Iraqi pilot thought ship was in war zone

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Iraqi pilot who opened fire on the USS Stark in the Persian Gulf was convinced his target was inside a free-fire war zone, even though the United States has clear proof it wasn't, the Pentagon says.

"The essential difference in the U.S. and Iraqi versions of what occurred in the attack on USS Stark concerns the exact locations of both the Iraqi Mirage F-1 and USS Stark throughout the attack," the Pentagon said Wednesday in a report on the May 17 attack that claimed the lives of 37 U.S. seamen.

"The Iraqis maintain that their aircraft fired two missiles at a maritime target located in the Iranian-Declared Exclusion Zone. They consider maritime shipping in this zone to be legitimate targets. ...

"The United States remains certain that the wealth of position data ... confirm that the Iraqi F-1 struck USS Stark while she was approximately 12 nautical miles (13.8 statute miles) to the west of the Iranian-Declared Exclusion Zone" — up to 28 1/2 miles away from the position reported by the Iraqis.

The dispute over the ship's location was spelled out in a four-page report that compares the U.S. and Iraqi chronologies of the attack on the guided-missile frigate.

The Pentagon said the document was part of a much broader, classified report prepared by Rear Adm. David Rogers, who headed a team of U.S. officials that recently returned from Baghdad.

In related developments: —Rep. Bill Nichols, D-Ala., chairman of the House armed services subcommittee investigating the Stark attack, said some of the ship's crew members eventually could face charges.

Based on five Pentagon briefings on the attack, "I would not be at all surprised if there might not be charges against one or more members of the crew," Nichols said.

Nichols said he and Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, may cancel a trip to Bahrain to interview Stark crewmen because four of the ship's officers, including the captain, have retained attorneys and refused to answer questions from committee staff members.

Nichols said that following a briefing from the committee staff and Rogers on Wednesday, he's convinced the Stark could have reacted to the Iraqi plane had the captain chosen to do so. He said he has heard nothing to suggest a serious equipment failure on the ship or to indicate the ship's orders prevented it from responding to an attack.

—National Security Adviser Frank Carlucci told reporters traveling with President Reagan to Venice, Italy, that the president will press the U.S. allies attending the economic summit "for greater coordination, cooperation and support in the Persian Gulf."

The Iranian exclusion zone cuts the Persian Gulf roughly in half, running diagonally from the gulf's top to its bottom, and includes the eastern sections of the waterway closest to the Iranian coast. Iran attacks commercial shipping outside the zone, while Iraq concentrates its attacks on ships inside the line. Although it does not say so explicitly, the Pentagon report contains nothing to dispute Iraqi claims that the attack on the Stark was an accident and a case of mistaken identity. The Reagan administration has accepted that explanation.

The report offers no judgments about the performance of the Iraqi pilot. It notes only that he was "experienced" and relied solely on his radar and navigation systems during the night flight to conclude the Stark was a bona fide target.

Pumper Practice

Time and teamwork determine how well a drill for hooking up a firetruck to the hydrant goes. Hereford Volunteer Firemen practiced late Wednesday afternoon in preparation for the state contest June 13 in Amarillo. The men's and women's pumper teams from Hereford placed third in Panhandle regionals last month to qualify for the competition. Wednesday's drill was at the corner of Third and Miles.

New recruits face big test Saturday

Reserve deputies pitch in when county needs help

By JERI SHIRE
Managing Editor

The West isn't as wild anymore, but sometimes a sheriff still needs a posse. Only these days it takes more than having a badge pinned on your shirt to ride with the law.

Whether for an all-night drug bust or just to keep a Saturday night dance under control, Joe Brown calls the Deaf Smith County Reserve Deputies — a crew that's just as trained as his hired folk.

A new crop of reserve deputies will soon be moving into the ranks, if the half dozen who just finished six months of training can pass the basic reserve officer test this Saturday at Amarillo College.

All have gone through a six month term of twice weekly classes.

Debbie Fox, a petite secretary in the Justice of the Peace office, is among the students to be tested.

"It's just an interest," she said about trying for the reserves. "What I do now is the paperwork side. I wanted to further my education and go to the risky side. It's a different world for me."

Like all applicants for the reserves, Fox was checked for any criminal record, screened by a reserve committee and interviewed with pointed questions like, "Could you shoot someone if your life depended on it?"

She even checked with the district attorney to see if there would be a conflict of interest since through her job she issues warrants. No problem, he said, actually she might be an asset to the reserved to be so knowledgeable about the process.

Part of the schooling was an overview of the Bill of Rights, criminal codes, and search and seizure procedures.

Then there was the other stuff. Weapons like guns and batons (night sticks). To carry either, a lawman must pass a course.

Fox got some bruises during the baton lesson because you have to learn to defend yourself. She assures that she got no special treatment for being a woman, unless it was when the instructor made her mad enough about being small so that she would try harder and pass.

Her family gave her support in the effort to become a reserve, telling her frankly that she would "have to take care of yourself" and encouraging her to "go for it." Fox said they told her to "go show them that they can't live without you."

Fox isn't the only woman to go through the course. Donna Curtis, aspiring to be a cattle inspector, also tests Saturday.

And Carleta Watts has been on the squad for five years.

She was inspired while her husband was working as a jailer. Watts thought it might be convenient for the county to have a female reserve to handle women prisoners. Much of her work has been in that area, serving for transport to state institutions and assisting in arrests.

"But women aren't always easy. The first girl I had to frisk was a big, tall broad," the 5'4" Watts recalled. "She was nearly 6-foot tall.

During the all-night drug bust in January 1986, Watts felt the seriousness of deputy work. "We carried guns in case they opened fire on us," she said. "Some guys said they wouldn't be taken alive without a shootout. It sets your adrenaline to pumping."

Jim Lassiter says he hasn't been in on anything bit — but that's just because he wasn't scheduled when those things happened. He joined the reserve association just to use his retirement time to service of the county.

Having two prosthetic feet didn't hamper his gusto or the reserves' acceptance of him five years ago.

"I can do anything I ever did, but run and jump," Lassiter says. "It does slow you down some."

Law enforcement service runs in his family. His grandfather was the first sheriff of Stonewall County in the 1880s. (Lassiter still has the Colt 45 he carried while sheriff.)

Probably the major service of the reserves is to fill in for paid deputies. Some volunteers give 20 to 30 hours a week to help beef up night and weekend shifts when crime is more likely.

Sheriff Brown says he doesn't have enough deputies, anyway, for a county of this size, so the reserves really help out. Without them, sick days and vacations for paid deputies would be tough to cover by manpower or finances.

Having reserves who live in various communities across the county speeds response time to calls, and provides backups to those calls. Once a neighborhood gets to know its reserve deputy, residents start calling him first, before contacting the sheriff's office.

Captain Mark Hardt, head of the 19-member reserve crew, said the state regulations are getting stricter with the education requirements. He said now it's hard enough for people who work all day to go to school at night.

Larry Pennington, who works a 49-hour week at his regular job, is giving up summer freedom so he can continue intermediate school after basic. His wife Sharon went through the same course to become a paid deputy with Deaf Smith County, but she isn't a member of the association.

In addition to time sacrifice, it costs about $1,300 to buy the weapon, badge, physical and psychological exams, and leatherwear. The reserve association pays the $200 tuition.

Regular duties of a deputy may mean only standing by during court cases. Some jobs do involve adventure, though such as the major drug bust. Some reserves have sat with a train after a wreck, they've staked out murder suspects, and they've been shot at. And since it is tornado season, the reserves are charged with watching threatening clouds.

After the excitement, though, reserves are just like any other officer — they have to do the paperwork.

Sanity hearing, sex case on docket

A sanity hearing for a man accused of murder and a jury trial for a reverend charged with raping two of his granddaughters are among 51 cases set on the June 17 court docket for 222nd District Court in Hereford.

Florentino Carbajal, 22, is to appear before District Judge David Wesley Guley for a sanity hearing. Carbajal has been examined by three psychiatrists to determine his mental ability to stand trial for the Dec. 29, 1986, murder of his wife, Marina Tamez.

Tamaz, 19, died as the result of two shots from a .38 caliber gun. The fatal bullet lodged in her spinal cord at the base of the head according to Justice of the Peace Johnnie Turrentine.

Carbajal was arrested five miles north of Dimmitt on Jan. 1, 1987, after a man-hunt involving 16 law enforcement officers and 150 hours of combined work hours.

District Attorney Roland Saul expects the Carbajal sanity hearing to take the time allotted for jury trials this month but says there is a possibility that the case of a grandfather accused of sexual relations with two of his juvenile granddaughters may come to trial.

Rev. Floyd Polk Sr. has been indicted by grand jurors on charges of aggravated assault of a child, aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child. Polk, an ordained minister with the Faith Mission Church of God and Christ of Hereford, is pleading innocence.

Family members claim the incidents occurred over the period of one year before the girls, ages 11 and 12, made anyone in the family aware of the situation. According to the family, the matter was investigated by Rick Lee of the Texas Department of Human Resources, Child

Nebraska firm offers cash for half interest in SIPCO

ConAgra Inc., a multi-billion dollar Nebraska corporation, has signed a letter of intent with the owner of the Swift Independent Packing Co. (SIPCO) to purchase for cash a 50 percent interest in the Texas corporation.

SIPCO and Val-Agri Inc. are both owned by the Swift Independent Holding Corporation, based in Dallas. Principal stockholders are Edwin L. Cox Jr. and the Cox family trusts. SIPCO owns a plant in Hereford which is not in operation.

A news release, dated last Friday, reports that ConAgra would purchase

"its interests primarily from Edwin L. Cox Jr. and affiliated shareholders." The release gave no indication of the amount of the transaction.

However, an article in The Wall Street Journal Monday notes that analysts estimated value of the 50-percent interest at $100 to $400 million. If completed, the transaction would join the nation's second and third largest meat processors.

SIPCO and Val-Agri process and market fresh beef, pork and lamb production from 16 processing facilities. The largest is located at Cacus, near Dumas, and that beef-packing plant has recently been through a $4 million expansion. Almost 1,300 workers are employed at the plant.

SIPCO was purchased by Cox in March 1986, in a leverage buyout for some $180 million in cash and preferred stock. The transaction is subject to a study required by federal regulations and approval by the boards of each company. It is estimated it will take about 60 days to conclude the action.

Kingwood next to Ogelsby Equipment and will be open to the public from 8:30 a.m.-12:30 p.m. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday through the summer months.

Study warns shoppers to be wary of salmonella in chickens

WASHINGTON (AP) — A National Academy of Sciences study proposes a label for chickens to warn against possible food poisoning organisms, but a nutrition group says that would not resolve the problem of inadequate inspection.

Advising shoppers how to avoid salmonella and other organisms from supermarket chicken might help protect Americans from bacteria that cause flu-like symptoms among millions of Americans each year, the study says.

Released Tuesday by the academy's National Research Council, the study says the Agriculture Department's poultry inspection system offers little protection against food poisoning organisms.

One improvement suggested would be to tag each of the 4 billion chickens eaten by Americans each year with a warning label telling consumers to cook their birds properly and take other precautions.

"Such labeling need not encourage consumers to avoid the product," the council reported. "Rather, a simple tag emphasizing the need to wash all implements, cook the product thoroughly, and chill leftovers as soon as possible after serving could go a long way toward adequate consumer protection."

But Rodney E. Leonard, head of the private, non-profit Community Nutrition Institute, said the labeling proposal is tantamount to saying chicken may be hazardous to human health and that the report "failed to provide a means of resolving" the shortcomings of the federal inspection program.

"Somebody is producing dirty poultry, and when they get into specifics, they danced away from what the (USDA) or the industry could do — and left it to an explicit warning to consumers," he said.

Leonard, who oversaw meat and poultry inspection as a USDA official in the 1960s, said the committee of experts who made the 18-month study did not provide "clear guidance to Congress as to what can be done at the policy level" to improve the nation's poultry supply.

"It doesn't specify what the industry can do itself to minimize what they clearly believe is a serious health problem," Leonard said. "It comes down to warning consumers again."

Two disease organisms, salmonella and campylobacter, are responsible for an estimated 4 million cases of food poisoning each year. Not all come from poultry, but the organisms are often found in poultry, from points of origin to the retailer's shelves.

Salmonella and similar organisms are commonly found in fecal matter, which comes in contact with the skin and flesh of chickens during processing operations to remove organs and feathers.

Reported cases of salmonella since have more than doubled, from eight per 100,000 in 1983 to 19 per 100,000 in 1984. And the total number of cases is probably much higher than the reported cases indicate, the report said.

It added: "Projections from available data suggest that there are between 1,500 to 2,000 cases per 100,000 members of the population per year."

Although no immediate solutions were recommended, the study said "risk assessments" by the Agriculture Department could be used to evaluate each step of the poultry production process. It urged USDA to include better microbial and chemical analysis of samples taken randomly at poultry plants.

The committee recommended that the department's Food Safety and Inspection Service, which oversees federal meat and poultry inspection, shift from bird-by-bird inspection to random sampling, including close examination of the birds selected to detect microorganisms and chemical residues.

Lester M. Crawford, associate administrator of the USDA agency, said he concurred with the committee's recommendation for closer monitoring of bacteria and chemical residues, neither of which can be detected by the unaided eye.

"The academy's recommendation to broaden the program and emphasize risk assessment and monitoring of critical production points is welcomed by FSIS, and it will provide the basis for a rational discussion of the future of poultry inspection," Crawford said.

George Watts, president of the National Broiler Council, said the poultry industry agrees with the committee that "we have gone about as far as we can to improve efficiency and safety under the inspection program" run by the USDA agency.

The committee's recommendation of "risk assessment" procedures to focus on ways to reduce contamination, and a move away from bird-by-bird inspection was also noted by Watts. In general, he said, the broiler industry considers the committee's view on inspection as "a logical next step in modernizing the poultry inspection process."

USA, Canada issue joint ag policy statement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Following talks in Canada, Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng and Canadian officials issued a joint statement urging that "the world get down to business" in finding ways to end trade barriers and other market-distorting practices in agriculture.

"The chaotic state of world agricultural trade means that we need to go beyond simply recognizing the problem facing the world's farmers," said the statement, which was issued in Ottawa where the talks concluded. "We must ... bring about fundamental comprehensive reform of agricultural policies and programs around the world."

Those issuing the statement with Lyng were Canadian Agriculture Minister John Wise and the minister of state responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, Charles Mayer.

Multi-nation concerns were the main focus of the talks, according to the statement, a version of which was issued here by the Agriculture Department.

Village Marshal has kept the peace

PERNITAS POINT, Texas (AP) — The law here is Julian O'Neal, who in all his 70 years has never held a gun in his hand. In fact, he'd sooner resign his elected post than pick up a gun.

All 2.8 square miles of Pernitas Point is his for the peace-keeping. It has been since the village held its first election of public officials in April of last year.

"I figure if anything comes up I can't handle peaceably, or with my own persuasion, then I'll call the sheriff," he says.

O'Neal, a businessman from Houston who retired here, was re-elected law marshal this April in a squeaker election — 56 to 55 — with "no real campaign issues."

"We're trying to keep the peace and harmony," he says.

Newly elected Mayor Kathleen Sullivan, who won uncontested says, "This is an area where your vote really counts."

Victor Dennis, one of the village's five aldermen, also won by one vote.

Pernitas Point, once ranch land along the Nueces River, later a real estate development on an inlet of Lake Corpus Christi, is now a village. In November 1985, a majority of the 151 registered voters decided it should be incorporated.

It's about an hour from Corpus Christi, if you take the farm-to-market roads from Five Points. Farm Road 534 eventually comes to Ridge Road, the only way in and out of Pernitas Point.

The configuration makes O'Neal's job easier in emergencies. The only time he had any serious trouble — some teen-agers causing a ruckus during spring break — he called a sheriff's deputy to blockade the only escape route.

O'Neal has two sets of sheriff's deputies on call because Pernitas Point straddles the Live Oak-Jim Wells county line. About two-thirds of the village is in Live Oak County, one-third of it in Jim Wells County.

The dividing line is hard to point out. One marker is in the middle of a vegetable garden.

While the county divide is a help to law enforcement, it's a complication when it comes to education. School children from the Jim Wells County side of Pernitas Point are bused 11 miles to Orange Grove; those on the Live Oak County side go 31 miles to George West.

Pernitas Point is a collection of winding roads, homes with lake views, and two businesses: Fiesta Marina and metal sheds, about as long as football fields, called boat barns.

O'Neal doesn't patrol all this, though. He waits for the phone to ring. Most often it rings on weekends.

"Usually it's somebody unhappy with their neighbors," O'Neal says. "A lot of calls are for things that don't amount to a hill of beans."

His wife, Catherine, says, "Somebody will call and say, 'Someone ran over a dog out here. Will you pick it up?'"

"No," O'Neal tells them. "I don't do dead dogs."

The buzzards, he says, usually take care of such things.

He once had to have a talk with a teen-ager shooting a .22-caliber rifle at random. "It's against the law to shoot firearms out here," O'Neal said.

The boy's father told O'Neal he had moved his family to the country so his children would have the freedom to shoot rifles into the air if they wanted to.

"It's against the law to kill people, even in the country," O'Neal told him. The boy and his father put the gun away.

About the most serious criminal activity of late has been stolen street signs. Kids take them down as soon as they're put up. So, now there are no street signs in Pernitas Point.

Estimates on the number of people living here run from 250 to 600. No official census has been taken. All city officials work for free. The homeowners association raised the money for the village hall since, by ordinance, the village government can't tax its residents to pay for such things.

In fact, the council has had time to pass only five ordinances.

"Presently, we don't have anything much that I have to police," says O'Neal. He supervises septic tank inspections and sees that everyone remains orderly at the village meetings, held the second Thursday of each month.

When he first began the job, O'Neal was not quite sure what he was supposed to do. He called over to Austin once to get a list of rules he should follow. No one could find anything for him. "Just confer with your sheriff," someone advised.

The sheriff told him right off to get a gun, but O'Neal refused. So far, he says, he never has made an arrest, issued a citation — or needed a gun.

Appellate judge tells Lions system needs to change

Electing a judge by partisan politics is the worst method, according to Justice John T. Boyd of Amarillo, and he thinks voters should get the legislature to change the system.

Boyd, associate justice of the Court of Appeals, 7th Supreme Judicial District, was guest speaker at the Hereford Lions Club meeting Wednesday at the Community Center. He was introduced by Ed Line, program chairman and local attorney.

Justice Boyd pointed out that Texas and only 14 other states elect judges in partisan balloting. A judge "should apply the law without regard to party affiliation," said Boyd, and sometimes good, qualified judges lose their post simply because of "belonging to one party at the wrong time."

Judge Boyd said most of the problems occur in metropolitan areas, where voters do not know the candidates for judgeships. "You are fortunate, here, to have a district judge who most voters know. They are aware he is doing a good job." The justice pointed out that many good judges in the Democratic Party lost their posts because of party-line voting in the last presidential election. He added that good Republican Party judge candidates had lost their posts the same way in previous years.

Boyd said he was not sure what the best method would be, although he liked the idea of a unitary election for judges. They could be listed on both party ballots in the primary elections and a winner determined in the primary. He said this could also cut down on campaign expenses and contributions to elections for judges.

Boyd formerly served as a district judge in the Plainview district. He is currently chairman of the Judicial Conduct committee for the State Bar.

At the Lions Club meeting Wednesday, President Temple Abney announced that the annual officer installation dinner has been scheduled for June 25, and ladies are invited Past President B.J. Gilliland announced plans for a membership drive.

Special Session for tort reform ends

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas legislators have closed out a two-day special session Wednesday by approving civil justice reform and liability insurance measures that failed in the 140-day regular session.

It took the House less than 10 minutes to complete its work Wednesday and adjourn. The Senate adjourned a few minutes later.

"The quickness to which tort reform moved in the special session is an indication of what can be done when legislators work together," Gov. Bill Clements said.

Clements said he hoped the same spirit of cooperation would be present June 22 when he calls lawmakers back for a second special session on the state budget and tax revenues.

With little debate, the House gave voice-vote approval Wednesday to the "tort reform" and insurance bills and sent them to Clements. The Senate approved the package Tuesday night, less than 24 hours after the same measures died at the Monday midnight deadline for the regular legislative session.

The main tort reform measure made many changes in court procedure governing personal injury and damage suits. Those filing groundless or harassment suits would be punished. No one could recover damages if found more than 50 percent responsible for injuries or damages because of negligence. In a products liability suit, the claimant could recover only if less than 60 percent responsible. Defendants more than 20 percent responsible could be made to pay all other damages if the other defendants were unable to pay.

"There will be bills down the road to clarify what we are doing today but this is a big step," said Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston, chief House negotiator in the long controversy.

Another bill would make numerous changes in law covering liability insurance in Texas, include more reports and inspections by the State Board of Insurance. A new division for consumer protection would be created, headed by a public counsel to represent consumers before the board in insurance rates cases.

Ann Landers

Counsel, then make decision

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I am 60, my wife is 58. I never dreamed that I would ever need to write to you about my marriage, but I am desperate for your opinion.

I have been married to Barbara for 14 years. We get along well. She's good company, very pretty and keeps herself fit by going to an exercise class three times a week. I retired a few months ago, am in excellent physical condition and have tried not to be a burden or a pest since retirement. I help with the housework and marketing and do errands.

Six months ago when I was having my annual checkup I mentioned to my doctor that I had some discomfort in the genital area. He examined me and asked if there was any possibility that I could have picked up a venereal disease. I replied, "Absolutely not." I told him that I had been 100 percent faithful and was sure my wife was, too. He decided to give me a test anyway.

That evening I told Barbara that I was being tested for V.D. She became very upset, made veiled accusations about my "roaming" and said she was shocked.

Fifteen minutes later I picked up the phone to make a call and heard her say, "Is there any possibility that I got something from you? A male voice replied, "No way. I am perfectly OK." I didn't tell her that I had heard the conversation but it certainly knocked me for a loop. A few days later I received a call from my doctor. He said, "I have good news. You are just fine. No sign of infection."

The knowledge that my wife has been cheating (and still may be) is tearing me apart. We are well fixed financially, own our home free and clear and could have a wonderful life together, but I am considering a divorce. I hate to leave this beautiful woman, but I don't know how I can go on. Will you please give me some objective, sensible advice?—Grateful Reader

DEAR READER: I want to caution you against doing something that you might regret for the rest of your life. Granted, you have the goods on your wife but don't cut loose without giving her a chance to shape up. I suggest joint counseling, with both of you doing your darndest for six months. Then decide.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Every month I receive a large box filled with unbelievable junk from my mother. She must find this stuff at garage sales and thrift shops.

I have told her repeatedly that I am very short of space and not to send me any more "gifts." I might as well talk to the wall.

My sister gets similar boxes. Last week she received several used bath towels and some patched bed sheets. The real kicker was the bathrobe Mom sent Sis for her birthday. It was several sizes too small. (Sis is 5-foot-11). She asked Mom if she could return it and get one that fits. "No, dear," was the response. "Save it for your daughter." (Her daughter is 3 years old!)

Mom is a wonderful person. She is not hard pressed for money. Next month she will celebrate her 63rd birthday. This is too young to be getting senile. Or is it? Her behavior is becoming bizarre. I'm worried—San Fran Woe

DEAR WOE: Your reference to "bizarre behavior" suggests that Mother has a psychological or neurological problem. I strongly urge you to treat her with kindness and compassion and insist that she be examined by a professional.

DEAR READERS: A second reminder because I love you and want you to stay well: I've read yet another piece about the dangers of using a toothbrush that has served you through a cold and the flu. For heaven's sake, throw it out and treat yourself to a new one. You're worth it!

Two Desserts In One

- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 tablespoon ground cinnamon
- ½ cup honey

Austrian apple strudel and Middle Eastern baklava have two things in common: both feature flaky, wafer-thin pastry and both are scrumptious. This dessert, a melding of the two, is every bit as scrumptious as the originals.

You can find phyllo or filo (FEE-lo) dough in the freezer case of supermarkets and specialty food shops. Because it's almost as thin as tissue paper, it dries out and becomes brittle when exposed to the air. Keep the unused sheets covered with a damp towel while working with phyllo.

APPLE STRUDEL BAKLAVA

- ¾ pound phyllo dough
- 1¼ cups margarine or butter, melted
- 2 cups coarsely shredded peeled apples
- 1 cup chopped walnuts
- 1 cup chopped toasted almonds
- 2-3rds cup sugar
- ¼ cup raisins
- 1 teaspoon finely shredded lemon peel

POLLY'S POINTERS

By Polly Fisher

DEAR POLLY — How can I get my ornamental pepper to bear fruit? — SANDY

DEAR SANDY — Ornamental peppers do well in good sun with moderate night temperatures (50 to 60 degrees). Keep the soil evenly moist and fertilize faithfully once a month to encourage fruiting.

Unfortunately, once the pepper fruits it is near the end of its life cycle. Although peppers can last a long time, once they bear the pepper, the plant will never again bear fruit.

I'm sending you a copy of my newsletter "Hints for Healthy Houseplants," which offers care instructions for 20 of the most popular houseplants, formulas for making your own potting soil and gelatin plant food and tips on watering, potting, growing plant novelties and pest control. Others who would like a copy of this issue should send $1 for each copy to POLLY'S POINTERS, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 93863, Cleveland, OH 44101-5863. Be sure to include the title. — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — You don't need expensive tile cleaners to remove dirt and soap scum from ceramic bathroom tile. Plain rubbing alcohol works beautifully. Just pour a little on a plastic scouring pad and gently scrub the tile. Rinse and it will shine like new. The alcohol cuts through the worst build-up and is inexpensive. Just remember to keep the room well ventilated so you don't inhale fumes. Also, keep the alcohol out of the reach of children! — BELLE

DEAR POLLY — Here's help for anyone who's having trouble getting a lipstick plant to bloom. My plant grew for a year into beautiful vines.

Will pepper plant ever bear fruit?

but with no blooms. I found out the vines should be trimmed to no longer than 12 inches to encourage blooming. Use plant food and wait a while after trimming; then the plant will bloom profusely. — A.L.

Rangers romp over White Sox 14-3

By The Associated Press
The Detroit Tigers and Texas Rangers have welcomed the warm weather with scorching bats. The Tigers and Rangers romped to victory Wednesday night behind season-high 20-hit attacks. Detroit, which has averaged 7.6 runs a game in going 14-6 in the last 20 contests, beat Cleveland 15-3. Texas, scoring 6.4 runs in the last 17 games despite winning only seven of them, routed Chicago 14-3.

Offense was the key to just about every other American League victory. Boston edged Minnesota 7-6 in 10 innings, New York whipped California 9-3, Oakland took Baltimore 7-3 and Toronto beat Seattle 7-2. The lowest-scoring game of the day was Milwaukee's fifth straight victory, a 4-2 decision over Kansas City.

Rangers 14, White Sox 3
Two Texas Rangers newcomers, whose arrivals had been awaited with great anticipation, made their appearances Wednesday night and had a telling impact on the Rangers. Shortstop Scott Fletcher became a father for the first time three hours before the Rangers' game with the Chicago White Sox and he celebrated the event with four hits and three runs batted in as Texas beat Chicago 14-3.

And Mickey Stanley, who was tearing up the American Association, made his 1987 debut and also had four hits, including a home run and three RBI as the Rangers totaled a season-high 20 hits.

"I came to the park directly from the delivery room," said Fletcher, who arrived 40 minutes before gametime and missed batting practice. "I hated to leave the hospital and it was hard getting my mind on the game."

His wife, Angie, gave birth to a girl at 4:30 Wednesday afternoon. "I couldn't have asked for a better start," said Stanley, who was batting .335 with 13 homers and 54 RBI in 46 games at Oklahoma City before getting the call Tuesday night. "Of course, I can't expect to get four hits in a game very often. But it's just great to be here."

Stanley made an out in his first at-bat in the first inning, in which the Rangers scored four runs to take a 4-1 lead against Chicago starter and loser Floyd Bannister, 3-4. "It's kind of ironic," said Stanley, "because after I made an out in my first time up, someone said, 'So what, go 4-for-5.' And I did."

He singled and scored in the third, singled home a run in the fourth, hit a solo home run in the sixth and singled home a run in the eighth. "I had a good night, but so did everyone else," said Stanley, who appeared in 15 games for the Rangers late last season. "I didn't win the game. It was a team effort."

Beneficiary of the 20-hit attack was Jose Guzman, 3-5, who won in relief of starter Mike Loynd. Guzman went four and two-thirds innings, allowed two hits and struck out four.

"With all the hitting, Guzman was the bright spot of the night," said Rangers manager Bobby Valentine. "He should have his confidence back now."

Four different players each drove in three runs for the Rangers, who hit seven homers and scored 30 runs in the 3-game series with the White Sox.

Pete Incaviglia hit a 3-run homer — hit 12th of the season — in the first inning, and Steve Buechele drove in three with a solo homer — his fifth — and a 2-run double.

"The guys came out smoking tonight," said Valentine. "It sure is good to have a big lead."

In three of their last four games, the White Sox have been beaten 10-9, 11-9, and 14-5, prompting manager Jim Fregosi to say: "Our bullpen has been beaten up for a couple of days. We are not the kind of club that can afford to have our starters go out early because our long relievers haven't done the job."

Tigers 15, Indians 3
Detroit, which earlier in the season scored just 14 runs in an eight-game span, now has scored in double figures seven times this year. The Tigers ended a three-game losing streak as six starters had multiple-hit games, led by Matt Nokes with four. Tom Brookens and Chet Lemon drove in four runs each.

Alan Trammell, Pat Sheridan, Brookens and Lemon had three hits each, with Trammell, Brookens and Lemon hitting homers.

Red Sox 7, Twins 6
Boston came back from a 6-2 deficit. The Red Sox scored two runs in the eighth on Jim Rice's first homer since April 27 and a bases-loaded walk, then tied the score on Mike Greenwell's two-run homer off Twins relief ace Jeff Reardon in the ninth.

In the 10th against Joe Klink, 0-1, Ed Romero walked, Marty Barrett singled and Wade Boggs, the AL's leading hitter at .347, singled in the winning run.

Calvin Schiraldi, 4-3, has been the winning pitcher in Boston's last three victories.

Yankees 9, Angels 3
Mike Pagliarulo drove in four runs with his eighth homer of the season in the second inning, a bases-loaded single for two runs in a six-run third and a sacrifice fly in the fourth.

The Angels led 3-1 when Wayne Tolleson led off the thirteenth and Willie Randolph and Don Mattingly both singled. That loaded the bases and Gary Ward's two-run single had tied the score.

Athletics 7, Orioles 3
Oakland's sluggers provided the punch. Jose Canseco, the 1986 AL Rookie of the Year, had a two-run homer and Mark McGwire drove in two runs with a single.

Curt Young won his seventh game. Cecil Fielder hit a two-run homer and a run-scoring double and has 14 RBI and a .311 average in only 45 at-bats. Lloyd Moseby added a solo homer and Dave Stieb, 4-3, won for the fourth time in his last five decisions.

Brewers 4, Royals 2
The Brewers continued their schizophrenic behavior. Streaky Milwaukee opened the season with a record-tying 13 straight victories, later suffered through slides of 12 and five games, and now is doing things right again.

Len Barker, backed by a four-run second inning that featured a two-run double by Cecil Cooper, won for the first time since Aug. 28, 1985, when he was with Atlanta. The 31-year-old right-hander was released by the Braves in 1986 and signed with Montreal's Class AAA team at Indianapolis.

Kansas City has lost four straight.

Perkins said individuals interested in joining the Hereford Track Club are asked to be at the Whiteface Stadium track on weekday mornings. Workouts are held from 10 a.m.

Lakers figure on physical game tonight

By KEN PETERS
AP Sports Writer
INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Game 1 of the NBA championship series was a showcase for speed. Don't expect the same for the next meeting of the Lakers and the Celtics.

"We know they're going to come out there bumping, shoving, pushing and scratching," Los Angeles guard Magic Johnson said of tonight's Game 2 matchup with Boston.

"It's going to be more physical and we've got to be ready for that."

"We're going to have to bang and push inside and put pressure on the Lakers," the Celtics' Larry Bird said. "It's up to us to stop them."

"I still like our chances, I really do. If we play our style of banging and pushing, we can do it."

But all of Bird's comments were not flattering. "We have guys on this team that don't want to play on the road any more," said Bird, who spurred his team in 1984 by calling them

"sissies."

"I can understand the shooting not being there, being better at home, but the defense, the rebounds and the assists aren't there either."

The Lakers, their flashy fast break virtually a blur Tuesday night, raced to a 126-113 victory over the Celtics in the opening game of the best-of-seven title showdown.

Johnson said he doesn't expect a replay of that game, when the Lakers shot out to a quick 9-0 lead and were clearly in command the rest of the way.

"That (runaway) was unexpected and I don't think the rest of the games will be blowouts," he said. "They'll probably be more like our usual games with Boston, go down to the last minute with somebody making a play that decides it."

"They'll try to get more rebounds, and they'll try to get make us walk the ball back down the court," Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said.

It's doubtful that the Celtics, who need to slow down the tempo of the game if they're to beat Los Angeles, can keep the Lakers from running. The Celtics, who had just two days off before the finals while the Lakers had an eight-day layoff, looked sluggish in the opening game. Naging injuries to forward Kevin McHale, center Robert Parish and guard Danny Ainge probably contributed to that.

"Seventy-six of their points were in the running game," Boston Coach K.C. Jones said. "If we can't slow them down, it's an uphill battle for us."

With McHale and Parish limping, the Lakers also were dominant on the boards, outrebounding the Celtics 51-40.

Abdul-Jabbar, although saying he wasn't certain how much effect the Boston had, did say that the Celtics seemed slow getting up and down the floor and that "McHale and Parish were not very active going to the boards."

"I'm sure they'll bang the boards more now," Abdul-Jabbar, who had a game-high 10 rebounds in the opener, added.

Three grand slams hit in game

Cubs wallop Astros 22-7

By MARIO FOX
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Cubs Manager Gene Michael says he didn't mean to rub it in, even if that's what his batters looked as if they were doing.

"You don't want to rub it in, but you can't stop swinging the bats," Michael said after the Cubs got 21 hits, including six homers, and nine walks to beat the Houston Astros 22-7 Wednesday.

Chicago's Keith Moreland, teammate Brian Dayett and Houston's Billy Hatcher hit grand-slam homers to set a National League record, tying the major-league mark when Baltimore and Texas had three bases-full homers last season.

Moreland said the homer derby at Wrigley Field reminded him of the 23-22 Cubs' 10-inning loss in Chicago to Philadelphia in 1979, when the third baseman was a member of the Phillies. That was the last time the Cubs scored 22 runs in a game.

Moreland said he was glad nobody was calling him one of the "Stump Brothers" anymore, but he wished the Cubs could have saved some of their hits for the first-place St. Louis Cardinals who open a four-game series today.

Dayett said the slugfest — in which the Cubs scored in every inning at bat, including nine runs with three homers in the first inning — reminded him of high-scoring sandlot games of his youth.

"I thought my mom would call me home when it got dark," Dayett said. Three of Dayett's four home runs this season have been off Houston starter Bob Knepper.

"Poor Bob," said Dayett, who had no explanation of his success against the Astro left-hander. "It's just one of those things I guess."

Winds, blowing at 12 mph toward right field, were not a factor except to help Astro Bill Doran's two-run homer in the first inning land in the right-field stands.

For Astro Manager Han Lanier, it was a long, frustrating afternoon.

"Anytime you give up runs in every inning, it looks like you're not even trying," said Lanier, who held a closed-door team meeting after the game, which saw the most runs ever scored by an Astro opponent.

Lanier said he told his hurlers they needed to throw more inside pitches.

Hatcher, whose bases-loaded blast was off Rick Sutcliffe, the league's first pitcher with eight wins, said, "The homer was nice, but it was embarrassing to lose like this."

Andre Dawson tied a team record by hitting his fifth homer in three days for the Cubs who had 35 runs and 39 hits in the past two games. They beat Houston 13-2 Tuesday.

Sutcliffe, 8-2, gave up seven runs and seven hits in five innings. Ed Lynch and Dickie Noles each pitched two innings for the Cubs.

After Doran's homer put the Astros ahead 2-0, Chicago rallied for nine runs in the bottom of the first off Knepper, 2-6. Dayett's bases-loaded slam landed was followed by a solo shot from Moreland's homer. Manny Trillo, Sutcliffe and Bob Dernier hit consecutive singles — Dernier's bunt hit scoring Trillo. Ryne Sandberg followed with a three-run homer.

The Cubs went ahead 11-2 in the second when Jody Davis scored on a wild pitch and Dayett dashed home on a Moreland's sacrifice fly.

In the third, Dawson homered and Moreland added an RBI single.

Hatcher homered after Sutcliffe had walked the bases loaded in the fourth.

Dernier's RBI single in the bottom of the fourth gave Chicago a 14-6 advantage.

Craig Reynolds' RBI single in the fifth cut the Cubs' lead to 14-7.

But Chicago came right back with pinch-hitter Gary Matthews hitting a two-run single.

Moreland hit his bases-loaded homer in the sixth, and pinch-hitter Jim Sundberg finished the scoring with a two-run homer for Chicago in the seventh.

Elsewhere in the National League, Los Angeles defeated New York 5-2, Cincinnati beat St. Louis 6-4, San Francisco defeated Philadelphia 4-1, Montreal edged San Diego 4-3, and Pittsburgh downed Atlanta 4-1.

Dodgers 5, Mets 2

The New York Mets have been very concerned about starting pitchers who have been on the sidelines this season. Now, it's time to worry about a starter having his problems on the mound.

Franklin Stubbs hit a three-run homer with two outs in the first inning as Los Angeles beat New York and right-hander Ron Darling 5-2 Wednesday night.

Darling has not won since April 22, a span covering eight starts.

After Darling walked Steve Sax and Mike Marshall, Stubbs hit a 3-1 pitch deep over the center-field fence for his 10th homer and second in two games.

Orel Hershiser, 5-6, allowed two runs, one earned, in 6 2-3 innings. He struck out five and walked one. Matt Young finished for the Dodgers and picked up his sixth save.

Giants 4, Phillies 1

San Francisco turned five double plays and Mike LaCoss limited Philadelphia to seven hits in 6 1-3 innings.

LaCoss, 6-2, became the top winner on the Giants' staff and Jeff Robinson finished the game for his eighth save.

"Obviously, the key for us was the plays Chris Speier and (shortstop) Matt Williams made in the bunt situations," LaCoss said.

Reds 6, Cardinals 4

Right-hander Pat Pacillo earned his first major-league victory with a little help from his friends.

Nick Esasky hit his third homer in three games — a three-run shot in the fifth — and Eric Davis robbed St. Louis first baseman Jack Clark of a home run for the second straight game.

Davis stretched his glove over the center-field fence to deny Clark a two-run homer in the fourth.

Expos 4, Padres 3

Neal Heaton won his fourth straight game and Tim Lincecum and Andres Galarraga hit solo homers, sending San Diego to its 41st loss in 53 games.

Heaton, acquired from Minnesota for ace reliever Jeff Reardon, improved to 7-2. Tim Burke pitched the final three innings for his sixth save despite yielding two eighth-inning runs.

Pirates 4, Braves 1

Third baseman Jim Morrison went 4-for-4, including two run-scoring doubles, as Pittsburgh beat Atlanta for the second straight game.

The Pirates came into Atlanta with a six-game losing streak. Rick Reuschel pitched a two-hitter in beating Atlanta, 4-1, Tuesday. Bob Kipper and three relievers limited the Braves to five hits on Wednesday.

Reds' Davis is player of month

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Reds center fielder Eric Davis has been named National League Player of the Month for May. He also won the award in April.

Davis is the first National League player to win Player of the Month honors in consecutive months since Dave Parker did so with the Pittsburgh Pirates in August and September 1978.

In May, Davis hit .329, with 27 hits in 82 times at bat. His hits included six doubles and 12 home runs, including three grand slams. During the month, Davis scored 23 runs, had 36 RBIs and three game-winning RBIs. He had 11 stolen bases in 11 attempts.

Isiah Thomas says he made peace with Bird

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Isiah Thomas concedes his joke about Boston's Larry Bird went sour, but the Detroit Pistons star says what he views as media stereotyping of black and white athletes is even less of a laughing matter.

Thomas said Wednesday he has made peace with Bird, the target of disparaging comments in the wake of Boston's victory over Detroit in the NBA Eastern Conference finals.

But Thomas said the Celtics forward, who is white, remained the symbol of media double standards in comparing athletes of both races' respective abilities.

"When Bird makes a great play, they say it's his thinking and his work habits," Thomas, who is black, told the Detroit Free Press in Wednesday editions.

"When black players excel, it's referred to as God-given talent ... It's like, with us, if we don't practice we'll be good anyway, you know?"

The controversy erupted Saturday, after Boston defeated Detroit, 117-114, in the seventh game of the Eastern Conference final.

Detroit rookie Dennis Rodman called Bird overrated and said Bird has won the NBA's Most Valuable Player award three times because he is white.

Thomas, asked afterward to comment on his black teammate's remarks, said: "I think Larry is a very, very good basketball player. An exceptional talent, but I have to agree with Rodman. If he were black, he'd be just another good guy."

Thomas called a news conference Wednesday to clarify his reaction to Rodman's remarks, saying his comments were meant sarcastically.

"In print, you don't get the laughter," Thomas said. "In print, you don't get the sarcasm. In print, you get what you get."

Thomas said he spoke Wednesday morning with Bird, whose Celtics lost to the Los Angeles Lakers a night earlier in the first game of the NBA finals. Bird told him not to worry about the comments voiced after Saturday's game, Thomas said.

Bird said he had no hard feelings.

"I like Isiah. I never really held it against him," Bird said Wednesday from Los Angeles, where the Celtics were preparing for Game 2 of the NBA finals tonight. "He put his whole heart into winning that series. He thought they should win it and I can understand how he could be frustrated."

"I don't know if he said a lot of the things or if somebody came and said, 'Rodman said this and do you agree.'"

Thomas also told the Free Press that Bird is "the best in the league at his position, without a doubt. I think Magic (Lakers guard Earvin Johnson) is the best player in the game today. And Bird is second."

Thomas said he remained concerned about racial stereotyping even if the Bird controversy was to die down.

"I have heard the media refer to a black athlete as a player with 'natural ability' while performing a great play," Thomas said in a statement released by the Pistons.

"For someone to make that comment, they are not taking into consideration the rigorous training schedule and numerous hours of practice it takes to reach that level."

"It is time the media and the public stop focusing on the race of the athlete or anyone else, stop stereotyping people and start recognizing an individual's achievement," he added.

Bubble gum company recruits Rose, Gibson

NEW YORK (AP) — Pete Rose and Hall of Fame pitcher Bob Gibson are among the baseball greats recruited by a bubble-gum maker for a campaign against that major-league tradition, chewing tobacco.

"Chewing tobacco doesn't have a thing to do with being a great baseball player," said Rose, Cincinnati Reds manager and baseball's all-time hits leader.

"It's dirty, it's filthy and it gets your uniform stained," added Gibson.

The makers of Bubblicious Bubble Gum paid Rose, Gibson, New York Yankees outfielder Dave Winfield and California Angels first baseman Wally Joyner to serve on an "advisory council" for its program against smokeless tobacco.

Smokeless tobacco is used by about 12 million Americans, a third of them under age 21. Researchers have linked it to oral cancer and other mouth diseases.

Michael J. Kerrigan, president of the Smokeless Tobacco Council, accused Bubblicious of waging "a cynical campaign" bound to backfire. "The problem is reverse psychology — if you tell kids not to do something, they'll want to do it."

Gum is not without its own harmful effects, Kerrigan added: "People who live in houses based on sugar shouldn't throw stones."

Texas survives 3 comebacks by Florida State in 6-4 win

By STEVEN WINE
Associated Press Writer

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Two iron-man pitching performances, three comebacks by Florida State and the 10th-inning heroics of Scott Coolbaugh made an impression on Texas Coach Cliff Gustafson, a veteran of 14 College World Series.

"We've been involved in some great games here and I've seen a lot of great games here," Gustafson said following his team's 6-4 victory Wednesday night. "But for sheer drama and thrill after thrill, I don't think it'd be very easy to top this one."

In Wednesday's other elimination game, Louisiana State beat Arkansas 5-2. Oklahoma State and Stanford, the only teams without a loss in the double-elimination tournament, play tonight.

On Friday, Louisiana State plays Stanford and Oklahoma State faces Texas.

The top-rated Longhorns' Curt Krippner, who pitched nine innings Tuesday in a 6-1 loss to Stanford, threw three innings of shutout relief against Florida State to raise his record to 14-1.

"Once I got in there I didn't even care if I was hurting or not," Krippner said. "I was going to keep throwing, because I think I was all on adrenalin. I wanted to win that game pretty bad."

Krippner replaced starter Mark Petkovsek with nobody out in the eighth inning and the tying run on third. That run scored on a passed ball, but Krippner checked the Seminoles on one hit and one walk the rest of the way.

The Longhorns, 60-10, overcame a 13-strikeout performance by Richie Lewis, 15-4. The 5-foot-10 Lewis lost two College World Series games in the 10th inning and threw more than 150 pitches each time.

Coolbaugh doubled homed the lead run in the top of the 10th and scored on a double by Mike Patrick. In the bottom of the inning, Coolbaugh made a nice pickup at third base to start a double play that ended Florida State's last comeback attempt.

The Seminoles, 55-18, aided by solo homers from Ed Fulton and Edwin Alicea, had rallied to tie the game at 1-1, 2-2 and 4-4.

Lewis escaped a none-out, bases-loaded jam in the fourth. Petkovsek duplicated the feat an inning later.

Louisiana State's Gregg Patterson earned his second College World Series victory and Jack Voigt hit a tie-breaking two-run homer in the seventh inning to eliminate Arkansas.

Patterson, 11-2, allowed only four hits and three walks, but trailed 2-0 after six innings.

Dave Cunningham's double tied the game, and Voigt then pulled a curveball over the left field fence for his 16th homer. Voigt said he was planning to hit to right field until he saw the pitch from John Cebuhar, 11-2.

Voigt, 7-for-14 in the tournament, hit the homer into a 12 mph wind.

LSU is 49-18. Arkansas finishes 51-16-1.

Bride and Groom: Weddings more elaborate

By BARBARA MAYER AP Newsfeatures

This fall, when Vivian Dessy, a designer of bridal gowns, married Paul Diamond, a manufacturer of bridal dresses, the couple decided on a formal wedding.

"Being in the industry, I said if we don't have a formal wedding, who will? It was on a Saturday evening, black tie, the works."

Ms. Dessy, 30, says that most of her friends were not married until their late 20s and early 30s and had formal weddings, too.

"Our attitude is that it only happens to you once. I wanted to enjoy everything, and I did. From opening gifts to writing out thank-you notes, I was excited by it all and so was my husband."

Vivian Dessy and her friends apparently are more typical of today's bride than the traditional image of a shy, naive young girl with unformed tastes, says Cele Lalli, editor of Modern Bride magazine.

"Women are marrying later but when they finally do, they want a formal wedding, a very significant and beautiful celebration," according to the editor.

Ms. Lalli finds that today's young couples, brides who are typically 23 years old and grooms who are about 25, know themselves better and also realize that it takes tremendous financial and emotional wherewithal to make a marriage work. She adds that couples who have experienced the trauma of divorce either of their own parents or of friends are more determined to avoid divorce themselves.

Ms. Lalli says that "90 percent of the mail I get comes from brides-to-be who don't know how to handle the situation of estranged parents who can't be in the same room together. To have a wedding they have to figure out how to accommodate families who are bitterly split."

Couples seem to know one another better and communicate more closely, says Bill Heaton, president of Bridal Expos of East Islip, N.Y.

He says that the groom is now an active participant in the wedding plans, although that was not the case he began running bridal shows.

"When we started the bridal expos eight years ago, the bride and her mother were always together. Now you see young men and women coming in together. We see brides and grooms examining the crystal, making joint decisions. The bride asks the groom what he thinks about the bridal dresses on the runway during the fashion show. He used to go watch a football game and she took care of the wedding."

Heaton's observation was confirmed by a survey of brides-to-be at bridal fairs around the country, conducted for Lenox China & Crystal by Alice Kolator.

She found that "today's bride is best friends with her spouse." Approximately 96 percent of the respondents said their fiancé was their best friend and that they shared views on most issues.

About 70 percent met the spouse at work, school or through mutual friends; only 7 percent met the groom at a singles bar, restaurant or party. The qualities admired most in future husbands included sense of humor, patience and intelligence.

Almost 40 percent of the future brides said the relationship started as a friendship and then turned to romance. Only one in five said the relationship was love at first sight. The brides also knew their future husbands for a considerable length of time. More than 58 percent knew the spouse for two or more years before getting married.

Of the brides interviewed, 99 percent said they planned to work away from home after marriage and 88 percent said they would work fulltime.

Bridal Expos surveys attitudes and plans of the couples who attend their events. The firm has found that weddings are getting more elaborate. For example, says Heaton, today there may be five to seven bridesmaids compared to three or four several years ago. The average number of guests now approaches 200 as compared to a previous 135.

Microscopic sponges provide goo-free all-day sun protection

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A dry powder made of microscopic sponges should help people avoid skin cancer by providing a goo-free, once-a-day way to put on sunscreen, researchers say.

The new product, which developers say will be on the market in a year or so, lasts 12 hours, won't come off in water and eliminates the greasy coating that makes regular sunscreen a nuisance.

"It's got important possibilities," said Dr. Albert M. Kligman of the University of Pennsylvania. "Anything we can do to get people to protect themselves against sunlight is valuable."

He said many people are needlessly exposing themselves to skin cancer, simply because they can't stand sunscreen that is "gunky, greasy stuff." With the new product, "Nobody will say, 'I won't use this because it's too oily.'"

The new approach was developed by Advanced Polymer Systems of Redwood City, and was demonstrated Monday at a meeting of the American Cancer Society.

Exposure to sunshine increases the odds of getting skin cancer. More than 500,000 people each year get skin cancer.

Advanced Polymer's research director, chemist Sergio Nacht, said the secret to the new sunscreen is tiny plastic sponges.

These are spheres about 16 one-hundredths of an inch across. When magnified 5,000 times, they look something like golf balls. Each one is covered with 250,000 little pores. The pores of just one sponge, if laid back to back, would measure 10 feet long.

The sponges are soaked with liquid sun screen, which is slowly released during the day as people move about.

"The mere movement of muscles will tend to squeeze the tiny sponges," allowing the sunscreen to ooze out, said Nacht.

When applied to the skin in powder form, the sunscreen quickly disappears, leaving the skin feeling dry but slightly slippery. Nacht said the powder could be added to many liquids, so this form of sunscreen could become a part of body creams, eye makeup and aftershave lotion, among other cosmetics.

He said negotiations are under way for cosmetic companies to produce sunscreens in the new form.

Ticks spread to joint disease

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Six months ago, every joint in my arms and legs suddenly hurt and became swollen. My doctor diagnosed me as having Lyme disease and rheumatoid arthritis. I am taking Chlorinil and penicillin, but my pain persists and I am exhausted all the time. I'm 63, and I wonder if I will ever get better.

DEAR READER — Lyme disease, a tick-borne arthritis, was first described in residents of Lyme, Conn. Prior to developing swollen joints, patients experience fever, chills, headache, rash and malaise (feeling bad). Rarely, heart-conduction disturbances or meningitis (infection of the brain covering) may complicate the illness. Treatment consists of antibiotics and sometimes cortisone, if the inflammation is advanced.

One characteristic of Lyme disease is that symptoms tend to flare up for weeks at a time, then decline in severity for up to three years. No permanent joint damage follows the infection.

I question the additional diagnosis of rheumatoid arthritis, because Lyme disease predominantly affects the joints and is quite sufficient to explain your symptoms.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My mother works at a hospital and must have a TB test every year. For the past two years hers have come back positive, but no further action has been taken. I don't see any sense in taking the test if they aren't concerned about a positive reading. Can you please explain what the test is and whether I should be concerned?

DEAR READER — The TB test is a skin test to determine whether a person has been exposed to tuberculosis. Exposure does not necessarily mean that there is an infection that must be treated. However, a prudent doctor would want to make sure by obtaining a chest X-ray to check for pulmonary TB.

greater risk for TB exposure than other people. Therefore, most hospitals require annual TB tests of their employees. The purpose of this screening program is to detect positive reactors who may require treatment.

If your mother was skin-test negative and turned positive two years ago, she should have annual chest X-rays to make sure that she did not contract a pulmonary infection. She should be concerned that no one followed up on her TB-test conversion from negative to positive. She should ask her personal doctor to investigate further — not only into her health, but also into the hospital policy that allows this sort of inadequate care of its employees.

Once a person changes from negative to positive, he or she will continue to react that way indefinitely. Therefore, your mother needs no more skin tests, since she is a positive reactor already. What she does need is close monitoring to make sure that her simple exposure does not turn into a more complicated and serious infection.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My son, 6, is allergic to insect bites and will swell with welts the size of golf balls. I've tried everything from skin cream to one garlic tablet daily, with no results. Can you offer any suggestions?

DEAR READER — Insect bites usually release histamine from the cells of the skin. Histamine is a naturally occurring chemical, and when it seeps into tissues, it causes a reaction: swelling, itching and — sometimes — pain.

Your son appears to have a large release of histamine. Therefore, he could be helped by taking antihistamine medicines — drugs that neutralize or block the effects of histamine. These medicines, such as chlorpheniramine and diphenhydramine, are available in over-the-counter preparations.

In addition, an allergist might be able to counteract the histamine-effects by compounding desensitization injections, which, when administered at intervals, may reduce the violence

DEAR DR. GOTT — I suffered an acute myocardial infarction eight years ago. Since then I have been given several diet sheets from two different hospitals. These claim that olives, avocados, olive oil, etc., are no good. Since then, I have read that they are beneficial. There also is conflicting information on the benefits of nuts. My cholesterol levels are normal and I check out fine in all other respects. Can you shed some light on these conflicting reports?

DEAR READER — High blood cholesterol clearly is associated with coronary artery disease and heart attacks. If the cholesterol is elevated, a low cholesterol diet will be of benefit. Your doctor can tell you how stringent a diet you need, depending on your general health and blood-cholesterol determination.

Because your blood cholesterol is "normal" — and by current standards, that would mean below 220mg/dl — you probably don't have to be as picky an eater as does a patient with a higher level. For example, nuts, shellfish and olive oil usually are considered to be "safe" foods, in moderation, whereas red meat, eggs and dairy products should be avoided.

Hospital diet sheets sometimes do not reflect the most up-to-date scientific advances. After all, new nutritional discoveries are reported every year. Again, check with your doctor. It's currently believed that the amount of fat in non-mammalian edibles, such as nuts and vegetables, is not a health hazard.

To give you more information, I'm sending you a free copy of my Health Report, EATING RIGHT FOR A HEALTHY HEART. Others who want the report should send $1 and their name and address to P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to mention the title.

Southfork president has vision for facility

By STEPHEN SOLTIS Plano Star Courier

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Ken Brixey has an ambitious vision for the future of Southfork Ranch, the 200-acre, real-life setting for the fictional "Dallas" television series. As Southfork's president and chief executive officer, Brixey wants to see the complex develop into the leading convention and party facility in the country. It's a goal he matter-of-factly says is "in the realm of possibility." "I already believe we are becoming the premiere touring attraction for the state," he said. "Our visitorship is at about a half a million people per year. And according to the United States Travel Data Center, these tourists are pumping 44 million direct dollars into the Metroplex economy each year.

"A huge portion of our visitors come from Europe, especially England. We want to develop into being one of the most receptive tour operators in the U.S. By bringing a lot of folks to Southfork, we benefit ourselves and the local area (Plano), as well as the state." A former church and amusement park musical director, Brixey was also general manager of Elvis Presley's Graceland and marketing director of the estate — a result of a 20-year personal association with Presley. Brixey, a native of Mountain Grove, Mo., went to Memphis State University on a football scholarship. A shoulder injury led him to give up football for a major in church music, but the football was an entree to meet Presley. "Elvis was a football fanatic, and on Saturday mornings, he would invite a group of us out to play pickup football games. He got so wrapped up in the games that he would sometimes rent entire high school football stadiums so we could all play. I was always on the other team playing against Elvis."

Brixey says he never was part of Presley's inner circle. Instead, his musical interests led him to work with churches, eventually as music director at the First Baptist Church in San Marcos and later to another church in Jackson, Tenn. "But I really got my first big break when I went back to Memphis and became minister of music at Parkway Village Baptist Church," Brixey says.

Memphis in 1965 was marred by civil unrest, which culminated in the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. In order to get involved with the civil rights movement, Brixey says, he started looking for ways to promote and project the image of the church. He developed a church-sponsored youth choir which became internationally recognized as the Four and Twenty gospel troupe. "The choir was a tremendous asset for Parkway Village," he said. "In fact we were becoming more famous than the church itself. We eventually became hooked up with the Holiday Inn Corp., whose main headquarters was in Memphis.

"For four years we worked for them and presented gospel-oriented music in 27 different countries. We did it all — television shows, radio programs, conventions and various special events." Brixey's success with Four and Twenty led to the music directorship of Memphis' Liberty Land in 1975. He wrote, produced and directed seven shows each year for the park. It was during this time that his relationship with Presley began to revive.

"On several occasions, Elvis would rent out the whole park so he could spend the evening with his daughter," Brixey said. "He was always very cordial and gracious. I began to recognize and respect his music even more since I was required to produce shows that reflected the influence he had on rock 'n roll.

"On the night he died in 1977, I was directing one such show, and we were all so moved by his death that we decided to close the park for the remainder of the night. I don't think the impact of his death was felt any harder than right there in Memphis."

In 1982, Brixey received an offer from Graceland officials who wanted to open the famous homestead to the public. During his two years at Graceland, he wrote a book about Elvis' home and helped market a film titled "Elvis Presley's Graceland."

However, when entrepreneur Terry Trippett bought Southfork in 1984, Brixey says he was so impressed with the innovative spirit and vision behind the owner that he found himself having to choose between staying at Graceland or setting his sights on Plano. In August 1985, he was "made a believer," and the result has been what he calls a great two-year experience at Southfork. "We're doing things here that are both exciting and challenging," he said. "The addition of the $9 million oil well — which is currently under construction at the ranch — is just one example of the aggressive nature of this project. Besides the 20 days each year when Lorimar films "Dallas" out here, we always seem to have special events going on."

Brixey and his wife, Ann, who is in the real estate business, live in Plano. They have two grown sons and a grandson who live in Memphis. Besides increasing tourist, party and convention attendance, Brixey says he would eventually like to see Southfork add a television soundstage to show people just how an episode of "Dallas" "is really filmed."

Dollar seeks solid ground

By JOHN CUNNIFF AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — In large measure, the dollar's immediate value and the volatility of securities markets rested nervously on Volcker and Venice.

There is a string that connects them all, suggests Merrill Lynch economist Jack Lavery. Only a slight tug on that string, already taut with tension, produces a quiver in marketplaces, where investors seek certainty.

Paul Volcker pulled the string Tuesday with the announcement he would retire in August from the chairmanship of the Federal Reserve Board, which sets the nation's monetary, or money supply and interest rate, policy.

Even before the announcement there was great tension. The reaction, therefore, was immediate if not necessarily long-lasting: The price of U.S. Treasury bonds plunged, and the trading value of the dollar declined again.

This seemed logical because Volcker had supported the trading value of the dollar by allowing U.S. interest rates to rise, making dollar-denominated investments more attractive to foreign investors. He had helped stabilize the dollar's fall.

There was no such assurance immediately that economist Alan Greenspan, his successor, would be inclined equally to offer such support. To do so, it is argued, would tend to slow domestic growth and create problems for U.S. exports.

The timing added to the uncertainty, because no one really could say what outcome could be expected from the Venice summit meeting next week of the so-called Group of Seven industrialized nations, whose members seek to coordinate economic goals.

But not everyone agrees that the dollar should be stabilized at its present level.

If, for example, the dollar continued falling in relation to the Japanese yen, it would enable American exports to Japan to be priced more competitively. It also would raise the cost of Japanese goods in the United States.

Judged by its actions over the past few weeks, the Federal Reserve under Volcker sought to slow or end the dollar's long decline in value. Interest rates were allowed to move higher, and the dollar did indeed stabilize.

Volcker had support for the move, but it was far from unanimous. To allow interest rates to rise and threaten U.S. economic growth was seen as foolish by many highly regarded institutions and individuals. They feared recession.

But those who support a tighter money policy are inclined to argue that a further decline in the dollar threatens not just a recession but an economic disaster, with foreigners abandoning their U.S. assets.

The latter scenario is that a declining dollar would cause foreigners to pull their funds out of the United States, thus depleting the nation's capital base and causing a shortage of funds that would drive up interest rates.

In effect, those who want the dollar to fall further and those who want to stabilize it or even cause it to rise buttress their views with the same threat, that of economic disaster.

Therefore, whatever course is taken by the next Fed chief is unlikely to represent any sudden departure from Volcker's policies. But it doesn't mean no change at all.

No less an authority than J.P. Morgan & Co. has scorned the notion that further dollar declines would mean investors would abandon dollar assets.

"The far more likely development is that investor appetites for dollar assets would increase as dollar assets become cheaper in foreign currency terms," its economists stated. "That is the way markets work."

City closes lemonade stand run by young brothers

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The long arm of the law is putting the squeeze on the Merrick brothers lemonade stand.

The brothers, Chip, 14, J.J., 7, and 5-year-old Ty have been told that they are violating city zoning rules by operating a lemonade stand based in their front yard in a residential area of the city.

The boys may not understand why their profitable business was shut down, but even the youngest one understands what happened.

"A man came by and told us to shut down," the 5-year-old said. "It means we can't sell lemonade anymore."

The boys have operated the lemonade stand for the past two summers, working up to seven hours a day, five days a week, serving lemonade, canned soft drinks and homemade chocolate-chip cookies.

They averaged $150 to $200 a week in business and piled up enough change to pay for a home computer and help finance their family's vacation to Disney World in Florida last year.

But the stand was closed down last week after an anonymous complaint was made to the City Hall. An apologetic city inspector informed the boys' mother that the lemonade stand violated city zoning laws against commercial enterprises in a residential neighborhood.

The city is sticking to its rules despite overwhelming public opinion in support of the Merrick boys.

Their customers included neighborhood kids, businessmen and a sheriff's deputy.

The stand sits abandoned under a huge tree, its front draped with a message printed through their computer: "Closed by City Order."

Fort Worth Mayor Bob Bolen, realizing the city's caught between code enforcement and an innocent pastime, sympathizes with the boys.

Bolen Tuesday offered their father, Bruce Merrick, a piece of his own nearby commercial property as a relocation site for the stand.

The offer was rejected. "I feel like Mayor Bolen wants to help us, but that's not what we really want," said the elder Merrick, a youth minister at Birchman Baptist Church. "To us, the home is important and that's where we want our children."

A city official says making an exception for the lemonade stand would "open a can of worms."

"It's an unpopular decision, but if we let them stay, where does it end? Do we allow hot dogs? Do we allow tacos?" asked Rufino Mendoza, superintendent for code enforcement. "It could escalate to too much."

Chip Merrick, who unhesitatingly terms the city's decision "ridiculous," said he doesn't plan to violate the law, but to change it.

"I'd like to see the ordinance reinterpreted or rewritten so that kids under a certain age could have a lemonade stand," he told the Dallas Times Herald Wednesday.

The parents, who require the boys to give 10 percent of their earnings to the church, say they are prepared to take the issue before the City Council.

"We feel like the zoning law just does not apply in this case," the father said. "We've taught the boys that even if the rule is unfair or wrong, it's still the rule — until it's changed."
