Jackson plans to enter race

NEW YORK (AP) — Jesse Jackson told exuberant crowds chanting "Run, Jesse, run" that with their votes he can win the 1988 Democratic nomination and become America's first black president.

"We can win if we use our courage," he said to loud applause Monday from about 3,000 people at a Caribbean-American music festival in Brooklyn.

Jackson, who for months has been an unofficial candidate, began Labor Day by saying he would announce his presidential bid Oct. 10 at his Rainbow Coalition's convention in Raleigh, N.C.

He spent the rest of the day campaigning in Pittsburgh, Cleveland and New York, where he joined striking workers picketing NBC.

Today, Jackson was expected to gain the endorsement of Chicago Mayor Harold Washington, the city's first black mayor, at a union rally against job losses at a plant in suburban Cicero, Ill., the Chicago Tribune reported.

In speeches Monday, Jackson called for more jobs, a halt to illegal drug smuggling, better health care for the poor, better housing and a less confrontational foreign policy.

In Brooklyn, he called for a better deal for working people.

"We want to build our nation from the bottom up, not from the top down — not from Wall Street down, but your street and my street up," Jackson said.

A Time magazine poll published Sunday showed Jackson way ahead of the other Democratic candidates among likely Democratic voters surveyed, with 26 percent. The closest finisher was Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, with 11 percent.

In 1984, Jackson finished third behind Walter Mondale and Gary Hart in the race for the Democratic nomination.

Jackson on Sunday condemned U.S. corporations that close down plants to give the jobs to what he said are exploited workers in Asia.

Jackson said the United States should not undermine governments in Central America, and should work to end racial segregation in South Africa and extract itself from what he said was the chaos it has created in the Mideast.

At NBC headquarters in Manhattan, Jackson joined about 20 striking technicians and newswriters on their 11-week-old picket line.

At a news conference earlier, Jackson dismissed assertions that his candidacy would split the Democratic Party. "We expanded the Democratic party," he said. "We added 2 million voters."

In Pittsburgh, Jackson attended a Roman Catholic mass at a racially mixed inner-city church, and marched in the city's Labor Day parade. In Cleveland, nearly 500 people, many of them blue-collar workers, greeted Jackson with chants of "Run, Jesse, run" at a Labor Day picnic.

Hart will pull out

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Gary Hart will announce tonight that he is not resuming his presidential campaign, Cable News Network reported, but the Colorado Democrat told a newspaper columnist his political fall had generated sympathy.

Hart, who withdrew from the presidential race May 8 amidst news reports about an extramarital relationship with actress-model Donna Rice, is scheduled to be interviewed on a special edition of ABC's "Nightline" tonight.

He will apologize for his actions during his campaign, CNN reported Monday.

NBC Nightly News reported Monday that Hart's advisers were urging him to say again that he would not run for president.

Neither CNN nor NBC cited the source of its report.

The "Nightline" interview with anchorman Ted Koppel will be Hart's first lengthy public appearance since he withdrew.

Speculation that Hart might resume his quest for the Democratic nomination was sparked last month when Bill Dixon, his former campaign manager, told a radio interviewer he believed Hart would get back in the race.

Congress ready to resume session

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress return this week to summer's unfinished business and to a fall schedule dominated by the fight over President Reagan's nomination of Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court.

The Bork hearings begin Sept. 15 in the Senate Judiciary Committee, which first meets Wednesday on Reagan's nomination of William S. Sessions to be director of the FBI.

Little if any opposition is expected to Sessions, 57, chief U.S. district judge for the Western District of Texas. If confirmed by the full Senate, Sessions will replace William H. Webster, whom Reagan named to head the CIA.

Two other presidential nominations promise controversy this week: On Wednesday morning the Senate convenes and votes on whether to shut off a filibuster against Reagan's nomination of Melissa Wells to be ambassador to Mozambique.

On Thursday, the Senate Commerce Committee will consider C. William Verity to replace the late Malcolm Baldrige as secretary of commerce.

A coalition of conservatives including Republican presidential candidate Rep. Jack Kemp of New York has complained to members of the committee about Verity, 70, the former chairman and chief executive officer of the Armo Inc.

The group claimed Verity tried to loosen U.S. trade restrictions with the Soviet Union while serving as co-chairman of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. Trade and Economic Council from 1977 to 1984.

If confirmed, Verity would take over the Commerce Department just as the Senate and House begin to work out differences in major trade legislation each body passed during the summer.

The Judiciary Committee is unlikely to have the final word on Bork; the full Senate will probably consider the nomination in early October.

The Senate has been unable to deal quickly with most major issues this year, including a bill to reform campaign financing. That bill is on Wednesday's floor schedule.

The Senate also has been unable to resolve partisan differences over a $302 billion bill authorizing defense spending for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. Republicans object to Democratic amendments that would limit testing of Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative ("Star Wars").

Both the Senate and the House will have to act again, by Sept. 17, on legislation to raise the national debt. A temporary increase was approved just in time for the August recess, but without agreement on an amendment that would revive the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law.

The Gramm-Rudman law was designed to force Congress and the president to reduce the deficit, but lost its punch last year when the Supreme Court struck down a provision to enforce its goals with across-the-board spending cuts.

All 13 annual appropriations bills for fiscal 1988. The House has passed nine of them, the Senate none. The schedule calls for that work to be completed by Oct. 1, but that's unlikely.

A decision on a tax increase. The Democratic-controlled Congress has passed a budget calling for $19 billion in new taxes, three times the amount (See CONGRESS, Page 2)

Fires still plague West

Thick smoke hampered efforts to fight fires that have charred more than 1,000 square miles in the West, but the weather and the Army cooperated, firefighters gained ground and most evacuees were back home today.

"Every day we're getting a few more fires out," said Jack Wilson of the coordinating Interagency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho.

About 22,000 firefighters were working in eight Western states. Most of the firefighters were in California, where more than 500,000 acres have burned, and Oregon, where fire has ravaged 109,000 acres, Wilson said Monday.

He estimated 1,000 to 1,100 of the more than 1,000 fires started by lightning storms were under some degree of control.

In California, where 15,000 people have been evacuated since Aug. 28, all but about 1,000 were allowed back in their homes by Monday night, said Forest Service spokesman Brian Barrett.

A battalion of 650 infantrymen from the Fort Ord, Calif., took over mop-up work on a 10,000-acre cluster of fires in Oregon to allow firefighters to concentrate on two blazes that have charred 32,600 acres in the Siskiyou National Forest.

Smoke grounded airplanes and helicopters equipped to drop water and fire retardants.

Three firefighters have been killed in vehicle accidents and at least 35 have been injured, including an Oregon firefighter seriously burned Monday after a generator he was repairing exploded, authorities said.

In Idaho, a stubborn 10,500-acre blaze in the Sawtooth National Forest was brought under control Monday, while a 39-day-old fire continued to burn in a virtually inaccessible mountain area 29 miles east of Cascade.

One-hundred-acre fires were still burning in Washington and Wyoming today. Fires in Arizona, Montana and South Dakota had been contained.

Saragosa starts rebuilding

SARAGOSA, Texas (AP) — Manuel Galindo, assistant disaster coordinator for Reeves County, marveled at the changes that occurred over the Labor Day weekend in this mostly Hispanic farming community that was almost destroyed by a tornado last May.

Thanks to the volunteer work of more than 500 Texas Baptist men, 21 homes went up over the weekend, and the first ground was broken Monday for a new Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church to replace the one that was leveled by the May 22 storm that killed 30 people.

"A lot of work got done this weekend," Galindo said Monday. "There's a lot more to do, but things are so much different than a month ago."

The Labor Day groundbreaking festivities featured the Rev. Reymundo Pena, bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of El Paso.

Pena blessed the site and thanked the Baptist men and the Mennonite Disaster Service for earlier sending volunteers to rebuild Saragosa's homes.

The weekend efforts, coupled with earlier house-building activities by the Mennonites and other charitable groups have transformed what had been a flat expanse of ground, said Susan Clowe, spokeswoman for the American Red Cross in Saragosa.

"This morning when I drove up I saw a street of little houses. Virtually from morning until night those houses are going up before your eyes," Ms. Clowe said.

Most of the 21 homes that went up over the weekend still need a little more outside work and interior work, she said.

Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church was among the 75 percent of Saragosa's buildings that were leveled almost four months ago. Monday's ground-breaking was highlighted by the display of two statues — one of Joseph, one of Jesus — that had survived the tornado.

The 11,000-square-foot church will have a sanctuary that can seat 400. It will contain parish offices, classrooms and a youth retreat wing. On the outside, a courtyard will accommodate up to 1,000 people.

The church was designed by the Booth, Keirse and Mijares architecture firm in El Paso.

Architect Bert Mijares said it was designed as a shrine to Our Lady of Guadalupe in hopes that people from other parishes would make pilgrimages there.

Mijares said cost of the church is estimated at between $500,000 and $600,000. A contractor has not yet been selected. Construction will begin before the end of the year and the church will be completed before the first anniversary of the tornado.

The Rev. Ralph Bellanger, priest at St. Catherine's Catholic Church in nearby Pecos, said the new church is expected to be a sturdier structure than its predecessor, he said.

"(It will be) a little better, stronger, but it's not going to be real fancy," he said.

Rebuilding the church is an important step to recovery for the small, primarily Hispanic community, he said.

"A lot of the homes are being rebuilt now. This is part of their culture. It is a cornerstone." As Pena conducted the ceremony, the volunteers continued to work on the houses.

Texas Baptist Men will remain on the scene through this week, but most of the volunteers indicated they would break camp on Tuesday.

Rebuilding Saragosa has been a team effort among several groups, including Catholic Charities, Ms. Clowe said.

She said the Red Cross raised more than $800,000 for Saragosa relief.

Sunday, workers had to combat temperatures in the upper 90s.

"You can't imagine how hot it was yesterday. It seemed dangerously hot to me in the afternoon," Ms. Clowe said. "It just must have been unbelievable in those houses. We were taking around water."

Financial relief has come in many forms, including a local group, called Saragosa Area Interfaith, and state and federal grant programs, she said.

Coordinating relief over the months since the tornado has brought the American Red Cross team closer to the community, Ms. Clowe said.

Local Roundup

Weekend quiet for local police

With many of residents out-of-town for the Labor Day holiday, officers of the Hereford Police Department had a quiet weekend with five arrests and 31 citations.

A 25-year-old was arrested for burglary of a business at Edwards Laundry where he was found hiding behind a roof-top air conditioner. A 22-year-old was arrested for third offense of no driver's license and speeding. A 30-year-old was arrested for assault, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest, and a 44-year-old and 29-year-old were each arrested for public intoxication.

Charges are pending in a case of assault in the 600 block of Irving where it was reported that a man jumped on a woman, hitting her with his fist and knocking her to the ground. No charges were filed in a case of assault in the 900 block of S. Schley where a man slapped his wife in the face.

Assault was reported in the 400 block of Jackson but the complainant left the scene before officers arrived.

Civil disturbances were reported in the 200 block of Elm and the 500 block of Blevins. A domestic dispute was reported in the 400 block of W. Fourth.

Items valued at $1,600 were taken in the burglary of a residence in the 500 block of Ave. H, and a battery, valued at $40, was taken from a vehicle in the 400 block of Barrett. Beer was taken from an Allsup's store and prowlers were reported in the 100 block of Lake and the 100 block of N. Texas.

Criminal mischief cases were reported involving broken windows on buildings and vehicles and kids shooting BB guns.

Other offenses reported include a barking dog, kids riding skateboards in front of a store and a runaway.

Three minor accidents were investigated and firemen responded to a dumpster fire.

AIDS children die homeless

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — About a third of the children born with AIDS are abandoned or orphaned, and many die without leaving the hospital because few adults want to act as foster or adoptive parents, social workers say.

"These children are born in the hospital, they suffer in the hospital, and then they die," said Penny Ferrer, special assistant to the deputy commissioner of New York City's Department of Human Resources.

Of children with AIDS, many are born with the disease, acquiring it from the mother, and "about 25 to 35 percent ... will not be cared for by their biological parents," according to a June survey of 25 states by Phyllis Tourse, executive director of the Massachusetts Adoption Resource Exchange.

The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said there were 563 children with AIDS as of Aug. 24, compared with 280 at the end 1986. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said earlier this year the number of cases will surpass 3,000 in the next five years.

In New York, Ms. Ferrer said she knows of about 30 children with AIDS waiting for placement — and no adoptions. Some children have been waiting almost a year for foster homes, she said.

Ms. Tourse said eight families have inquired about caring for some of the 18 Massachusetts children with AIDS looking for homes.

Despite the obvious difficulties, "there are a lot of people who feel their special mission is to help and save AIDS children," she said.

Peggy Marengo and her friend, Alison, who agreed to be interviewed only if her last name were not used, are guardians of two 4-month-old AIDS infants. They are also seeking to adopt a 3½-year-old with the disease whom they have cared for for 1½ years.

Ms. Marengo, who cares for the children at her home in Worcester, said she and Alison are kept busy with a wearying regimen of care that includes constant attention and several five-hour hospital visits a week for transfusions.

She said she and her friend fear the children's death "every time one of them gets a sniffle, because who knows what that's going to turn into."

Rejection by friends and family hasn't helped.

"My entire family has abandoned me more or less," said Ms. Marengo, 41. "A lot of friends have also left us in the lurch" rather than become emotionally attached to the babies, Ms. Marengo said.

Alison, 38, said her family has been more supportive, but her friends also "have a hard time getting close, because these kids are going to die."

Annual state support for each child ranges between $11,000 and $15,000, but the two said it does not meet expenses that include costs for hundreds of diapers a week, and special formula costing each child $25 a day.

"There's no amount of money that you could pay to do this," said Ms. Marengo. "We just have a large home, and a lot of love to give."

On student loans

Professionals top defaults

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Too often, their ranks include the professionals — doctors, lawyers, educators, government workers and even legislators.

"With a disdain for their legal obligations, they willingly take the money to obtain the college degree needed to start their careers and then turn their backs, leaving less for others barred from university campuses because of finances."

This is the picture the state attorney general's office paints of many of the 20,000 people who have quit paying back their loans for higher education.

Often, it's not a matter of who can't pay.

"To be perfectly honest with you, it's the people who won't pay. It's mostly our professional people — doctors, lawyers, educators, federal and state employees and some legislators," said Mae Wyatt, collections coordinator for the attorney general's office.

For some of those who haven't paid, the anticipation of receiving a state income tax refund proved to be a bit premature this year. Acting under a 1982 law, the attorney general's office seized $307,000 from those in default with student loans.

The Legislature took another step this year to obtain back payments. A law that goes into effect this fall will allow the state to refuse occupational licenses to those who have failed to pay or make arrangements to pay

Localities vie for prisons

By HOLDEN LEWIS Associated Press Writer

All across Texas, cities and counties that once relied on oil or farming are gearing up their local chambers of commerce to make a pitch for a brand new industry — prisons.

The fear of escaped convicts and lowered property values has been replaced by a need for new jobs and new tax money.

"It's a business, but it's just a different product," said Harry Searle, mayor of Brookshire, a community near Houston. "We are in need of an industry and we are in need of a payroll."

The town and a prison-management company joined up to propose the Texas Department of Corrections approve Brookshire as the site of a new privately run minimum-security prison.

They are among 50 other sites and 18 other companies vying for four 500-bed, minimum-security prisons that can be built thanks to this year's legislative approval of private prisons.

The reason is based on pure economics.

A few years ago, when a barrel of oil cost $30 and up, petroleum-dependent Brookshire enjoyed nearly full employment. Then oil prices dropped and so did domestic production. The town's three oil-service companies closed, throwing 400 of the town's 2,500 residents out of work.

"That's kind of a knock in the head for a small community," said Searle.

Many Texas communities, squeezed by the decline in oil prices or the farm recession, have taken Brookshire's diversification approach and are trying to lure prisons.

They figure people might stop drilling for oil, but criminals won't stop committing crimes.

Some communities, like Snyder in West Central Texas, are among 86 cities vying for one of three state-run prisons, a 2,250-bed maximum-security facility and two 1,250-bed medium-security prisons.

Snyder plans to offer a proposal for the maximum-security prison, said Roy Baze, project coordinator for the Snyder Chamber of Commerce's economic development committee.

"We're simply looking for something to stimulate and maintain the local economy," he said. "It's a straight business proposition for us."

The prison would bring 800 employees and a $16 million annual payroll to the city and Scurry County, Baze said.

Support for prisons is a new phenomenon brought forth by the oil bust, he said, adding that organized opposition probably would have sprung up when more rigs were working.

"Five years ago, the economy was much more robust," he said. "The county's tax base five years ago was $2.8 billion. This year, it's $1.1 billion."

That decline is due to the drop in oil production and prices, as well as depletion of reserves, Baze said.

"Nothing can replace the petroleum base. Nothing," Baze said. "The addition of a prison here would moderate the decline in the tax base."

Proposals for the three state prisons are due late this month, said Alleh Sapp, administrative procedures officer for the TDC.

Information was sent to all communities expressing a recent interest in attracting prisons, Sapp said. The stipulation that the land be donated to the state has not proven to be a problem.

"Many communities seem to be interested in donating the land to bring in the industry and payroll," he said.

Not all cities and counties competing for prisons have suffered from the oil bust. Swisher County, just south of Amarillo, has no oil wells or mines, but officials there asked Correction Concepts Inc. of Bedford, Texas, to submit a proposal for a prison in the farm-dependent county.

"We had failed to diversify over the years and that really hurt us when the farm economy suffered," County Judge Jay Johnson said from his Tulsa office.

Before farmers began having credit problems a couple of years ago, the Panhandle county's largest business was a farm implement dealership employing 80 people. But employment there has dwindled to 25. The biggest business in the county now is a new tortilla factory employing 60 people.

The county worked hard to attract the tortilleria, Johnson said, and is now trying to get a prison and the federal "super collider" project.

The push to get a prison has widespread support, Johnson said, citing the work of Correction Concepts President Bill Robinson.

Robinson appeared at two town hall meetings and met with the Ministerial Alliance and other groups to explain the prison proposal.

"We've really had a positive response," Johnson said. "He explained everything realistically. It's become a community effort."

Luring prisons has become a community effort all over the state because the facilities can contribute much money while demanding little from local governments, officials said.

Ray Christ, chairman of the Sweetwater Chamber of Commerce, said his town just west of Abilene would benefit from the estimated 150 jobs and $3 million annual payroll created by a new prison. Christ and other officials, such as Big Spring City Manager Mack Wofford, said prisons hold advantages over some other industries because they don't pollute and don't require as many services, such as new roads.

Christ said Texas State Technical Institute endorsed the prison plan for Sweetwater because inmates presumably would attend the school's vocational education classes.

City and county governments want a prison because of the new jobs and tax money it would generate without demanding many services in return.

Sapp said construction and management of private prisons must be done at least 10 percent below TDC's cost.

The privately managed prisons also must comply with federal court orders that call for prisons to relieve overcrowding, Sapp said.

The TDC board plans to choose finalists by Sept. 14.

Zoo inmates benefit from burglary

CALAMUS, Iowa (AP) — Lions, tigers and wolves at a zoo are getting free meals thanks to a trio of burglars.

The burglars hit Calamus Middle School over the Labor Day weekend. They took a TV set, a videocassette recorder, boxes of frozen — and about 500 pounds of candy — hamburger, the Clinton County Sheriff's Department said.

Authorities arrested the three Monday, and recovered the booty. But school officials decided they didn't want the rapidly thawing hamburger back. They called the Niabi Zoo in Coal Valley, Ill., about 30 miles to the southeast.

The zoo, which uses about 120 pounds of meat a day, was happy to get the hamburger for its lions, tigers, coyotes, wolves, an Arctic fox and some birds.

Houston researchers produce new diamond

HOUSTON (AP) — A new way to make a "diamond-like" material is being developed by two University of Houston researchers who say the product ultimately could be used to improve electronics and defense systems.

Wayne Rabalais and research associate Srinandan Kasi worked for several years before finding a way to create small circular patches of the material.

The diamond films are only a few atoms thick and a quarter inch in diameter.

By every possible test, the material being manufactured has the properties of the diamond, but the scientists only claim the material is "diamond-like."

The diamond, prized for its beauty, also is excellent as a heat conductor and electrical insulator. Transistors and miniature electronic circuits built on diamond films do not need large, bulky cooling devices to keep from overheating.

Diamond, a crystalline form of carbon, can be made by squeezing carbon under high pressure and high temperature. But the tiny diamonds made through the process are not suitable for the thin films needed for electronics and defense.

The Houston researchers' process starts with a carbon-rich gas. The atoms are then separated with electricity and series of magnets and vacuum pumps remove everything but the carbon.

An electrical charge speeds the carbon atoms to a target where the atoms bond and form diamond crystals, the Houston Chronicle reported Monday.

"We first saw this on nickel, then we tried various other metals and then tried gold. If we could do it on gold we could do it on anything. And it worked," Rabalais said.

The two Houston researchers now want to add other materials to the carbon, a process by which transistors and electronic chips are created.

Transistors are so quickly destroyed by heat that for many uses they must be bolted to massive hunks of heat-absorbing aluminum.

Rabalais said diamond-film transistors and other electronic devices should be able to handle much higher temperatures. That would allow the devices to be packed more closely together, making for smaller, faster circuits.

The diamond films also act like an anti-reflective coating and are nearly invisible to many kinds of radar and laser beams. Rabalais said that could be an important asset for future weapon systems.

In addition, the thin, transparent coatings of diamond could improve the durability of optical lenses, cutting tools and magnetic storage discs for computers.

"It took 10 years for us to develop the instrumentation," said Rabalais, who has been at the University of Houston since 1975.

Museum volunteers to train this month

Training for volunteers in education at the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum begins Thursday with a get-acquainted coffee at 9 a.m., followed by a two and a half hour mini-workshop, according to Suzanne Hewitt-Knorpp, education.

Bonnie Truax, who serves as Director of Educational Programs at the Institute of Texan Cultures (San Antonio), will host the mini-workshop, which will be a motivational presentation on children and museums, said Hewitt-Knorpp.

Truax supervises the Institute's visitor programs and all outreach programs for schools. A former elementary and secondary school teacher, media specialist, and museum volunteer herself, Truax brings a varied viewpoint to the role of museum volunteers in children's education. Her presentation at the Panhandle-Plains will emphasize the importance of getting children into museums and giving them memorable hands-on experiences with artifacts.

"All persons interested in working with children in museums are invited to attend the workshop. It's co-sponsored by the Northwest Texas Museums Association, and volunteers from all the museums around the Panhandle are encouraged to attend," said Hewitt-Knorpp.

At the Panhandle-Plains, the education program involves both tours of the museum and outreach presentations in public schools in the area, she added. "Former teachers, educators, or anyone with an interest in history, a love of young people, and a little spare time would enjoy working as an education volunteer," she said.

"The museum offers programs to children from age three on up through high school, and our training sessions are divided into two areas—outreach programs and museum tours. A volunteer can work in either area," she noted.

Training for both outreach and tours continues at 9:30 on Sept. 15, with an orientation to the Museum, its collections, and its exhibits.

Outreach training sessions continue on Sept. 17, 22, and 25, with an emphasis on Southern Plains Indians.

Tours training sessions are set for September 24 and 29 for October 1 and include cowboys, pioneers, natural history, oil, and transportation.

Details on times and locations of each training session will be available at the Orientation Meeting Sept. 15. For more information, call Suzanne Hewitt-Knorpp at 655-7191.

Extension News

By BEVERLY HARDER
County Extension Agent

Every morning we are faced with a dilemma: do we eat a balanced breakfast, or feel sluggish and less alert as the day goes on? There doesn't seem to be much of a choice, yet many Americans skip breakfast, the most important meal of the day.

After eight to twelve hours without food, your body is low in blood sugar when you wake up. If it isn't replenished, your brain is less alert and you function less efficiently.

Studies show the adults are the most common breakfast skippers. Only about half the people over the age of 20 eat breakfast everyday. Those between the ages of 12 and 17 aren't much better. One third of those kids skip breakfast at least once a week.

The old excuse "I don't have time" doesn't really hold up. A well-balanced breakfast doesn't take that long to prepare and pays itself off later in the morning, when you can function better than those who skipped this important meal.

A good breakfast should include something from three of the four major food groups. Simple things such as muffins, cereal, fruit, yogurt, milk, toast, eggs and cheese, in various combinations would supply enough nutrition to get your day off to a good start.

Toasters, blenders, microwaves all help in preparing fast and easy breakfast or use a little creativity to prepare this Breakfast Kabobs recipe.

Ham chunks
Lard sausage, frozen tater tots
Canned peach halves, cut in two
Pineapple, peach and banana chunks (brush with butter first)
Marshmallows or canned biscuits cut in fourths

Alternate ingredients on skewers: brush with melted butter. Cook in a preheated broiler about 4 inches from the heat, turning once and brushing again with melted butter. Broil about 8 minutes.

Ann Landers

DEAR READERS: It all started when a reader asked why Maureen Reagan was allowed to sleep in Lincoln's bed (with her third husband) and enjoy guest status in the White House, get her cleaning done, use the phones and run up the light bill, all at the taxpayers' expense.

I then received a letter from Mrs. Sheryl L. of Yarmouth Port, Mass., saying the Carters had married children and in-laws living in the White House for extended periods of time but they (the Carters) paid for everything, down to a glass of milk and a bar of soap. Mrs. Sheryl L. wondered if the Reagans were doing the same for their children.

I responded, "I do not know and I would not be so presumptuous as to ask, but if the Reagans wish to respond to your question I would be pleased to print their comments."

Apparently the Reagans did wish to respond. I received this letter in the mail yesterday:

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have just read your column in the Washington Post and would like to clarify a question posed by a writer regarding the personal expenses for Maureen Reagan, who occasionally stays at the White House.

Your readers might be interested to know that President and Mrs. Reagan do, in fact, pay for the personal expenses incurred when family members or friends stay or dine in the White House during private visits.

Those same readers may also be surprised to learn that President and Mrs. Reagan are also charged for their own personal expenses, including private meals and beverages, dry cleaning, shoe repair, dog supplies and other items too numerous to mention.

All of these charges are billed to President and Mrs. Reagan and paid for out of their personal checking account.

Sincerely Yours,
Elaine D. Crispin (Press Secretary to Mrs. Reagan) just as eager as the next person when it comes to saving a few pennies on taxes, but it seems to me that we should be able to pay for our President's meals and, yes, buy dog food for the White House pets.

Thanks for helping to educate millions of Americans (and Canadians) today.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: This is in response to Donald E.G., Columbus, Ohio, and your reply regarding us rock fans "blasting our car radios with that relentless racket."

How about this theory: The true reason that people refuse to yield to approaching emergency vehicles is because 99 percent of them are old fogies like Ann Landers who are going deaf and are in no shape to be behind the wheel of an automobile.

Not only have I cranked it up on many occasions, but I have blasted 'em out of a good number of bars, weddings and parties. I've been a disc jockey for 10 years. I'd like to add one more thing before I sign off. I believe you print inflammatory responses like that one just to upset people. It's also a sure way to keep the crummy mail coming in. — D.J. Dave in S.F.

DEAR D.J. DAVE: Thanks for a reaction I could print. Most of the rock fans who wrote used language that was unfit for a family newspaper.

And, by the way, I don't go out of my way to get crummy mail. Enough floats in on its own.

Names in the News

NEW YORK (AP) — Frank Sinatra and Willie Nelson shoot the breeze and Helen Hayes and Whoopie Goldberg chat it up in a new series of public service announcements using odd couples to tout the down-to-earth benefits of space technology.

The Advertising Council campaign, unveiled Wednesday, was proposed by the U.S. Space Foundation, a non-profit organization in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Among the odd couples in the announcements are former presidents Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford, basketball star Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and jockey Willie Shoemaker, Democrat Jesse Jackson and conservative Republican Barry Goldwater, and feminist Gloria Steinem and actor Charlton Heston.

Some of the products or technologies cited as having been derived from the space program are the scratchproof lens, lightweight wheelchairs and medical imaging that does not use radiation.

The ads should begin showing up on television and radio and in print later this month.

4-H Around the County

By DAVY VESTAL
County Extension Agent
OPPORTUNITIES AWAIT 4-H VOLUNTEERS

The new 4-H year is about to start, and the 4-H program offers unlimited opportunities for volunteers to help young people learn and develop.

4-H is the youth development program of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. The Texas A&M University System. It focuses on the needs, interests and concerns of boys and girls in the third grade to 19 years of age, says Davy Vestal, County Extension Agent and 4-H program coordinator. Its aim is to help young people develop through practical learning experiences such as preparing a nutritious meal, building bookshelves or growing a vegetable garden.

Since young people do not develop their skills and attitudes overnight, they need and seek guidance from 4-H volunteers who can help them probe the "why" as well as show them "how to do it."

Helping youth develop, however, requires different kinds of leadership, Vestal points out. For those who prefer to work primarily with youth, 4-H offers leadership roles related to the organization, project or activity aspects of a 4-H group. While the "organization leader" guides the overall operation of a 4-H group, "project and activity leaders" help boys and girls learn by involving them in a specific project, such as clothing, auto repair and bicycle safety, and related activities such as safety clinics, exhibits and local tours. These leaders may, in turn, be assisted by junior and teen leaders who work closely with an adult or teen advisor.

Volunteers who prefer to work primarily with adults also have a wide range of choices, explains Vestal. A 4-H project or activity chairman helps other leaders with a specific project or activity. A 4-H recruiter seeks out youth and adults interested in becoming 4-H members or leaders, then allows the 4-H organizer to help the new group get started. Volunteers also are assisted by the 4-H trainer who helps train other leaders in the area and by the 4-H resource person who secures special materials or people from the community.

If you are interested in young people, want to share your talents and hobbies, and enjoy meeting other adults with your same interests, consider being a 4-H volunteer.

Contact the County Extension Office for more information on the 4-H program and the role of volunteer leaders, Vestal points out.

Educational programs conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service serve people of all ages regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, religion, handicap or national origin.

Thomas Jefferson, who was the country's first secretary of state and third president, wanted to be remembered in history as an inventor. Among his best known inventions were the swivel chair and the coat hanger.

Final postscript on Laetrile announced

An era in which an unproved drug called Laetril won the support of quacks, profiteers, some politicians and a good many misinformed and gullible citizens has finally come to an end.

On March 24, Federal Judge Luther Bohanon of the Western District of Oklahoma signed an order ending Laetril's importation under an affidavit system he had created in 1977. Judge Bohanon had created the system when he issued an injunction which prohibited the FDA and other government agencies from interfering with the importation of Laetril for any terminally ill cancer patient who had less than six months to live, as certified by a doctor.

In a second injunction, Judge Bohanon said Laetril appeared to be safe and effective for treating pain in cancer patients, and relieved the supporters of the drug from the usual responsibility for testing it.

U.S. drug laws require that the safety and effectiveness of drugs be scientifically established before they can be marketed to the public. Laetril had never complied with these requirements and animal studies had shown no anti-cancer activity in Laetril, but such was the pressure of advocates such as the Committee for Freedom of Choice in Cancer Therapy—and the need to settle the issue—that the National Cancer Institute and FDA agreed to sponsor clinical trials.

In these studies, Laetril (also called amygdalin) was used along with its supporter's program of diet, enzymes and vitamins. One third of the patients had received no previous chemotherapy. "No substantive benefit was observed in terms of cure, improvement, or stabilization of cancer, improvement of symptoms related to cancer, or extension of life span," the scientists concluded. Further, they reported, "the hazards of amygdalin therapy was evidenced in several patients by symptoms of cyanide toxicity or by blood cyanide levels approaching the lethal range. Amygdalin (Laetril) is a toxic drug that is not effective as a cancer treatment."

Made from apricot kernels, Laetril was one of several unproved therapies invented by the late Dr. Ernst T. Krebs of San Francisco, whose FDA record began in the early 1920s when his Syrup Leptinol, an herbal extract, was seized for false and fraudulent claims. Krebs claimed that Syrup Leptinol's main ingredient was an herb used by the Washoe Indian Tribe to protect themselves from the ravages of the flu, and that it was also useful for bronchial asthma, whooping cough, pulmonary tuberculosis and pneumonia.

The first federal seizure of Krebs' Laetril was in 1960 at a clinic of the famous cancer con man Harry Hoxsey in Dallas, Texas.

The affidavit system grew out of a lawsuit, Rutherford v. United States, in which the plaintiff, claiming that he had had a cancer cured through the use of Laetril in Mexico, sought in 1975 to import the drug for his own use. The plaintiff, Glen L. Rutherford, testified that he would have died of a rectal polyp without Laetril. It was later determined, however, that his polyp was also cauterized—a standard medical treatment for rectal polyps.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit reversed Judge Bohanon in December 1986, and instructed him to dismiss the lawsuit and dissolve all injunctions. On March 24, 1987, Judge Bohanon complied. As a result, the status of Laetril is now no different from that of any other unapproved drug.

DR. GOTT Expanding muscle needs hormones

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I'm about to start weight lifting. It is my understanding that weight lifting causes an increase in testosterone that, in turn, causes muscle growth. If this is true, won't the size of the sex organs increase?

DEAR READER — No, weight lifting does not stimulate testosterone production or sex-organ size. If weight lifting did this, millions of adolescent males would gladly forsake their TV sets, video games and junk food to pump themselves up at the Idols of Iron.

Male muscle development does depend on testosterone, however. This is why adolescent boys fill out as they mature. Increased muscle growth and mass are triggered by the male hormones that are secreted internally after puberty. Once the muscles are under hormonal influence, weight lifting will accentuate their development. Therefore, weight training is inappropriate for pre-adolescents, because it will unnecessarily burden underdeveloped muscles and bones. I advise any youth to avoid weight lifting until he has sexually matured.

Weight training does not stimulate testosterone production; rather, the hormone must be present already for weight lifting to make much of a difference. All women have small amounts of male hormones (just as all men have small amounts of female hormones). However, this extremely low level of male hormones keeps female weight lifters from becoming as musclebound as their male counterparts.

Incidentally: Genital size isn't related to hormone levels. Hormones are produced by glands, not by sex organs. An increased level won't enlarge male sex organs, and sex-organ size doesn't indicate an adult male's level of hormones or "masculinity."

DEAR DR. GOTT — A friend of mine eats lots of eggs and cheese, but says he keeps his cholesterol level down by drinking one shot of whiskey every morning. Is there anything to this?

DEAR READER — Possibly — but this treatment is riskier than the ailment it tries to prevent. Although the evidence is scanty, and thus inconclusive, several medical studies suggest that small doses (one or two ounces) of alcohol a day MAY reduce serum cholesterol. Confirmation is in the works.

Over gas pricing question Oil giants battle

HOUSTON (AP) — Just as oil companies have at times offered free drinking glasses to lure consumers to their pumps, they now are jockeying for market share largely through pricing strategies.

Shell doesn't believe consumers should pay more to buy gasoline with credit cards. It charges a single price for cash and credit purchases.

Exxon doesn't believe consumers who pay cash should subsidize the cost of credit card sales. It and others offer a discount for cash.

The pitch of the debate is particularly heated between Shell and Exxon at a time when the two companies are vying for the title of world's largest oil producer.

Shell's sales volume in gallons (sales to customers and other refineries) rose 20 percent last year to give it 8.7 percent of the market.

So far, none of Shell's largest competitors has followed its strategy. Some observers say the company has been helped just by separating itself from the pack.

"It gives them an advantage in differentiating their brand from the others," says Ray Ory, vice president of Wright Killen & Co., a Houston consulting firm.

Shell shook up the market in 1982 when it ran a campaign honoring other gasoline credit cards for its single price. The campaign helped boost credit-card sales from 30 percent to 40 percent of Shell's sales.

"The discount for cash is often viewed as a charge for credit," says J.W. Schutzenhofer, vice president of marketing for Shell Refining and Marketing Co.

In May, Shell launched another campaign, this time honoring the cards of its four largest competitors who offer a discount for cash: Exxon, Mobil, Chevron and Amoco.

Motorists received an application for a Shell card.

Oil industry publications estimated Shell spent $10 million on the 45-day campaign, which would be more than Shell spent for all gas advertising in 1986.

Tom Farris, who owns a Shell station in Pasadena, says his business posted a 15 percent increase in sales during the campaign.

Schutzenhofer says the impact of the campaign is difficult to measure, since consumers buy gas because of convenience and brand loyalty as well as price.

He says the one-price policy, spiced by periodic advertising campaigns, has helped Shell snare the leading spot among gasoline retailers.

Last year, Shell posted a 12 percent gain in gallons sold, not counting gasoline sold to other refineries.

Volume has increased another 12 percent through the first half of this year, Schutzenhofer says.

Generally, Shell's single price is 1 cent to 2 cents above the cash price of competitors such as Exxon, but 2 cents to 4 cents below a competitor's credit price.

Ory says that the Shell strategy strikes a middle ground. Shell dealers are likely to score points among the 25 percent to 40 percent of customers who buy gas on credit.

But they aren't apt to lose many cash customers if the difference is only a penny, and if they like the Shell brand for other reasons such as convenience or quality, he said.

Analysts say credit customers are sought after because they are loyal and tend to make bigger purchases at a time. They may fill up the tank instead of buying only $5 worth, buy oil or have work done on their engine.

Although Shell denies it, competitors say Shell risks alienating the 70 percent of the market that pays cash.

"They could lose the cash customers even if it's only a penny differential," says Chevron spokesman Cul Ingraham. "People are conscious of price."

The cash business has grown since 1982 when Exxon and others began offering a discount for cash. Before then, price controls on oil barred a two-price system, and 50 percent of sales were on credit cards, says J.T. McMillan, senior vice president at Exxon Company USA.

McMillan said the concept of a discount for cash evolved as a consumer issue. It is costly for oil companies to process credit-card transactions, and the customer enjoys the benefit of a float, the difference between the time he makes the purchase and pays the credit card bill.

"We don't expect the cash customer to subsidize the purchases that are made on credit," McMillan said. More motorists began using cash as more stations offered the discount.

Richard Alderman, a professor of law at the University of Houston, says a discount for cash is fairest to consumers. With Shell's policy, he says, the credit customers pay less than the fair price, and the cash customer pays more, "because he's paying for something he never got."

A single price particularly discriminates against the elderly and the poor, who don't have access to credit, Alderman said.

Advocates of the single price say gasoline retailers, like department stores, should absorb the cost of processing credit as another cost of doing business — like advertising.

Theoretically, the retailer will enjoy increased sales through the credit cards to defray the cost of processing the transactions.

Annual Hereford Country Club tourney

Nieman-Rogers team wins Member-Guest

Steve Nieman and guest Ron Rogers of Lubbock scored a narrow one-stroke victory over Ken Hagar and Tom Simons in the championship of the 10th annual Hereford Country Club Member-Guest Tournament here Monday.

Scoring was by low-ball on Saturday's opening round, then the teams played a two-man scramble the other two days. The Nieman-Rogers team posted a 66-66-62 for a three-round total of 194.

Hagar and Simons had a 67 the second round to account for the one-shot difference. Charles Skinner and Dennis Richardson (Lindale) were third with a 204 score.

The tournament had 32 teams with guests from across the state and four other states. Defending champs Ron Weishaar and Ken Metchley were not entered this year. Simons was in the winner's circle in 1984 with partner Lewis Block.

Brothers John and Gary Stagner won the second flight with a 212 total, edging out Scott Keeling and Lin Cope (214) and Gene Coulter and Jiffy Payne (216).

Mike Chaney and Bud Rainey of Friona took third flight honors with a 215 total. Carroll Cook and Lewis Pithcock (Graham) were second at 216, and J.A. McWhorter and Larry Flagg (Dallas) finished third at 218.

Steve Lewis and Craig Nieman (Amarillo) won the fourth flight with a 224 score, followed by Shorty Roark and David Waller (Shawnee, Okla.) at 225. Max Moss and Pat McGinty won third place with a 237 total.

An added feature of the tourney each year is the Sunday afternoon Freeze-Out Derby, where the best 10 scorers the first day are paired with the 10 worst scorers. The 10 teams start on the No. 1 hole and players hit alternating shots, with one or two teams eliminated on each hole.

Emerging as the champs on hole No. 6 was the team of Ken Hagar and Pat McGinty. Chick Russell and Charles Hoover were second, and the team of Ron Rogers and Steve Lewis finished third.

The fun tourney includes a number of prizes each day for players who get closest to the hole, longest drive, longest putt, and shortest drive, on various holes.

Winners of the major prizes included Larry Walterscheid, a watch donated by Cowan's Jewelry; Tom Simons, a new golf bag; Speedy Nieman, a set of irons; and Larry Flagg, a set of woods. Many of the other "day" prizes were $25 gift certificates from local merchants.

Events at the country club included a breakfast for golfers Saturday, a cocktail party Saturday night, a buffet dinner Sunday and a champagne breakfast Monday.

A women's bridge tournament was also held Sunday and Monday. Helen Ann McWhorter and Barbara Flagg of Dallas won prizes Sunday, and Lavon Nieman and Jane Hudson of Perryton were the winners Monday.

A Plymouth Voyager van was offered as a hole-in-one prize on No. 14 at Pitman Municipal Golf Course by Whiteface Ford Lincoln-Mercury, but that prize was unclaimed.
