Budget to be handled later

Clements calls session for tort reform

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Legislature ended its regular session without a budget or action on several other issues, but Gov. Bill Clements early today called an immediate special session to deal with one — civil justice reform.

When the midnight Monday deadline arrived, lawmakers ended their 140-day session without passing a budget for the first time in 26 years.

A Senate filibuster, meanwhile, killed a bill that would reform the state's civil justice system.

"After much deliberation and with the solid recommendations of the lieutenant governor and the speaker, we will meet again in the morning at 11 o'clock to consider tort reform. So there you are," Clements announced about 1:20 a.m.

Clements said legislative leaders had told him the tort reform issue could be settled in one or two days, and that is all this special session will deal with.

However, still facing a 1988-89 deficit projected at $5.8 billion, lawmakers also will meet in special session on June 22 for more budget work, the governor said.

"Everybody has to realize that the fun and games situation is over. We're going to get down to serious business now. We're going to focus sharply on what the problem is with the budget process," Clements said.

The House and Senate adjourned Monday night after their 140-day session.

But for the first time since 1961, the final gavel fell without passage of a spending plan for state government.

"Nobody likes to end a legislative session with unfinished business, particularly when the unfinished business is as important as the state budget. It is a disappointing failure. No one can whitewash that," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

House Speaker Gib Lewis was more upbeat.

"I don't consider this session a failure at all," Lewis said. "If you go back and really just try to find something besides the budget to discuss, you'll find that this has been one of the most productive sessions, he said.

Lewis predicted that the special session would OK a balanced budget.

"I think we'll do what has to be done. Unfortunately, we were not able to do it in the regular session," he said.

Clements, whose threat to veto any tax increase greater than $2.9 billion helped deadlock budget action, said he thinks the special session will agree to a spending and tax package he can approve.

But that means no more than the $2.9 billion to be raised by making last year's "temporary" sales and motor fuel tax increases permanent, he said.

"Make permanent the temporary taxes. And I'm not going to go beyond that. That's all there is to it. That is plain English," Clements said.

However, the governor left open the possibility he might also OK a plan to have voters decide on a 34-cent sales tax increase dedicated to prisons and on creating a state-run lottery.

"I think all the pieces are there if we could just get our heads together and all start talking about the same thing," Clements said.

Clements' budget proposal totaled $36.9 billion for two years, while the House budget totaled $39.4 billion and the Senate favored a $40 billion plan that would have required nearly a $6 billion tax hike.

"I blame the Senate," Clements said. "I don't blame the Legislature, I blame the Senate. I have no problems with the House ... There isn't any question where the lack of cooperation is. It's in the Senate."

Hobby, who presides over the Senate, said this budget failure wasn't the first time lawmakers were unable to deal with the financial crisis that hit the state in 1986, when oil prices fell from near $30 a barrel to less than $10.

Two special sessions last summer also failed to enact a permanent solution to the severe loss of tax revenue caused by the decline in oil prices and the economic problems that triggered, Hobby said.

"It once again failed to address the budget issues, which is unfortunate," Hobby said.

"It should have only taken one special session a year ago."

But he said taxpayers shouldn't be angry with lawmakers.

"It's a very difficult situation with the economy in transition. The experience we're having is not different from that of other states that have had the same problem," he said.

While leaders were talking about the budget, lawmakers passed several major bills Monday.

The Legislature voted to ban late-term abortions, take beer cans out of drivers' hands, partially deregulate the trucking industry, crack down on campus hazing, allow quarantining of some AIDS patients and make it tougher for government officials to do the public's business in private.

School Grades

Groundwork on the paving job at Whiteface Stadium has started in conjunction with leveling at La Plata Junior High for classroom construction. Graders were halted by heavy rains and mud last weekend. The new surface of the parking lot should be completed by football season.

Bill may force disclosure of Gulf plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan would have to provide Congress with new details about U.S. plans in the Persian Gulf under terms of a bill which House Speaker Jim Wright says is likely to be approved by the House.

Meanwhile, President Reagan has said he will bring up the question of allied help in protecting oil tankers in the gulf when he meets with other Western leaders at next week's summit in Venice.

In a speech Monday spelling out his goals for the meeting, Reagan said, "We will be discussing the common security interests shared by Western democracies in the Persian Gulf."

He noted the deaths aboard the USS Stark when it was hit by an Iraqi missile and said the sailors died "while guarding a chokepoint of freedom, deterring aggression and reaffirming America's willingness to protect its vital interests. Yet, the American people are aware that it is not our interests alone that are being protected."

Wright, D-Texas, said of the Persian Gulf legislation, "I think it will pass and pass by a substantial bipartisan vote." In an interview, he noted that the measure is backed by leaders of both parties. It is co-sponsored by Wright and Republican leader Bob Michel, R-Ill.

If it passes the House, the bill will go to the Senate, also controlled by Democrats, where a vote is likely later in the week. Passage in that chamber is also expected since Senate Democratic and Republican leaders back the bill.

Reagan's aides have said he will sign the bill, which was worked out to satisfy congressional complaints last week that Reagan had not adequately consulted with Capitol Hill about his plans for the gulf.

Legislators were worried about Reagan's plan to put U.S. flags and captains on Kuwaiti tankers, bringing the ships under the protection of the United States. Iraq and Iran have been fighting a long, bloody war. Kuwait is a strong ally of Iraq.

The congressional fears rose in the wake of the May 17 Iraqi missile attack on the Navy frigate Stark, which killed 37 American seamen.

The House bill would require the White House to send Congress a report within seven days after Reagan signs the law.

The report, which would include both classified and unclassified portions, would require an assessment of the military threat to U.S. forces and details of the administration's effort to enlist U.S. allies in the effort to protect gulf shipping.

Abrams facing tough testimony questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams faced tough questioning today by congressional Iran-Contra investigators who say his previous testimony is shot through with contradictions, inaccuracies and apparent misrepresentations.

"He has given inaccurate information; he has a lot of explaining to do. ... He faces hard questioning," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., a member of the Senate Iran-Contra committee.

And Sen. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence committee as well as a member of the Senate's Iran-Contra panel, said there are multiple conflicts in what Abrams told the Senate intelligence panel, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the presidential Tower commission.

Cohen said the joint investigating committees also will explore with Abrams, 38, who heads the State Department's Latin American division, just what he knows about secret U.S. efforts to facilitate the resupply of Nicaragua's Contra rebels by "private benefactors" at a time when Congress' Boland amendment barred direct or indirect U.S. aid. Abrams' knowledge of clandestine efforts to open a "southern front" in the Contra's war against Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government also will be examined, Cohen said.

Committee members also were ready with questions about the Reagan administration's attempts to obtain aid for the Contras from other countries, including Abrams' own solicitation of $10 million from the Sultan of Brunei.

Abrams told the Tower commission that retired Maj. Gen. John Singlaub telephoned him from Asia in the summer of 1986, asking that prospective foreign donors be told the request for money was official. Abrams said he told Singlaub he couldn't help him because it would not be right.

But Singlaub testified that, in fact, Abrams telephoned him in Asia to instruct him not to ask for money since the solicitation would be done at the highest levels.

At a news conference, Cohen and Nunn were reminded that Abrams has testified the administration was never involved in the resupply effort during the period in which such aid was proscribed.

Ann Landers

Unload anger on counselor

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Several months ago I discovered that my husband was having an affair. Cheating is not unusual these days and I could have overlooked it, but the affair happened to be with my daughter (his stepdaughter).

He said "Mary" instigated it—that she wanted to show her appreciation for the car he had bought her and for the many times he had bailed her out of trouble when she spent too much money.

I forgave him the first time and again the second time. However, when I walked in on them a third time I decided I could not live with him another day and my daughter's duplicitous behavior could not be justified on any grounds.

These two traitors have destroyed my life, humiliated me in the worst possible way and torn our family apart. I am so filled with rage that I can barely be civil to anyone. I am smart enough to know that my need for revenge will not hurt them in the least, but it will destroy me.

How can I put this nightmare behind me and make a new life for myself? Time alone will not heal this wound.—Miami

DEAR MIAMI: You need to unload your anger on a professional. This is no assignment for a friend or relative, no matter how understand-ding. Select a counselor who doesn't know you or your family. Go as often as necessary. Tell him or her everything you can think of that may relate to what happened. When you get the poison out of your system you will feel better and the whole ugly mess will be behind you. Good luck.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Your column on gas station rip-offs reminded me of driving across country with my wife 17 years ago. We were almost broke. The heap I was driving was evidence of the shape we were in.

Somewhere in Kansas the car overheated and we limped into a roadside shop. The man on duty fixed it by loosening a bolt that held the radiator thermostat. Then he showed me how to do it in case it overheated again. His bill? Zero.

I said I would need a wrench because I had no tools with me. "Take this one," he suggested. I dug in my pocket to pay him. "No, just take it," he added, "I have another one."

I doubt that the man ever got rich, but wherever he is I'll bet he's happy. I still see that little wrench whenever I open my toolbox and my children love to hear me tell the story behind it.—R.G. in Belleville, Ill.

DEAR R.G.: Thanks for sharing that heartwarming story. It proves something a great many people simply don't believe—that there are still a number of generous, caring folks out there.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Remember the flap in your column about a can of tuna that had been in the basement storeroom for 15 years? You said, "Throw it out."

I just read in Vibrant Life that researchers found commercially canned foods remain edible after 15 years. This means that if the can is in good shape (not bent or buckled) the contents are OK forever.

Set the record straight, Annie. You goofed.—Izzy in Las Vegas

DEAR IZ: I am not going to advise my beloved readers to eat anything I wouldn't eat myself. In spite of what the researchers say, I wouldn't take a chance on anything canned that had been around more than five years.

How to — and how much? Find out with Ann Landers' new booklet, "How, What and When to Tell Your Child About Sex." For your copy send 50 cents plus a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11562, Chicago, Ill. 60611-0562.

Herd suffered through an off day

Whitefaces fall to Brewer 5-1 in playoffs

By GARY CHRISTENSEN Sports Editor
ANDREWS - Hopes or dreams of the Hereford Whitefaces to advance to the state finals were killed Saturday here when the Fort Worth Brewer Bears outscored Hereford 5-1 in the class 4A regional playoff.

didn't play well. I don't know what it was.
Suffering an off day was Whiteface pitcher Keith Anderson, who entered the game with an 11-1 season record and a 1.03 earned run average.

First baseman Kyle Streun fielded a grounder down the first base line for the first out, and then threw to third baseman Ross Torres, who tagged out a runner attempted to reach third base.

The only other hits that Hereford could get the rest of the way were a single by Anderson in the sixth inning and a single by Collier in the seventh inning. No other Hereford batters reached base in those last three innings.

'It's been a lot of fun. You can't say enough about our seniors, about what they did on and off the field, their leadership. I think all our other coaches would second that,' the HHS coach said.

Four of Anderson's five strikeouts were recorded after the second inning.
In the fifth inning, Brewer hit a single into centerfield, but McCracken erased that runner from the basepaths when he threw out the runner who was attempting to stretch the single into a double.

Had A Frustrating Day

Hereford Whiteface pitcher Keith Anderson had his most frustrating day of the 1987 season Saturday when the Herd suffered a 5-1 loss to Fort Worth Brewer in Andrews. McDowell's grand slam gives Rangers 11-9 victory

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — When Kansas City's Willie Wilson climbed the center field fence to rob Oddibe McDowell of a base hit in Sunday's game, the Texas Rangers outfielder said he wondered if his luck would ever change.
It did, and in a hurry.
In his first at-bat Monday night, McDowell hit a routine fly ball that Chicago outfielders Daryl Boston and Gary Redus allowed to fall between them for a two-base hit.

Joel Davis with one out, the bases loaded and the Rangers trailing 9-7 in the bottom of the 12th.
Davis, 1-5, had surrendered a leadoff double to Ruben Sierra and after getting a forceout, had walked Pete O'Brien and Larry Parrish to load the bases.
'He (Davis) was struggling with his control,' said McDowell. 'When he threw two bad ones to me, I knew he would be trying to get something in the strike zone.
'I wasn't thinking long ball. The way I've been going, I'm just trying to make good contact, to hit the ball hard. And I did that.'
