later they were nestled in the midst of a stark landscape that could be on the moon, except for the cactus.

They are having the time of their life.

"The watch, the bra and the makeup went right away," Mrs. Hoover said with a laugh.

Unfortunately, so did the antenna for the ham radio Hoover planned to use to chat with eclipse-watchers worldwide. He replaced it with automotive wire strung up a bamboo pole.

They stare in delight at the stars and planets every night.

They saw tiny Mercury for the first time in their lives on their first night.

"Tonight we're looking for Uranus and Neptune," said Mrs. Hoover.

On the other side of the peninsula, on the rim of the Sea of Cortez, old eclipse hand Roger Tuthill watches the sky turn pink and the waves turn gold.

HOUSTON - Gov. Ann Richards says an increasingly conservative Supreme Court will be out of the American mainstream, but reminded delegates to the NAACP convention that they can keep government in line through the ballot box. Richards Tuesday praised retiring U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall.

AUSTIN - Travis County officials said they hope hazing sentences given four former University of Texas fraternity members, along with three fraternities, will help reform what's been called "the most troublesome fraternal system in the state or the nation."

AUSTIN - As the Africanized honey bee population spreads in Texas, it's important for people to learn about the aggressive insect, an expert with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service says. The so-called "killer" bees may make their way to Corpus Christi this fall and San Antonio next year, said entomologist John Thomas.

DALLAS - TRW Inc.'s giant credit agency violated consumer privacy and made mistakes that harmed credit ratings of thousands of consumers, six states charged in lawsuits filed in Dallas and New York. The plaintiffs alleged TRW sometimes combined the credit histories of people with similar names and that such inaccuracies are hard to correct.

WASHINGTON - A Senate Appropriations subcommittee has voted to dispatch additional immigration inspectors to the Southwest border, where Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says traffic has been slowed to snail's pace. The panel voted to set aside nearly $6 million next year to hire an additional 135 INS inspectors, including 44 for ports of entry in Texas.

Name change will not alter state ban

BATTLE CREEK, Mich. (AP) - Kellogg Co. has bowed to pressure to take the "heart" out of its controversial Heartwise cereal.

But Texas officials say the company's decision to change the cereal's name to Fiberwise probably isn't enough reason to lift a statewide ban of the product, in place since last fall.

The name change comes at the urging of the Food and Drug Administration, which discourages the use of the word "heart" in brand names.

The controversy over the cereal also involves its main ingredient, psyllium, a soluble fiber used in laxatives. The FDA is studying Kellogg's claims that psyllium in cereal is safe and can reduce elevated cholesterol levels. No ruling has been made yet.

Assistant Texas Attorney General Stephen Gardner said Tuesday that the cereal's allegedly misleading name was only one of the factors in the state's decision to pull the product from store shelves last fall. A federal judge in Texas ruled against Kellogg in April in its attempts to have the ban lifted.

"The name was the nail in the coffin, not the only leg that the coffin was standing on," Gardner said Tuesday. He said the state is awaiting results of the FDA's review of psyllium.

The high-fiber plant product has been known to cause severe allergic reactions, though the company says only a tiny percentage of the population is at risk.

Boxes now contain an allergy advisory, specifically aimed at health care providers who may have developed a sensitivity from previous exposure to psyllium dust.

"Our health department has continuing problems about the presence of a laxative in a cereal," Gardner said. "We'll defer to the FDA decision, but we're unwilling to defer to Kellogg's own selfish mercantile motives."

Kellogg points to independent scientific research that says psyllium is safe for use in cereal.

"We are committed to this excellent product and are convinced that it can make a significant contribution to a low-fat, high-soluble fiber diet," William LaMothe, Kellogg's chairman and chief executive officer, said in a statement Tuesday.

Kellogg said the marketing of the product and its formulation would remain the same. The name will be changed when supplies of Heartwise run out. Consumers may begin seeing the new name on store shelves in two to three weeks.

FDA spokesman Jeff Nesbit said the agency was pleased with the name change because it "sends a signal to the rest of the food industry" about the need for proper labeling.

Kellogg spokesman Joseph Stewart said the name change was not in response to Texas' "ridiculous" lawsuit against Kellogg, which contends the company misrepresented the product by advertising it as a cholesterol fighter. Kellogg has filed a countersuit against the state of Texas and against Gardner, specifically, for slander.

"Maybe a name change will give it a kick. Kellogg probably doesn't have anything to lose," said John McMillin, a food analyst for Prudential-Bache Securities of New York.

"Maybe this is a product that's ahead of its time and Kellogg sees some payback down the road," McMillin said. "But I don't see it on the road I'm looking at."

Confirmation threatened

WASHINGTON (AP) - A former CIA official's guilty plea in the Iran-Contra scandal could pose new dangers to the confirmation of Robert Gates, President Bush's nominee to head the spy agency.

With hearings on Gates' nomination tentatively scheduled to begin Monday, the Senate Intelligence Committee was scouring court documents connected with the guilty plea by Alan Fiers for information that could link Gates more closely to the operation than he has admitted.

"Gates can get confirmed, but it's going to be rough," said one administration strategist familiar with the congressional mood. "Right now, there is some slippage" in support for the nominee, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Recent developments, including Fiers' plea Tuesday, are "feeding the anxiety level" of lawmakers who do not want to confirm Gates and later be blamed for overlooking some serious issue that would make him unqualified for the job, said the source.

Government prosecutors said Fiers has told them that he and at least three other top agency officials besides then-Director William Casey knew by mid-1986 about the diversion of funds to aid Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

Fiers pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court to two misdemeanor counts of unlawfully withholding information from Congress.

Gates, who was then Casey's top deputy, has denied knowing of the operation run by Oliver North until much later. But Fiers' testimony is an indication that institutional knowledge of the affair was much more widespread, and that officials just above and below Gates on the CIA ladder knew about the diversion.

Gates told congressional investigators that he and other agency officials studiously avoided learning about North's operation so they could not be later accused of violating a congressional ban on aiding the Contras.

Any hint that Gates misled Congress about his knowledge of the affair could damage his chances for confirmation. But members of the Senate Intelligence Committee contacted Tuesday said it was too early to predict what would happen.

It was the taint of Iran-Contra that caused Gates to withdraw his name the last time he was nominated to head the CIA, in 1987.

"A lot more information has come onto the record since the last time he was before the committee," said Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., who promised tough questioning in a number of areas. "Clearly there are more things we have got to know."

"There's no question there'll be some long knives out," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. But he said he believed that after tough questioning, Gates would be confirmed.

Governor praises Marshall

HOUSTON (AP) - Gov. Ann Richards says an increasingly conservative Supreme Court will be out of the American mainstream, but reminded delegates to the NAACP convention that they can keep government in line through the ballot box.

Richards, in a speech Tuesday to the 82nd convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, praised retiring U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall and described how his civil rights efforts changed Texas.

President Bush's nomination of black conservative appeals court Judge Clarence Thomas last week has been a major topic of discussion this week at the convention.

But leaders of the nation's largest and oldest civil rights group have delayed any endorsement or opposition to the nomination until they can speak with Thomas and complete research on his background.

"Thurgood Marshall is a man who stood in the flow of history and changed its course," Richards said. "He changed the United States of America. He changed Texas. When I was a child, he won the case that allowed African-Americans to vote in primaries in the state of Texas."

"Legal walls of segregation fell before the weight of his intellect and his commitment. And you and I stand today on higher ground that was cleared by Thurgood Marshall," she added.

"If the Supreme Court turns to the far, far right, it will have chosen a lonely course, far away from the mainstream of America. And we will entrust our case to the higher court of the ballot box in this country."

"Only through the casting of ballots do you ever really change anything," Richards said.

Asked by reporters later if she had problems with the Thomas nomination, she replied: "Fortunately I'm not in a position to have to deal with that."

U.S. Rep. Craig Washington, D-Houston, did not hedge his feelings about Thomas.

"In my judgment, Clarence Thomas isn't fit to shine the shoes of Thurgood Marshall," Washington said to a standing ovation of NAACP delegates.

In her address, Richards reminded the delegates that fundamentally the government is run by the Congress as elected officials "and the power of the people to determine the course of this country is directly related to their ability to organize voters and get them to the polls."

She touted her appointments of minorities to the governing boards of the University of Texas and Texas A&M University, to many state regulatory commissions and to other top state jobs.

But she complained about national domestic problems, saying that a country that has achieved world leadership can't provide health care and that the breakup of the traditional American family can be blamed on economic woes.

"The only thing holding the middle class together is a two-paycheck family," she said.

Economic hopes rise with lift of sanctions

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - The South Africans may be back in the Olympics as early as 1992, but their full return to the international scene is likely to take a bit longer even with the lifting of U.S. trade sanctions.

Political violence, uncertainty over the outcome of reforms and recession reduce the chances of an economic boom, business leaders said Tuesday amid reports resident Bush was about to lift the United States' 1986 sanctions law.

The law's repeal would be a huge confidence booster for South African businessmen, whose country has been off-limits to most foreign investors since the mid-1980s.

It would be doubly beneficial when combined with Tuesday's decision by the International Olympic Committee to readmit South Africa to Olympic competition after a 21-year ban.

"The end of U.S. sanctions will send the whole world a message that the South African government is meeting its commitments," said Ron Haywood, deputy director general of the South African Chamber of Business.

The long-term effects - investments, the return of major businesses such as Exxon, which left in the 1980s, and substantial increases in trade - will take longer, said Wayne Mitchell of the American Chamber of Commerce.

The end of sanctions should make it easier to attract capital, but with political violence raging in black townships, and uncertainty over the country's political future, investors who left might be hesitant to rush back.

Even after the sanctions law was adopted, the United States remained one of South Africa's leading trade partners. The two countries exchange more than $3 billion worth of goods each year, and South Africa's economy, while steeped in recession, is the strongest on the continent.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: This is the fourth letter I've written to you and I am going to mail it. The others I tore up. I am desperate.

I was a widow for eight years, content with my accounting job, my home and my only granddaughter. That's all I thought I needed until this man came into my life. If there is such a thing as love at first sight that's what happened to us. This man is 20 years my senior and extremely handsome.

We dated for a year. He lived out of state and I flew nearly every weekend to see him in South Carolina, and stayed in his home. When we were apart, he called every night to tell me how much he loved me.

When he asked me to marry him, I was thrilled. I sold my home and moved to Charleston. After a year of honeymooning, I wanted to go to work. He said absolutely no, so now I am stuck at home with no car and no money.

If my girlfriends ask me to join them for lunch, I must make up an excuse because I'm ashamed to tell them I have no money to eat out. I gave the money from the sale of my home to my husband to invest, and I haven't seen a penny of it since. Whenever I bring up the subject of the $85,000 investment, he leaves the room.

If I ask him for money to go to the grocery store, he tells me to make a list and he'll get whatever I need. Keep in mind that for 20 years I was an accountant, but now suddenly I'm not bright enough to buy groceries.

When I told him how unhappy I was, he said, "If you don't like the arrangement, get out and go back home." What home? I don't know what to do, Ann. I feel hurt, stranded and betrayed. Sign my letter—trapped in Charleston

DEAR TRAPPED: This sudden personality change suggests that your husband might have a neurological problem. Call his doctor and tell him what you have told me and ask him to please look into this.

If your husband has no doctor or if he checks out OK in the upper story, suggest counseling. If he refuses, find a lawyer who will take your case on a contingency basis, which means no fee, but he or she will take a percentage of whatever you recover. Sue for divorce and the $85,000 you gave him. Good luck. You're going to need it.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I am deaf. If you print this letter, please don't edit it to read "hearing impaired." I hate the term. I, like many members of the deaf population, am proud to call myself Deaf -- with a capital D.

I have never been battered, but if it should happen, I would be unable to use the phone number you recently printed for the Domestic Violence Hotline (1-800-333-safe). There is also a TDD number (Telecommunications Device for the Deaf) for those who are deaf or speech impaired. It is 1-800-873-6363. Like the voice number, this one is staffed 24 hours a day, every day of the year.

I am concerned for the plight of battered wives who cannot, for whatever reason, communicate with a standard phone.

Ann, next time you mention a hotline number, please take a moment to find out if there is also one for those who rely on the TDD to communicate. Thanks. -- A.S., Gallaudet University, Washington

DEAR A.S.: Thanks a million for all the people you helped today, but it should be made clear that special telephone equipment is required in order to use the TDD.

HOUSTON (AP) - Anna Maria Horsford, who played Thelma on the just-canceled NBC sitcom "Amen," says the series provided good role models. And she decried the lack of good roles for black women.

"You see a grown black man relating to a grown daughter - not only relating to her, but protecting her, loving her," the actress said of the series, in which Sherman Hemsley played her father.

She was part of a panel discussion on blacks in entertainment Tuesday at the annual gathering of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"You always hear, 'Black women are strong,'" she said. "So how come we're not worthy of a television show or a television movie? How come all these young black men putting out movies have no women in them? Why is there no salute to your mother, your aunt, the woman who raised you and 11 others with no man around?"

Plainview passes Hereford in third

Hereford got one big scoring inning but couldn't score in any of the other innings and bowed to Plainview 8-4 in a West Texas Summer Baseball League game Tuesday at Whiteface Field.

Plainview opened the scoring with two in the top of the second, but Hereford answered with four runs in the bottom to take an early 4-2 lead. Tab Hathaway and Ralph Holguin started the inning with singles. Hathaway scored on a passed ball and, with two outs, Holguin came home as Jake Head reached on the first baseman's error. Vince Castillo walked, and he and Head went to second and third on another passed ball. Rene Cano followed with a hard-hit single toward the left field gap, plating both runners.

Plainview, however, tied the score at 4-4 in the top of the third, and scored two each in the fourth and fifth for the win.

Hereford continued its recent trend of success with various pickoff plays. Pitcher Richard Rodriguez picked two runners off first, and the infield combined to nail a runner at the plate who broke from third while another runner was in a run-down between first and second.

"All we were doing was setting the runner up at the plate, and the players worked it perfectly," Coach Bill Watts said.

The team will play several games Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Plainview Tournament. Then they play four games on the road in the next few weeks before finishing up at home July 30 against Coronado.

Foreman may fight Tyson or Holyfield

NEW YORK (AP) - At first George Foreman appeared to be a pawn in the machinations surrounding an Evander Holyfield-Mike Tyson fight, a match many people want to see.

The thinking went that each side was using a threatened fight against Foreman as a negotiating weapon.

If Foreman is a joker in this high-stakes game, however, the joker is not only wild, he's the trump card.

Instead of being used, Foreman is primed to take advantage of the widening gap between Don King, who promotes Tyson, and Dan Duva, who promotes the champion Holyfield.

"My style right now is a Tyson match," the 42-year-old Foreman said Tuesday. "I've already fought Holyfield. I said even before the Holyfield fight that I wanted to fight Tyson because of his style. He's more or less aggressive, and that's why I'd like to fight him."

Foreman's second-round knockout of Joe Frazier for the heavyweight title in 1973 remains fresh in his mind.

It appears, however, that instead of fighting Tyson, Foreman will get a rematch with Holyfield, who scored a 12-round unanimous decision over him April 19 at Atlantic City, N.J. The rematch would be Nov. 8 at Caesars Palace.

Holyfield wobbled Foreman on occasion, but Big George is not about to be moved by rhetoric - and it appears King has overplayed his hand.

"Hey brother, 'Let's do it, we don't need anybody else,' is the way Foreman described King's pitch for a Tyson-Foreman fight.

Foreman said he needs advisor Ron Weathers and Bob Arum, who played important roles in his comeback from a 10-year retirement, to be involved in any fight he has.

"I just can't drop these guys," he said. "I'm not going to do that. I can't say give me $20 million and forget Arum. When I came back, a lot of people said Arum was using George. 'What a flesh peddler,' they said. 'Arum took a lot of heat.'

"If they call me and say 'We're going that way (to a Holyfield rematch),' I wouldn't say no."

"That's correct," Arum said Tuesday at a news conference for another fight when asked if he thought a Holyfield-Foreman rematch was likely.

"We didn't come this far with George Foreman to have his image ruined by King spouting racial stuff and nonsensical rhetoric in his promotion."

Foreman could make more money fighting Tyson than Holyfield, but Arum said Foreman would do almost as well by fighting a tuneup bout on HBO, then challenging for the title again on TVKO. Both HBO and TVKO are Time-Warner companies.

YMCA softball starts soon

The Hereford YMCA's summer softball league for men will start play Monday.

The league will play an eight-game season, followed by a tournament to determine the league champion. Games will be played Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at 6:15 and 7:25 p.m.

The league is open to the first 12 teams which pay the entry fee: $8 for each YMCA member, $24 for non-member, or $200 for a sponsor for a whole team. The sign-up deadline is 6 p.m. Thursday.

Ripken's homer lifts AL, 4-3

TORONTO (AP) - OK, now it's the American League's turn to gloat just a little.

It took nearly 30 years, but it seems safe to say the AL has something going here after beating the National League 4-2 Tuesday night for its fourth straight All-Star victory.

Let's say a trend is developing. "Hey, Tony La Russa is serious about this," Toronto's Joe Carter said of the AL manager. "This is not just an exhibition game. He doesn't like to lose."

There was a time when all the AL did was lose, lose and lose some more in this game. That's when guys like Willie Mays, Hank Aaron and Roberto Clemente were leading the way. The NL had power, speed and pitching. It was high-tech baseball.

The AL? They waited to see if Harmon Killebrew or Frank Howard would hit a homer. It was hard to play hit-and-run with those guys.

The NL won 19 of 20 All-Star games from 1963-82, including 11 in a row. It was more or less an NL convention.

"The National League was winning every year so they were going out and think they were going to win," said Tony Gwynn, the NL's starting center fielder. "Now the American League has that attitude. They're playing more intense. Maybe they just got mad. Now it's their turn."

While the NL has lost its big boppers of the past, the AL won the game by sending up three potential Hall of Famers in the third inning against loser Dennis Martinez. It was as simple as that, really.

With one out and the NL leading 1-0, Rickey Henderson and Wade Boggs singled. Cal Ripken followed with a 416-foot homer to center field. That's all La Russa and his talented bullpen needed.

Even the rather docile capacity crowd of 52,383 at the SkyDome seemed to get a charge out of Ripken's rising liner.

"It's Cal Ripken's world and I'm just passing through," said Boggs, a .346 lifetime hitter.

Ripken, the All-Star MVP, was indeed a big hit at the SkyDome for the All-Star festivities. He hit 12 of the AL's 20 homers in the Home Run Derby on Monday.

"I was concerned being in the home run derby," said Ripken, who leads the AL with a .348 average.

The NL pulled to 3-2 in the fourth inning on Andre Dawson's home run and had a chance to tie it in the sixth when another future Hall of Famer made a big defensive play.

With runners on first and third and one out, Paul O'Neill hit a grounder to Cecil Fielder at first. Will Clark broke for home and was called out when 43-year-old catcher Carlton Fisk blocked the plate, took the throw and made a two-handed tag. It was the kind of textbook play a guy like Johnny Bench used to make for the other guys.

"I think the manager over the last four years has made the difference as for how the players motivate themselves," Fisk said of Tom Kelly, the winning manager in 1988, and La Russa.

La Russa, as everyone has come to know, loves a deep bullpen and he has used the best relievers his league can offer to become the first manager to win three consecutive All-Star games. For this one, he let Jeff Reardon, Rick Aguilera and Dennis Eckersley preserve the victory for Toronto's Jimmy Key.

For those not counting, Reardon, Aguilera and Eckersley have combined for 66 saves this season. Bryan Harvey, who has 22 saves, didn't even get into the game.

This is La Russa's version of high-tech baseball.

"I watched the National League for a couple of years as a coach," La Russa said. "I watched them tonight, they get their runners started. I mean they're not standing there, waiting for someone to swing. They're here to play baseball and I think that's the way it should be."

Business as usual for All-Star MVP

TORONTO (AP) - Cal Ripken was in his usual place at shortstop. In the third inning, the ball shooting off his bat landed in a familiar place - over the outfield wall.

The power that has put him on a career-high home run pace produced enough runs to lead the American League to a 4-2 victory Tuesday night and earn Ripken the most valuable player award at the All-Star game.

He singled in the first, then hit a three-run homer off former Baltimore teammate Dennis Martinez that erased a 1-0 National League lead.

"I've been swinging the bat very well of late and I think that's the key - coming into the game hot," Ripken said. "I hit the ball very hard (Tuesday) night and I was pretty sure the home run was out.

"When you get a few hits and a homer it's a lot easier to have fun. I hit a breaking ball out of the ballpark. To be honest, I wasn't looking for it. I was just telling myself to relax and see the ball."

Ripken, who has played 1,489 consecutive games for the Orioles, leads the American League with a .348 average and 111 hits. He has 18 homers, three behind league leaders Jose Canseco and Cecil Fielder.

In each of his nine full seasons, he has hit between 21 and 28 homers. At his current pace, he should hit 35. A different batting stance may have helped increase his power.

"I just spread out a little bit and flexed my knees. It allows me to wait for the ball and use my hands more," he said.

Ripken, 30, hasn't taken a day off since the 1982 season. His strong hitting - whether it be in a regular-season game, All-Star contest or even a home-run derby - misses only an occasional game.

In Monday's home-run hitting exhibition, Ripken slammed an amazing 12 balls over the fence in 22 attempts. The American League won the power show 20-7.

"I'd like to think" the home-run derby helped him Tuesday night, Ripken said. "I was concerned being in the home run derby, period. You can get yourself into bad habits" by swinging for the fences.

Ripken grounded into a forceout in the fifth inning and finished the game with two hits in three at bats. Ozzie Guillen pinch-hit for him in the seventh inning.

It was an unusual respite for Ripken, who has a shot at breaking Lou Gehrig's major league record of playing in 2,130 consecutive games.

The streak "is just something that's happened from a desire to go out and play every day," Ripken said. "If (the record) happens it will be great."

South Africa approved for Olympic competition

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) - Ostracized for decades by the world sporting community, South Africa has been welcomed back into the Olympic fold and given the chance to compete in the 1992 Games.

But South Africa's top sports official says he doesn't want to rush back into international competition too soon. He rules out participating in the Winter Games at Albertville, France, in February and dismisses talk of competing in the world track championships at Tokyo next month.

U.S. surprises Mexico in soccer tournament

MEXICO CITY (AP) - Bewilderment led quickly to embarrassment and then sheer anger: Mexico lost to the United States in soccer.

In the nation's newspapers, on television and over the radio, commentators and fans searched frantically for answers to Mexico's shocking 2-0 loss Friday in the semifinals of the Gold Cup in Los Angeles.

Words like "failure," "collapse" and "disaster" filled the headlines and the airwaves.

Mexico had been favored to win the tournament, which included teams from Central America and the Caribbean.

Instead, an upstart U.S. team went on to win the tournament Sunday by defeating Honduras in an overtime victory. Mexico took third place in a bittersweet win over Costa Rica.

Word that coach Manuel Lapuente had resigned leaked out even before the team returned to Mexico City.

Lapuente, widely blamed for poor preparation of the team, has been unreachable.

Mexico's players, meanwhile, could not hide the shame of their defeat by a country with no heritage as a soccer power.

"Against the United States, I can only say that we were obligated to win," said Jose Manuel de la Torre.

De la Torre and others had expected an easy victory over the United States.

During the 1990 World Cup in Italy, the U.S. team was game but mediocre, leading many Mexicans to chuckle at the prospects of a U.S. team hosting the famous tournament in 1994.

But people aren't laughing anymore.

"We lost to a team that prepared very well," said forward Luis Roberto Alves Zagui. "We have no excuses to justify our defeat."

Blame for the defeat was also laid on Mexico's best soccer players, Hugo Sanchez and Manuel Negrete, both of whom skipped the tournament.

Sanchez, Mexico's undisputed soccer star, spends much of the year playing in the Spanish league for the team Real Madrid. Currently at home in Mexico City, Sanchez told reporters before the tournament that he is recovering from a knee injury.

Lapuente and Sanchez, though, were not the only ones singled out for blame.

The directors of the Mexican Soccer Federation, Emilio Maurer and Francisco Ibarra, were repeatedly lambasted by the press.

"Maurer and Ibarra are going to have to give extensive explanations for Mexico's embarrassing loss in Gold Cup," wrote Enrique Vera Vazquez, the well-known soccer writer for the newspaper El Universal.

Some also blamed the fans, mostly Americans of Mexican heritage, who filled the Rose Bowl for the U.S.-Mexico game.

"In the beginning, they supported us. But later on, they turned to the United States," said mid-fielder Efrain Herrera. "Traitors is the only word for them."

While nursing its pride, Mexico's squad will spend the next few months preparing for a European tournament, where it hopes to regain its stature as one of world's finer teams.

And they are already looking forward to redemption at the 1994 World Cup to be played in the United States.

Former Texas Tech gridder arrested on drug charges

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) - When Larry Flowers left Texas Tech, he left a successful collegiate football career behind and looked forward to promising years in the NFL.

He met with only mediocre results in the professional ranks, and the plunge in his personal life was bared Tuesday when he was indicted with two law officers on charges of operating a cocaine distribution ring.

Authorities say the conspiracy began in August 1986. Flowers was not re-signed to an NFL contract for the 1986 season, and prosecutors said there were no allegations that other players were involved in the drug ring either as sellers or users.

The law officers were a policeman and a detective with the Lodi Police Department. They were arrested with Flowers and three other people Tuesday morning.

"Traditionally, athletes and police officers have stood on a pedestal as heroes and role models for young people," said U.S. Attorney Michael Chertoff. "That pedestal is destroyed when sports figures and police officers use, or traffic in, illegal drugs."

Flowers was a top prospect when he left Texas Tech, where he was an All-Southwest Conference selection in his junior and senior years. He was selected by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in the fourth round of the NFL draft in 1980, was released that same year and was picked up by the New York Giants.

He stayed with the Giants as a special teams player and occasional free safety before being released in 1985. The New York Jets picked him up in the middle of the season, but waived him during the 1986 training camp. He had recently lost his job as a bakery delivery man and was living in a motor hotel when he was arrested, according to prosecutors.

Charged with Flowers were Gary Bigica, 30, a police officer; Chris Kimbiz, 28, a police detective; Paul Cammareri, 37, the manager of Modern Bakery in Lodi; Gary Kalish, 30; and Kenneth Devoe, 30.

All are from Lodi except Devoe and Flowers, who lived in Elmwood Park.

U.S. Magistrate Ronald Hedges set bail for Cammareri at $100,000. The rest had bail set at $50,000, and the law officers were ordered to hand their guns over to superiors.

Only Flowers needed a court-appointed attorney. He told the magistrate he had no money or assets. He has four children living in Texas and has been unable to meet child support payments, he said.

Under the conspiracy as outlined by prosecutors, Flowers, Kalish and Devoe delivered cocaine to Cammareri, who supplied the drug to the Lodi policemen and others.

The indictment says more than 500 grams of cocaine was involved, but prosecutors would not give a more precise figure.

Bergen County Prosecutor John Fahy said Flowers had been brought in to family court early Tuesday morning for failure to keep up child support payments. He was arrested on the drug charges at the courthouse.

Flowers is charged with conspiracy to distribute drugs, distribution, using a telephone in the course of the crime and traveling in interstate commerce during the crime.

He faces up to 69 years in prison and more than $3 million in fines if convicted of all charges.

Breakaway bases being tried

ELIZABETHTOWN, Pa. (AP) - More and more softball and baseball leagues are using Roger Hall's detachable base, but the Pennsylvania inventor figures he won't be home free until the majors give it a try.

Hall, a former baseball coach at Elizabethtown College, developed the Rogers Break Away Base that separates from its foundation when baserunners risk injury on a slide that's too fast or too poor.

"It's tough to be playing sandlot when you know you're supposed to be in the big leagues," Hall said, describing his lot in life. "If I get major league backing, or get in Omaha, who knows what will happen."

A University of Michigan study found the use of Hall's bases reduced injuries 96 percent during a three-year test and a sports medicine group found even better results among minor-league teams. Still, Hall is finding the big leagues and the NCAA balking at his safety feature.

"It happens everyday; someone gets busted up," Hall said. "You have pro players getting hurt under ideal conditions, and then you have millions of Americans playing ball on potholed fields."

In 1989, Michigan found that base-sliding accounted for 71 percent of all recreational softball injuries and the Centers for Disease Control estimated that more than 1.7 million sliding injuries occur each year.

"The concentration of injuries resulting from this one activity make it a likely candidate for rules changes, better training or modifications in the design of bases as a means to reduce softball injuries," Michigan researcher David Janda wrote in 1989 at the end of the study.

Outlawing sliding would be impossible and instructing millions of players on safe sliding would be impractical, the institute wrote. It recommended modifying bases.

Janda, now with the Institute for Preventative Sports Medicine in Ann Arbor, Mich., found that in 1,174 slides among six minor-league teams last season, the base popped off only 13 times.

"The general managers and players all believed that the player would have been hurt in each of those cases if the base hadn't separated," Janda said Tuesday.

Hall's anchoring system is the same as a one-piece base, with a square metal rod fitted into a buried foundation. The difference is that the top is attached to a plate with rubber grommets.

Eight grommets are used for youth league bases, a dozen for teen leagues, 16 for adult leagues and 20 for advanced or professional players. The higher the number of grommets, the tighter the base is held.

The Fayetteville (N.C.) Generals, a Class A team of the Detroit Tigers, installed the bases last year.

The bases were scheduled to be used at College World Series this year, but the NCAA championships committee wouldn't approve the change, Hall said.

Little League is responsible for safer catcher's equipment, helmets for first-base coaches and face protectors for batters. It plans to use Rogers' bases at its World Series next month.

Bowl alliance narrows field

ATLANTA (AP) - The final cog in a four-bowl alliance that could provide a national championship football game is only a conference call away.

Gene Corrigan, commissioner of the Atlantic Coast Conference, said Tuesday the coalition of three bowls, two conferences and Notre Dame was expected to name the fourth bowl in the mix this afternoon following a conference call vote.

Already in the alliance are the Cotton, Orange and Sugar Bowls, along with the ACC, the Big East Conference and Notre Dame.

It is believed the group narrowed its choice to either the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., or the Citrus Bowl in Orlando, Fla., after hearing hour-long presentations from five bowls on Tuesday.

"The field obviously narrowed down," Corrigan said, adding that no vote was taken because "straw votes end up being votes and somebody talks."

Clause in Ewing's contract causing trouble

NEW YORK (AP) - Patrick Ewing, his agent and the New York Knicks aren't the only ones with a stake in Ewing's contract dispute.

The July 22 arbitrating hearing concerning Ewing's salary ranking stems from a clause in his contract that allows him to become a restricted free agent this summer if he's not at least the fourth highest-paid player in the NBA.

David Robinson of the San Antonio Spurs has a similar clause in his contract, only better.

"We're watching the Ewing situation with interest because it will impact on what will happen next year," said Jeff Austin, one of the agents representing Robinson under the Advantage International umbrella. The contract, signed in 1987 shortly after Robinson left the U.S. Naval Academy, says that he can become a restricted free agent after the 1991-92 season and for four years after that if he is not among the two highest-paid players.

The Spurs can retain his services only by paying Robinson the average of the two top salaries in the NBA.

With huge raises for Larry Bird, Clyde Drexler and others kicking in over the next few years, Robinson stands to make millions of dollars more than the $2.3 million he made last season.

Advantage International is one of the heavy hitters among the agencies representing NBA players. Advantage has 16 NBA clients, second only to ProServ, which has 32 players on NBA rosters.

The pivotal offseason in Ewing's contract is happening this summer, the sixth year of his 10-year contract.

Ewing's agent, David Falk, could be poised to file collusion charges against the Knicks and possibly other teams if he loses in arbitration, claiming they conspired to keep Ewing's salary in the No. 4 position.

According to the New York Times, the Knicks are prepared to claim tampering by the Golden State Warriors, who reportedly planned to pay Chris Mullin more so that Ewing would become a free agent.

The Times, quoting an anonymous source, reported in Tuesday's editions that Falk may have tried to convince the Warriors to restructure Mullin's contract in order to help his client.

The newspaper quoted the source as saying they believe Falk convinced the Warriors to raise Mullin's salary for next season to $3.2 million. That would bump Ewing to fifth on the salary list and make him a restricted free agent.

"We took a look at revising Chris' contract and decided not to participate," Warriors president Dan Finnane was quoted as saying in Wednesday's editions of the Times. "The language in Ewing's contract was common knowledge around the league. We were interested in Ewing, but after looking at it, we decided not to do it."

Officially, the Knicks are declining to comment until the arbitration hearing.

"We've said all we can say on the matter," Knicks spokesman John Cirillo said. "Our legal and financial people and the league counsel say that Patrick is among the top four highest-paid players and we hope that will be confirmed in arbitration. There is no rancor between the two sides, and we're looking forward to a resolution."

According to the Times, Ewing's representatives believe the Warriors might have decided against the contract change because of collusion with the Knicks. But Finnane said he's surprised the team has been caught in the middle of a strange situation.

"All we know is what's been written in the papers because the Knicks haven't called us and the league hasn't called us," Finnane said Tuesday. "All we did was take a look at revising Chris Mullin's contract and decided not to."

John "Hot Rod" Williams of Cleveland, Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon and Michael Jordan of Chicago are known to have salaries higher than Ewing's scheduled pay of $3,138,000 next season. Falk has claimed there was a fourth player, and has filed for arbitration.

Bird will make $7.7 million from the Boston Celtics next season, but nearly $5 million of that is a signing bonus, and signing bonuses reportedly are not counted in Ewing's contract to determine if a player's salary is higher than his.

Cowboys skip workouts

IRVING, Texas (AP) - The Dallas Cowboys veterans who skipped coach Jimmy Johnson's final round of voluntary workouts will likely receive a cool reception at the bargaining table.

Heading into the final days before training camp, six veterans remained unsigned.

One of those unsigned veterans, defensive end Daniel Stubbs, tried to smooth things out a little by meeting with Johnson Tuesday afternoon.

"Everything was friendly," Johnson said. "We talked about his status on the team and his opportunities. I told him hopefully we wouldn't have an ugly contract problem. I'm glad we talked. He knows our position now."

The 20-minute meeting came one day after defensive tackle Dean Hamel and Stubbs attended the morning session of the Cowboys' quarterback school but skipped the afternoon workouts.

Hamel's agent, Art Rose, said his client's absence is no cause for concern.

"He's not under contract," Rose said, "so he might miss the whole week. But he has no interest to hold out from camp."

Johnson countered by praising unsigned veterans Danny Noonan, John Gesek, Jack Del Rio and Alonzo Highsmith for their attendance.

Johnson said Hamel's and Stubbs' absence "doesn't set well with our people and will hurt when it comes to contract talks. We'll be more liberal with the John Geseks, Danny Noonans, Jack Del Rios and Alonzo Highsmiths."

This final battery of workouts has been particularly grueling. Monday's afternoon session consisted of a challenging conditioning test of 16 110-yard dashes. The sprints followed a morning of agility testing and physical examinations.

Last year, veteran linebacker Jesse Solomon held out of camp and missed eight games after refusing the Cowboys' end-of-the-summer offer.

The Cowboys tried to avoid a repeat of last summer, when Solomon and rookies Emmitt Smith and Alexander Wright held out.

They signed this year's top three draft choices - Russell Maryland, Alvin Harper and Dixon Edwards, almost immediately.

But in addition to the six unsigned veterans, as of Tuesday, nine draft choices remained unsigned. The NFL prohibits unsigned draft picks from attending training camp.

"I look for all the rookies to be signed by this weekend," Johnson said.

The Cowboys' first training camp practice is July 16 in Austin.

Southpaw Rube Waddell, a member of the Hall of Fame, on several occasions left the field in the middle of a game to chase fire engines.

Researchers look to develop 'good eggs'

Researchers at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station hope to give new meaning to the term "good egg" by developing one that will reduce harmful dietary fats.

Such an egg might be slightly lower in cholesterol and also contain omega-3 fatty acids, a polyunsaturated or "good" fat that actually helps decrease the effects of "bad" dietary fats, said Dr. Pam Hargis, an Experiment Station scientist.

Omega-3 fatty acids are found from marine source, primarily fish and have received widespread publicity as reducing risks of coronary disease. Fish oils included in the diets of chickens can produce eggs with higher levels of omega-3 fatty acids, Hargis said.

The predominant fats in the American diet are omega-6 fatty acids, which are also polyunsaturated and from both plant and animal sources and a saturated fats from meat and dairy products.

Omega-6 fatty acids are not as harmful as saturated fats are, but their consumption relative to omega-3 consumption should still be lower, Hargis said.

Nutritionists currently recommend at least three weekly servings of food containing omega-3 fatty acids as a way of improving dietary fat rations.

However, the effect of good eggs as an alternative to fish will still depend on reasonable diets in chicken the consumption of saturated fats is limited, she said. In addition, eggs with too-high levels of omega-3 fatty acids can have "off" or undesirable flavors, she said.

Demand for eggs has declined drastically over the past decade, with much of the drop resulting from well-meaning efforts to cut cholesterol consumption by the public, Hargis said.

Hargis, also an associate professor for poultry science at Texas A&M University, said some consumers deem eggs an inconvenient food, which also contributes to declining consumption.

But dietary research has shown that eggs aren't as bad as once thought, particularly with overall healthy diets, Hargis said.

That's because improved scientific techniques have shown there are only about 214 milligrams of cholesterol in an average large-grade egg, compared to the 275 it was once thought, Hargis said.

But it's also because research by her team and others shows that most people's bodies adjust to varying levels of cholesterol and other fats.

The Texas A&M team gave 20 male volunteers either regular or omega-3-enriched eggs for a period of 12 weeks. Researchers then found similar blood-cholesterol levels among most participants.

The regular-egg group took approximately three weeks to adjust to the effect of eating more eggs, she said, but their blood-cholesterol levels came back down to their original values after initially rising.

"Most normal healthy individuals have the ability to metabolically regulate levels of fatty acids in their blood in response to diet," Hargis said.

An average of one in 20 individuals will be what is termed "cholesterol non-responder," she said. Those people are unable to regulate cholesterol levels in their blood, largely because of their genetic makeup.

The researchers did find, however, that blood triglyceride levels in the omega-3 group initially dropped by an average of 19 percent, then returned to normal levels. Triglycerides are fats that flow through the blood after meals, and high levels in the blood after fasting may pose a coronary risk to people with a family history of fatty acid disorders.

Omega-3 fatty acids also inhibit the process of thrombosis, in which lipids (such as cholesterol) attach to tiny injuries in blood vessels, form a plaque and possible occlude or block the vessel. Blood-vessel injuries occur naturally but are also caused by stresses like high blood pressure and smoking, Hargis said.

Probably the most important effect of omega-3 fatty acids is this anti-thrombotic effect, Hargis said.

In any event, the good effects of enriched eggs are "very much dependent on other foods in the diet," Hargis said.

"The general healthy recommendation is that you increase sources of omega-3 relative to your consumption of omega-6 fats," she said. "What we're saying is that you should be able to have other sources of omega-3, so why not in eggs, or even meat modified to contain high levels of omega-3 fatty acids?"

Egg cholesterol levels can be decreased through dietary and breeding methods by some 10 percent, or to approximately 187 milligrams per large egg, she said.

But chickens stop producing eggs if cholesterol levels fall any more because certain amounts are necessary for reproduction, Hargis said.

Studies indicate that cholesterol levels would have to be cut in half before consumers would pay more for eggs and begin eating more, she said.

Such eggs could be produced if researchers determine how to bypass physiological mechanisms in poultry that keep them from laying eggs with low cholesterol levels, Hargis said.

Malignant melanoma spreading fast in US

Incidence of malignant melanoma, a serious form of skin cancer, is increasing faster than any other form of cancer. This means one out of every seven people will be affected by melanoma.

"Malignant melanoma is an epidemic in the U.S.," said William M. Ramsdell, M.D., an American Cancer Society volunteer spokesperson. "Individuals can easily decrease their risk of ever developing skin cancer by using sunscreen and avoiding over exposure to the sun."

According to the American Cancer Society, the increasing incidence of cancer can be altered if individuals follow a few simple guidelines for reducing their risk of skin cancer.

Use a sunscreen with a Sun Protection Factor (SPF) of at least 15 during all outdoor activities and avoid sunburn altogether.

Avoid direct exposure to the sun between the hours of 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. if you must go outdoors, wear a hat and protective clothing.

Avoid tanning salons-- they expose your skin to harmful ultraviolet rays.

"We hope that by increasing public awareness about skin cancer prevention and motivation individuals to change their behaviors, we can prevent these needless deaths," said Ramsdell.

Responsible organizations contribute to environmental enhancement by implementing wildlife habitat programs.

Cooking tips for backyard chefs

NEW YORK (AP) - So you can't cook! The American Spice Trade Association says every backyard cook can become a chef, with just a few handy tips and tricks.

Among the suggestions:

- For a flavorful aroma, when the coals are about ready, sprinkle a handful of mixed herbs moistened with water around the edge of the bed.

- Soak some bay leaves in water until softened, then skewer them in between cubes of meat for shish kebab.

- Cut up chunks of fresh fruit and thread them on skewers. Baste with a mixture of 1/4 cup melted butter, 1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon and 1/8 teaspoon ground allspice. Cook just until fruits are warm, brushing and turning often.

- Mix orange juice with ground cumin (about 2 teaspoons per 1-3rd cup) and ground red pepper to taste. Brush over ribs or pork cubes before grilling.

- Add 2 teaspoons curry powder and 2 teaspoons lime juice to 4 ounces of plain yogurt. Pierce the skin of each chicken part several times. Rub the yogurt mix into the meat, as much as you can get to stick. Cook very slowly.

- In a small bowl, combine 1 1/2 teaspoons onion powder, 1/2 teaspoon garlic powder and 1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper. Sprinkle chicken, steaks, fish, burgers and spareribs with lemon juice. Rub the dry spice mixture into the meat on all sides. For a taste variation, add 1 tablespoon chili powder, 1 teaspoon crushed oregano leaves, and 1/2 teaspoon ground cumin.

- Completely coat each hamburger with instant minced onion, pressing it in firmly to make it stick. Broil as usual.

- Melt 6 tablespoons butter, margarine or oil. Add 2 teaspoons crushed thyme leaves, 1 teaspoon onion powder, 1/4 teaspoon ground red pepper and 1/4 teaspoon salt. Stir over low heat for 1 minute to bring out the flavors. Great for grilled vegetables.

- Heat 1 cup of chicken broth. Stir in 1/2 cup smooth peanut butter until nicely thickened. Add 1/2 teaspoon ground coriander, 1/2 teaspoon ground cumin and ground red pepper to taste. Baste pork tenderloin on both sides before broiling.

- Combine 1-3rd cup vegetable oil, 1 tablespoon soy sauce, 1 1/4 teaspoons ground ginger, 1/2 teaspoon onion powder, 1/4 teaspoon garlic powder and a pinch of ground red pepper. Baste over vegetables and grill.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Vince Gill is the newest member of the Grand Ole Opry.

Gill, 34, let the news slip Tuesday while speaking about the upcoming celebrity golf tournament to benefit the Minnie Pearl Cancer Foundation.

"I'm honored to be part of this tournament that benefits a foundation named for Minnie and I'm especially honored because I am about to join Minnie as a member of the Grand Ole Opry," Gill said.

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise: Please tell your readers that during vacations or other absences, if they leave their cats with friends or family, these people should keep the animals strictly indoors for the duration of the absence.

A box with litter will be a small inconvenience. Many cats and some dogs will try to find their way back to their own territories, where they were secure. They can get lost, injured or even killed. The same applies to an animal in a new home, even if moved there with its owners. (It's a good idea to keep the cat inside for at least two weeks or maybe longer, until Fluffy becomes acclimated. — H.)

I was a volunteer for a humane society, and I know there are many worried owners who, in those circumstances, show up at shelters looking for their much-loved pets. — Selma R. Osterman, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Your words of wisdom are well taken. — Heloise

© 1991 by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Dear Heloise: I dislike ceiling fixtures and did not have any installed in the bedrooms when we built our new home. But then I decided we needed a ceiling fan. Without the wiring it looked like it would be expensive.

I called an electrician and he suggested using a "swag kit." He mounted the fan, wired in the swag and plugged it into an outlet. The chain swag makes little difference, but the fan — and the lights I thought I didn't want — is wonderful!

The electrician said this is the method he uses to install ceiling fans in mobile homes. — L.G., Marysville, Ohio

PET PALS

Dear Heloise: A few years ago while traveling through Mexico with my newly adopted cat in a trailer, I noticed Miss Kitty was gone! I looked in all her favorite places to no avail.

Well, I said a silent prayer and looked for her once more. Imagine my surprise when I found her sound asleep on my husband's bare head. She was keeping him warm and vice versa.

The funny part was that this was the only time I saw my husband with hair. — Mrs. B. Moch, Spring Hill, Fla.

Send a money- or time-saving hint to Heloise, P.O. Box 795000, San Antonio TX 78279. I can't answer your letter personally but will use the best hints received in my column.

Poultry experts research heart disease

A major cause of death for humans—heart disease—also plagues poultry, but a team of Texas Agricultural Experiment Station researchers hopes to help contribute to the understanding of the problems of both.

The interdisciplinary group headed by Dr. Ted Odom of the Texas A&M poultry science department is trying to unravel the perplexing problem of why the cardiovascular systems of broiler chickens sometimes do not keep pace with their growth. Solving that may add to scientific knowledge about genetic components of healthy hearts in all species.

The poultry industry has been disturbed by an increase in heart failure as advances in breeding and poultry nutrition have helped chickens grow more quickly and efficiently.

"Basically, they've selected for growth traits that can produce a greater white breast meat yield," Odom said. "This is a problem that is unique to fast-growing birds."

Odom said one percent to three percent of chickens hatched might die from heart failure in the United States, with some reports as high as 10 percent.

"A lot of mortality data is not available because companies don't like to talk about it, but they're becoming more open because mortality at a level that's alarming and costly to the producer," he said.

"In Texas, it's been estimated that $20 million per year is lost from congestive heart failure and other cardiovascular-related problems."

The peak mortality period is about five weeks after hatching, or one week before birds are ready for slaughter, he said.

In Mexico, some producers are experiencing mortality rates of up to 30 percent, Odom said. Many are located in higher altitudes or near urban areas, which can increase the chance of respiratory problems that strain the heart, he said.

Colder weather may also play a role by increasing the metabolic rate of chickens and their need for oxygen.

Odom's team is using a combination of methods to study the development of both the cardiovascular and respiratory systems of broiler chickens.

Part of their work includes taking electrocardiograms, because different wave readings may indicate varying potentials for development of heart disease in broiler chickens.

It also includes using ultrasound probes to visualize the living heart and estimate blood flow and pressure changes.

"We can actually see the heart working. We can see changes in size of the various chambers and the motion of the heart at work," Odom said.

Dr. Charles Lessard of A&M's bioengineering department is coordinating development of a heartbeat sound recording technique that can be used for diagnostic purposes. The sound readings must be taken by specially developed equipment, because chicken hearts beat at an average of 350 to 450 times a minute, Odom said.

The chickens also will be tested in conditions simulation higher altitudes and colder weather.

Other principle members of the team are Dr. Bill Chilian of the department of physiology in A&M's College of Medicine and two member so its veterinary medicine faculty—Dr. Matt Miller of small animal medicine and surgery and Dr. Billy Hargis of veterinary patho-biology.

Data gathered will be used to help the team target "indices" in genetic lines of chickens to find which ones are fast-growing but still show resistance to cardiopulmonary illness. First, however, they will need to rule out environmental causes during incubation.

Solutions to the increased incidence of heart disease could include environmental, nutritional or genetic changes, Odom said.

"We can learn basic mechanisms that may relate to cardiovascular problems in humans and other animal species."

Ask Dr. Lamb

DEAR DR. LAMB: I went to a urologist, and after injecting a dye in my vein that showed my prostate was cutting off the passage I urinate through, he said I needed a prostatectomy. He said after the operation my ejaculation would not come out the penis the old-fashioned way, but would go to my bladder. I think it would give me a psychological depression if this were to happen. Can this be avoided? I thought ejaculation and orgasm were one and the same. Is there a way to have this operation and still ejaculate through the penis?

He gave me a book on prostate surgery that really frightened me. It said maybe a blood transfusion would be necessary and discussed cancer and passing blood as well as having a tube in my bladder and being incontinent for a couple of weeks maybe. This sounds very major to me. I'm afraid of getting AIDS through a transfusion. Can I freeze a pint of my own blood and use it in case I need blood?

DEAR READER: Retrograde ejaculation of the semen into the bladder after prostate surgery is common. The TUR procedure, used to cut out the core of the prostate gland and relieve the obstruction, of necessity will damage the valve that prevents that. There is a valve at the outlet of the bladder right where the prostate tissue needs to be removed that closes at the time of ejaculation. Then the contractions that follow propel the semen forward.

Without the valve, the semen may squirt backward into the bladder. Rarely, a man is lucky and this doesn't happen, but it almost always does, regardless of the care and skill of the surgeon.

However, you may have made too much of it, as a man still has much of the same sensations he had before when he has an orgasm. An orgasm includes many physiological changes and sensations. The forward ejection of semen, the ejaculation, is only part of the reaction. The orgasm results in muscular contractions in the pelvic area and the urethra and a release of sexual tension. An orgasm can occur without ejaculation at all, and ejaculation may occur without an orgasm. When a man is aware that there will be a change after surgery, it usually presents few problems and does not end his sex life.

I have discussed prostate surgery in Special Report 71, The Prostate Gland, which I am sending you. Others who want this report can send $3 with a long, stamped (52 cents), self-addressed envelope for it to THE HEALTH LETTER/71, P.O. Box 787, Gibbstown, NJ 08027-9908.

You should be able to make donations of your own blood before surgery, which is now commonly done. Ask your doctor about it.

Incontinence may be a problem for a few weeks, but that is usually temporary.

Also, depending on how severe your prostate enlargement is, you may be able to consider certain medicines or even balloon dilatation of the obstruction. That could help you avoid surgery and the retrograde-ejaculation problem, if it concerns you. However, the medicines available to relax the prostate work only in early cases with spasm of the muscular fibers. But in many cases such medicines can be used. Other medications affect the testosterone level and may cause at least temporary impotence and are not always successful in reducing the size of the prostate.
