Meeting to focus on missing dogs

By ANDREA LAMB
Staff Writer

Things are going to the dogs in Hereford, or rather, the dogs are going...somewhere.

Edith Coffman, owner of the Belles and Beaus dog grooming salon, says dogs have been disappearing in Hereford lately due to dognapping (two of her Pomeranians, worth $650, were apparently stolen recently). To battle the problem, Coffman has lassoed the help of Amarillo pet detective Karen Green, who will speak at a short meeting Sunday at 2 p.m. at the Hereford Community Center on ways to protect Fido from theft and how to recover him if he is stolen.

Green said one of the better ways of recovering a stolen dog is by tattooing.

"It's a positive way of identifying a dog," said Green. "If you go up to someone and say 'That's my dog,' how are you going to prove it? Or some people say, 'It's my dog. I've got an album full of his pictures.' Well, anyone can spend an hour taking pictures of a dog, put them in an album and say that. It just doesn't hold up."

The pet detective plans to have a tattooing clinic Jan. 23 from 2 to 6 p.m. at Coffman's business where she will charge $15 to tattoo the owner's social security number on a dog's inside right flank or on a cat's right ear.

"Five dollars of the $15 will go toward a reward fund we're going to set up for stolen dogs," said Green.

Green, who works for a private business which is paid to find lost pets, has an 85 percent to 90 percent success rate in matching lost pets to their owners. But she admits that success rate may drop slightly in Hereford.

"Usually the dog that is lost is more valuable to the person who owns the dog rather than the person who stole it. That's what rewards are for. If an owner offers a $50 reward, people will usually give in. But people have been offering rewards around here and no results have occurred," stated Green.

Coffman didn't try the reward approach for her two stolen dogs, but "I did put ads in the paper, put posters all over town, filed a stolen dog report with the police and checked with the animal control, but nothing turned up."

Coffman, the Animal Action Committee from the Women's Division, and others have formed a Help Save Our Pets group, which will donate the proceeds from the tattoo clinic to help Green establish a base in Hereford where Green will mount investigations on disappeared dogs. She will tack up posters with a picture of the missing pet and a phone number to reach and will offer awards up to $500.

Hereford Animal Control Officer Butch Trevino says he hasn't noticed a sudden increase in dog thefts this year.

"We've been getting a few reports (of stolen dogs), but no more than in the past," said Trevino. "Usually the dog is gone because the gate is unlocked or the dog crawls under the fence."

He added that if a dog is reported stolen, he will keep the file with him and search the area where the dog was last seen. If the dog is located, it will be returned immediately to the owner.

Who's getting clipped

Edith Coffman works on clipping a dog at her local pet grooming salon, but is worried about dog owners in Hereford losing their valuable pets. Coffman has lost two dogs, worth $650, in recent months.

TSBGA meeting is Friday

The president of the U.S. Sugar Beet Growers Association will speak to the Texas Sugar Beet Growers Association Friday at the TSBGA annual meeting at 10 a.m. at the Hereford Community Center.

Dave Carter will speak to the association as it begins two days of activities in Hereford. The annual banquet will be held Saturday at 7 p.m. at the Bull Barn.

At Friday's business meeting, growers will hear reports on the 1987 harvest and research during the past year. New officers will also be elected Friday.

The banquet is open to all interested persons, and tickets, at $7.50 each, are available at the TSBGA office. Top producers will be recognized and the "Ag Man of the Year" will be honored.

Wayne Humphreys, a nationally-known speaker who is also an Iowa farmer, will be the banquet speaker.

The "Ag Man of the Year" award is presented each year by the Hereford Brand, and is selected by a secret committee including ag officials and past recipients. The recipient of the award does not have to be a sugar beet grower.

Past recipients since the award began in 1978 include Nick Yosten, F.L. Eicke, the Brorman Brothers, Jerry Roberts, Carl Straffuss, Bill Cleavinger, Donald Hicks, Carl Kleuskens, Jim Perrin and Charles Schlabs.

Reagan, Japanese help dollar

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and new Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita are using their first summit meeting to reassure nervous financial markets about the value of the U.S. dollar.

The leaders of the world's two largest economies disclosed in a joint statement Wednesday that their governments "have developed arrangements" for providing additional funds to support the battered currency.

The joint statement also said the Bank of Japan would make efforts to "accommodate declining short-term interest rates" in that country.

The Reagan administration has long urged Japan to lower its interest rates. That could help prop up the dollar without requiring the United States to raise its own interest rates — the usual prescription for supporting a currency but a move that could hasten a recession, given the fragility of the U.S. economy in the aftermath of the stock market collapse.

Takeshita was to face questions from reporters at a luncheon today at the National Press Club and to meet later in the day with Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va. He leaves for Canada on Friday.

Dole backers blame Bush supporters

AUSTIN (AP) — The co-chairman of U.S. Sen. Bob Dole's Texas campaign says he believes backers of Vice President George Bush are behind forgeries on electoral petitions that threaten to keep Dole's name off the Texas ballot.

Van Archer of San Antonio described the forgeries as "the biggest setup that has ever been pulled."

"I think we have been set up," Archer told the Dallas Times Herald. "To me, there is not any question that the Bush people are behind it."

Jim Oberwetter, state campaign director for Bush, said the accusations were unfounded.

"The vice president on down through his campaign committee wants every Republican candidate who wants to run for president to be on the Texas ballot," Oberwetter said. "We are not afraid to take a George Bush campaign to the people of this state against any and all comers."

Former television evangelist Pat Robertson will qualify for the March 8 primary, Republican Party officials said Wednesday as they continued to verify signatures on petitions filed by presidential candidates.

"We feel confident that the Robertson campaign has more than 5,000 valid signatures," said GOP spokeswoman Karen Parfitt Hughes, adding that the petition of Vice President Bush was being checked Wednesday.

To obtain a place on the GOP's March 8 primary ballot, each candidate was required to submit petitions bearing signatures of 5,000 eligible voters.

News reports in the past week raised questions about petitions submitted by four candidates — Alexander Haig, Dole, New York Rep. Jack Kemp and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont — after some people named said they didn't sign. The FBI and U.S. attorney's office are investigating.

Ms. Hughes said no questions had been raised about the Robertson or Bush petitions, but those were being checked anyway.

She said a spot check of more than 500 Robertson signatures Tuesday night confirmed 503 signatures, found 16 people who said they didn't sign and four who couldn't recall.

"That falls well within a standard margin of error for this type of survey," she said.

GOP officials decided Monday to leave all six names on the primary ballot. However, if the spot checks show that a candidate failed to obtain 5,000 legitimate signatures, any votes he receives will go to the uncommitted ranks.

Haig's national campaign manager, Brian Sweeney, criticized the spot checks.

"We have a lot of problems with this process of simply calling up people and asking them if they signed a candidate's petition," Sweeney told the Austin American-Statesman. "A lot of people might have signed a petition and thought it was something for the League of Women Voters."

Latest execution 'disgusting'

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Texas death row inmates expressed disapproval and disgust that a fellow inmate was placed on the death row gurney twice before being executed.

"Everybody felt bad he had to be put on the table two times," Raymond Kinnamon, also on death row, said Wednesday. "Any rational person could see this was cruel and unusual punishment."

Robert Streetman, 27, was placed on the gurney, then removed when state authorities believed more last-minute appeals had been filed on his behalf.

More than an hour later, after determining legal avenues were exhausted, Streetman was returned to the gurney, strapped down a second time and given a lethal injection before dawn Jan. 7.

Streetman, 27, was convicted of killing a Kountze woman in a robbery that netted him $1.

"We're talking about a legal system that gives you all the respect you would give a pushy salesman on the telephone," added James Beathard, another inmate. "Only this is a man's life. Everybody is real disgusted, but we're not surprised."

Streetman, the first inmate executed in the United States this year and the 27th in Texas since the state resumed executions in 1982, was not mentally competent to be put to death, inmates contended.

"The guy is nuts," Beathard said.

"His nickname was 'Weird.' That's what a lot of the old guys called him. His judgment wasn't what it should have been."

Streetman at various times during his years on death row said he wanted to be put to death, and only a

Wandering whooper leaves officials wondering

UMBARGER (AP)—A young whooping crane lost during the yearly migration to South Texas was the second chick mislaid by a pair of cranes who apparently haven't developed parenting skills, wildlife officials say.

The fledgling whooping crane, lost or abandoned, had been watched carefully by wildlife officials since November, but hasn't been seen for more than two weeks.

"We haven't seen him for quite a little while, and we've had some pretty severe weather," said Gary Juenger, assistant manager of the Buffalo Lake National Wildlife Refuge.

"We had never observed the bird to be feeding on anything except frogs that he was getting out of the lakes, so when those became unavailable we were concerned that maybe he wasn't able to forage."

"I don't know that he's dead, but there's a chance that he may have passed away, not to our pleasure at all," Juenger said.

The chick was part of a flock of 134 endangered birds that annually fly from Canada to the Gulf Coast for the winter.

Last winter, the parent cranes lost a first chick in Oklahoma, where the youngster remained through the winter, ranging as far south as Edna, said Bruce Thompson, TPW endangered species program leader.

Wildlife officials say the young breeding pair may not possess fully developed parenting skills.

Parenting is a learned behavior, Juenger said. "These parents just haven't gotten good at it and may never get good at it," he said.

The yearling has yet to rejoin the flock and is spending the winter near Victoria, Thompson said.

The other wayward whooper, which stands about 4½ feet tall, was last sighted Christmas Day in the Panhandle.

Juenger and refuge manager Johnny Beall had been keeping daily watch on the bird, born at Wood Buffalo National Park in Canada last spring. They were aided by two test pilots from Bill Helicopter, who helped monitor the chick from the air, Juenger said.

The pilots have searched for the bird through the recent snow and ice storms, he said. "But with the white snow on the ground, we haven't held up much hope of seeing him," he said.

If the bird is found injured, wildlife officials may attempt to capture it and transport it to the flock's wintering ground at Arkansas National Wildlife Refuge, Thompson said.

Substitute teacher accused of assault

Ten-year-old Amanda Adams accused a substitute teacher Wednesday of striking the girl's face during a music class at Shirley Intermediate School.

Adams stated that the teacher slapped her on the right side of the face to reprimand her for talking in class, even though she said she was telling other students to be quiet so she could hear the teacher. Adams said her eye was swollen and she was temporarily unable to see out of that eye. However, Cpl. Bennie Barrick of the Hereford Police Dept. said he saw no evidence of an assault. The case remains under investigation.

Hereford police also reported that it arrested a 57-year-old man for theft and public intoxication Wednesday along with four others arrested for PI; a man, 59, was arrested on bad check charges and no liability insurance; a 45-year-old man was arrested on traffic warrants and no liability insurance; a male, 28, was arrested for a second offense no liability insurance; and a 21-year-old male was arrested for his second offense no liability insurance and defective equipment.

Republican party to be tested in Michigan as Hart nears million-dollar mark

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

The GOP geared up today for its first test of the campaign year in Michigan, with a legal battle threatening to cloud the result, while Democratic presidential contender Gary Hart edged toward the million-dollar mark in federal matching money.

Meanwhile, Pat Robertson lit the fuse of the tobacco industry by calling for an end to tobacco production, citing the health problems it causes.

"I'm on the side of the angels on this one," the former television evangelist said in South Carolina, where tobacco is the biggest cash crop.

And Democrat Richard Gephardt, who has made trade issues the centerpiece of his campaign, took Japan to task Wednesday as President Reagan met with Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita.

The finances of 11 of the presidential campaigns looked brighter Wednesday after the Federal Election Commission voted to release another $4.4 million in federal matching funds.

Hart, who has been back in the race a month, got the biggest slice of the Democratic pie. The FEC earmarked $837,325 for him, bringing his total matching funds to $937,325.

On the GOP side, Vice President George Bush remained the leader in matching funds, with an additional $396,583 allocated Wednesday, bringing his total to $6.2 million.

Bush and GOP rival Bob Dole, who both said this week they wanted to tone down personal attacks, teetered on the brink of another public dustup, this one over personal finances.

Bush demanded again that his rivals release their tax returns — even though Dole had said a day earlier he didn't want the vice president trying to impose a timetable.

"I want to see all the tax returns out there," Bush said in Fort Dodge, Iowa. Dole's campaign said the Kansas senator would release tax records by the end of the week.

But Dole, campaigning in Springfield, Mo., warned Bush that he wouldn't stand by if he felt he was the target of unfair attacks.

"I'm prepared to move on to the issues, but it's a two-way street," Dole said.

Dole refrained from bringing up the Iran-Contra affair, with which he had previously needed Bush. But Bush was asked again by reporters in Iowa whether he would reveal his private advice to Reagan on the matter. He said no, and added that he would "absolutely not" seek the president's permission to do so.

The Washington Post said in today's editions that Bush told columnist Mary McGrory he had voiced stronger reservations about the Iran arms deal than he has stated previously. But Bush did not say to whom he voiced the objections.

The Post, quoting sources it did not name, also said in today's editions that the Office of Government Ethics was investigating a 1986 real estate deal involving the blind trust of Dole's wife, Elizabeth, and the company of a former Dole aide. The Doles both say they do not know about the dealings of the blind trust.

Dole bowed out of today's contentious Michigan county caucuses, where some 10,000 Republicans are picking delegates to the state convention later this month. There, Michigan's 77 national GOP delegates will be chosen.

The Michigan selection process has been overshadowed by a bitter and confusing legal fight over party rules between Bush supporters and a coalition of Robertson and Jack Kemp backers.

Meanwhile, Robertson's call to snuff out tobacco production drew an angry reaction from the industry. The head of the South Carolina Tobacco Organization, Joe King, said it was "asinine" for Robertson to suggest that the government buy up tobacco allotments — the federally granted rights to grow and sell the crop.

In other political developments: — Jesse Jackson preached racial unity at campaign stops in Alabama, telling a crowd in Tuscaloosa: "It is time for people, black and white, to come together around a common theme."

—Gephardt, campaigning in New Hampshire, said if elected, he would reduce the huge U.S. trade deficit with Japan by demanding that the Japanese make major changes in their trade policy or face sanctions.

behalf.

"What they're trying to do is tell markets: don't bet against the dollar because the house is on the other side," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for Data Resources Inc. of Lexington, Mass.

He cited unconfirmed reports that the United States and Japan "had about $15 billion in prearranged swaps" in which Japan would give the United States yen in exchange for Treasury bills.

During Wednesday's sessions, the two leaders "addressed each other in their first names, Ron and Noboru," said Koichi Haraguchi, a spokesman for Takeshita. Reagan had also been on a first-name basis with former Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone.

Both leaders, in their first face-to-face session since Takeshita took office last November, stressed the importance of acting together

Moose or mousse?

By JOHN BROOKS
Back in the old days, you know, the 50s and 60s, the only moose I was acquainted with was Bullwinkle. Now I am good friends with another moose, actually a mousse, and I see a little more of him every day.

Back when I was a child, a guy wouldn't even borrow his wife's hair spray. You just put on a little more Brylcreem, Vitalis, or H-A (remember that?).

"Course, that was when a barber still did shaves, and the barber was a man. If a woman cut your hair, and you were a man, the woman doing the cutting was probably either your mother or your wife. It just didn't happen, a woman cutting a guy's hair. And there was no mousse, excepting Bullwinkle. The closest thing was Dippity-Do, and that was for bubbles. I don't know of any guys that wore bubbles then, or now. I have tremendously curly hair. If I let it go natural, it's an unruly mess of curls. So now, just like we have unisex hair cutters, we have unisex hair care at home.

Most folks use a blow dryer. Can you imagine using one of those contraptions they had back 25 years ago—the dryers that looked like canister vacuum cleaners with the plastic hose running to the plastic hood you pulled down over your hair?

I am forced to use a curling iron on many days to get my hair to straighten up and fly right. This may not be normal for many men, but I do it.

"Course, the brush is more of a normal thing to see now in the men's bath. There is nothing so futile as trying to use a pocket comb with a blow dryer. If you've never tried it with a black 39 cent pocket comb, check it out. If you're using a comb, try a brush. It takes five fewer hours to do your hair.

And, of course, there is mousse. There must still be a stigma attached to using "womens" mousse, so there is mousse for men. The only difference I can tell between mousse for men and mousse for women is about a buck and a half. Women think nothing of spending a few dollars so their hair will look nice. A guy will spend about $4 a month on hair care, including a buck and a half for mousse.

Of course, companies have diversified. Brylcreem is still making hair cream, but is also making mousse and telling everyone, "A little dollop will do you."

So far, though, no word has been heard from H-A.

17,000 students surveyed

Seniors using less cocaine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The senior class of 1987 sharply curtailed its use of cocaine, according to a federal survey that also shows 40 percent of America's recent high school graduates experiment with the drug by the time they reach 27.

The study of some 17,000 students, released Wednesday by the Department of Health and Human Services, also showed a continued decline in marijuana use that began in 1979.

Lloyd D. Johnston, who directed the 13th annual survey at the University of Michigan, called it a cooling of "the unhealthy romance between many of America's young people and illicit drugs."

"But it was not until 1987 when the latest and perhaps most troublesome drug — cocaine — gave evidence of beginning to turn downward," Johnston said at a news conference.

Although there have been three other occasions when there was a slight drop in cocaine use among those surveyed, those earlier changes did not have the statistical significance of the 20 percent decline recorded in the latest study.

"Despite the long-term downward trend for most illicit drugs, cocaine use in each of the past 13 years has either increased or remained essentially stable," HHS Secretary Otis R. Bowen said.

Bowen said the 1987 drop in cocaine use among youngsters probably was due in part to publicity from the cocaine-related deaths of college basketball star Len Bias and professional football player Don Rogers.

"It is indeed a shame that the deaths of many talented young people took place before the danger of cocaine use was widely believed by our youth," Bowen said.

There has been a 10-year upward trend in the percentage of high school seniors who say regular cocaine use can be harmful, but there was a dramatic jump — from 34 percent in 1986 to 48 percent last year — in the number who said there was "great risk" from trying cocaine just "once or twice."

"For a full eight years prior to 1986 there had been virtually no change in the perceived risk of experimenting with cocaine, so this shift was a sudden and dramatic one," said Dr. Donald Ian Macdonald, administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration.

Johnston said those figures show young people "make a more rational decision than is often believed" about whether to use a particular drug.

Johnston's 1987 survey of some high school seniors in 130 schools found that 10.3 percent admitted using cocaine at least once during the preceding 12 months compared with 12.7 percent in the 1986 survey.

Applying those changes in percentages to the actual number of students surveyed indicates 20 percent fewer students tried cocaine in 1987 than in 1986.

The proportion of seniors who had "ever used" cocaine also dropped from 1986 to 1987 — from 16.9 percent to 15.2 percent.

The survey includes smaller follow-up samplings of high school graduates and it was that part of the study that Johnston said showed four in 10 graduates had tried cocaine at least once by the time they were 27.

Marijuana use started declining after a 1978 peak in which nearly 11 percent of high school seniors said they smoked it daily. Last year, the figure was 3.3 percent, lowest in the 13-year history of the survey.

Also at the lowest level ever was the 36 percent who said they used marijuana at least once during the preceding year.

Robertson OK'd by Republicans

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican Party officials, continuing their verification of signatures on petitions filed by presidential candidates, say former television evangelist Pat Robertson will qualify for the March 8 primary.

"We feel confident that the Robertson campaign has more than 5,000 valid signatures," said GOP spokeswoman Karen Parfitt Hughes, adding that the petition of Vice President George Bush was being checked Wednesday.

To obtain a place on the GOP's March 8 primary ballot, each candidate was required to submit petitions bearing signatures of 5,000 eligible voters.

News reports in the past week raised questions about petitions submitted by four candidates — Alexander Haig, Kansas Sen. Robert Dole, New York Rep. Jack Kemp and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont — after some people named said they didn't sign. The FBI and U.S. attorney's office are investigating.

Ms. Hughes said no questions had been raised about the Robertson or Bush petitions, but those were being checked anyway.

She said a spot check of more than 500 Robertson signatures Tuesday night confirmed 503 signatures, of 16 people who said they didn't sign and four who couldn't recall.

"That falls well within a standard margin of error for this type of survey," she said.

GOP officials decided Monday to leave all six names on the primary ballot. However, if the spot checks show that a candidate failed to obtain 5,000 legitimate signatures, any votes he receives will go to the uncommitted ranks.

Haig's national campaign manager, Brian Sweeney, criticized the spot checks.

"We have a lot of problems with this process of simply calling up people and asking them if they signed a candidate's petition," Sweeney told the Austin American-Statesman. "A lot of people might have signed a petition and thought it was something for the League of Women Voters."

In other political developments: — Harris County District Attorney John B. Holmes Jr. said his office might get involved in the petition investigation. "If what has been reported is true, there has been a criminal offense," Holmes said. "The next question is who is going to baby-sit that offense. The present answer is, I don't know."

week before his scheduled death date agreed to have attorneys file legal motions on his behalf.

"Legally, he was competent," inmate Jim Vanderbilt said. "But you have to be sitting in a corner not knowing what's going on (to be declared incompetent)."

Kinnamon, who saw Streetman before the condemned man was moved to the death house, said Streetman told him he was ready to die.

"He just didn't want to live anymore," Kinnamon said.

Meanwhile, inmates also complained that a death row security officer impeded their efforts to hold a memorial service the evening after Streetman's death.

Lester Bower, organizer of the vigil, said shortly after he posted a sign in a corridor informing inmates of the service, the sign was removed by a security supervisor.

JAPAN

A senior administration official, briefing reporters on condition of anonymity, said the U.S.-Japanese monetary arrangements would provide the Federal Reserve with more foreign currency, mainly Japanese yen, for intervention on exchange markets.

The official said these arrangements might include currency swaps.

When central banks like the Fed buy dollars directly, it helps to shore up the dollar's value. However, to buy dollars, the banks must have adequate reserves of other foreign currencies.

Analysts suggested that the joint statement, calling attention to the previously secret U.S.-Japanese financing scheme, was a direct attempt to brake the dollar's sharp decline with a suggestion of continued heavy intervention by both the Fed and the Bank of Japan on its

Texaco could owe $6.5 billion in taxes

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc., which recently agreed to hand over $3 billion to Pennzoil Co. to settle one legal dispute, says it has now been told by the Internal Revenue Service that it will be getting a $6.5 billion bill for back taxes.

And other oil companies may also be facing huge bills from the IRS as well, Texaco said Wednesday.

In fact, an Exxon statement indicated that it had also been approached by the IRS, which, Texaco said, is apparently attempting to apply a "recently developed theory" on the way some taxes should have been paid between 1979 and 1981.

New York-based Exxon issued a statement saying:

"Exxon has told the IRS that we are certain we owe no taxes under this new IRS theory. The IRS has not indicated they will seek any amount from Exxon under this theory. We have not set aside any reserve in respect to this new theory since we believe no amount is due."

In a statement from its White Plains, N.Y., headquarters, Texaco said IRS officials had informed the company it would file with the bankruptcy court "an indication" of claims compiled so far in an audit of the company for the years 1965 through 1986.

Texaco is reorganizing under federal bankruptcy laws as a result of a multibillion-dollar lawsuit won by Pennzoil Co. Texaco recently reached a settlement that calls for Pennzoil to get $3 billion in return for dropping the $10.3 billion damage claim it held against Texaco.

Analysts agreed that the company would be virtually destroyed if it had to come up with the $6.5 billion the IRS is claiming. But they also doubted that the final bill would come anywhere near that amount.

"It would wipe out most of their equity," said Richard S. Pzena, who studies oil companies at the Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. securities firm.

But he and others suggested that the IRS may have been forced to move earlier than it otherwise would have, simply to preserve a negotiating stance for when Texaco emerges from bankruptcy.

"My understanding of the bankruptcy law is that anyone who thinks they might have a claim that they might wish to pursue, for further litigation or discussion, has to identify that claim in the bankruptcy process — or lose it forever," said Francis P. Barron, a Texaco attorney.

In composite trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, Texaco dropped $1.50 a share to $37.50 on Wednesday.

A spokesman at IRS headquarters in Washington, Scott Waffle, declined to discuss Texaco's announcement. He noted federal law prohibits the agency from commenting on the affairs of any taxpayer.

Texaco said it previously had set aside reserves to cover potential liabilities from IRS claims already under negotiation — but not for any new claims, which it said "may account for a significant portion" of the $6.5 billion.

It said those claims are based on a

"recently developed theory" concerning the handling of crude oil purchased from Saudi Arabia during the period 1979-1981, when the official price set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries was $34 per 42-gallon barrel.

OPEC's largest exporter, Saudi Arabia, however, was selling its crude for $28 a barrel to Texaco, Exxon Corp., Mobil Corp. and Chevron Corp. — its partners in Arabian American Oil Co.

Aramco is responsible for most oil produced in Saudi Arabia.

One provision of the arrangement was that if any of the companies resold the oil, they could not resell it at a profit.

IRS officials told Texaco they were "not in a position" to outline its theory in detail, or how it had come up with its numbers.

But the theory appears to be that the IRS thinks Texaco should have resold the oil at the $34 market rate despite the restrictions by Saudi Arabia — and paid taxes on the difference, the company said.

Texaco contended it "should not be responsible for any additional U.S. taxes on these transactions."

In addition, it said, "any claims relative to purchases of Saudi Arabian crude oil during this 1979-81 period would be applicable not only to Texaco but also to all other companies which purchased crude oil" under the Saudi conditions.

Sherri Zippay, a Chevron spokeswoman at the company's San Francisco headquarters, said Chevron "has not received any notification from the IRS on this topic."

In New York, Mobil spokesman John Lord said: "We really don't think we have a problem."

In a separate development, Texaco's shareholders committee scheduled a meeting for today to vote on whether or not to support financier Carl C. Ichan's alternative plan to restructure the company.

The proposal by Ichan, Texaco's largest shareholder, would strip away the company's anti-takeover defenses, while leaving provisions regarding the settlement with Pennzoil intact.

Prisons to start 'boot camp'

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A "boot camp" intended to impose a military-style discipline on youthful first offenders may be operational within 30 days, prison officials say.

The plan, which would establish the camp at an existing 200-bed trusty camp near the Ellis II Unit north of Huntsville, was ratified by the prison board on Monday.

On Dec. 18, State District Judge Ted Poe found Texas Department of Corrections Director Jim Lynaugh in contempt of court for failing to start the shock-probation program program as scheduled.

Lynaugh is scheduled to be sentenced on Feb. 19 and could receive a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine. Attorneys say they hope to convince the judge to rescind the order.

Speaking for Lynaugh, who declined comment, TDC spokesman Charles Brown said Tuesday that prison officials will do "whatever needs to be done to get the camp operational in 30 days."

The relatively short-term program, which uses military-style discipline, became effective last Sept. 1.

The boot camp probation is a way to keep convicts from returning to a life of crime, Poe said.

Two inmates sentenced by Poe to the non-existent boot camp were released on parole Tuesday.

Assistant Attorney General Michael Hodge, who is representing Lynaugh, said lawyers will decide this week whether to return to Poe's court before the scheduled sentencing in an effort to dissolve the contempt order.

Poe declined comment on any decision he might make on the contempt order since the case is still in his court.

Prison officials have said money was not specifically appropriated for a boot camp and funding priority was given to construction mandated in a prison reform case before U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice.

Browns' owner Modell is having some fun again

By CHUCK MELVIN
AP Sports Writer
ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — With one of the more frustrating years of his career behind him, Cleveland Browns' owner Art Modell is having fun again.

"I'm enjoying all of this very much. I'm enjoying being in the playoffs again, and I won't be satisfied until we win the Super Bowl," Modell said in an interview this week.

Modell is with the Browns in Albuquerque, where the team is preparing for Sunday's AFC championship game against the Denver Broncos.

The past year held a series of disappointments for the Browns' majority owner. He was stunned by the team's overtime loss to the Broncos in the AFC championship game last January, and two months later said publicly he would consider selling the Browns if NFL players carried out their threat to strike.

"That was maybe a little rash at the time," said Modell, who decided to keep the Browns after last fall's strike was settled. "Right now, I have no plans other than to continue on as we are doing."

Modell, 62, bought the Browns in 1961 and has since become one of the most powerful owners in the league, serving as head of the committee that negotiates the NFL's lucrative television contracts.

He also is very much involved in the day-to-day operation of the Browns, frequently consulting with coaches and team executives about such things as roster moves and draft plans.

His commitment to the team is obvious to Cleveland's players.

"Our owner has worked hard to build this team," cornerback Hanford Dixon said. "I would like to see a smile on his face in Denver and I would like to see a smile on his face in San Diego."

Under Modell, the Browns won the NFL championship in 1964 behind the running of Jim Brown, but they have never been to the Super Bowl.

"I still have not won the big prize," Modell said.

That's not to imply that Modell would sell the team or turn it over to his son David, the Browns' marketing director, if Cleveland won the Super Bowl this year.

"When I win a Super Bowl, I'm sure I'm going to come back and try to do like Pittsburgh and win two in a row," Modell said.

Hall of Fame outfielder Sam Crawford worked as a barber before turning to baseball.

Now, Modell's attention is focused on the Broncos, who beat the Browns 23-20 in overtime of the AFC championship game last year after John Elway directed a 98-yard Denver drive to tie the game in the closing seconds of regulation.

Modell said he was not concerned that the loss might have had any lasting effect on Browns' quarterback Bernie Kosar. "He is a cool cat. I think this Sunday he will be less nervous than anyone else in this organization."

Redskins' Green may be out of lineup on Sunday

By DAVID GINSBURG
AP Sports Writer
HERNDON, Va. (AP) — Washington Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs is becoming increasingly pessimistic over the chances of having injured cornerback Darrell Green in the lineup for Sunday's NFC title game against the Minnesota Vikings.

And Gibbs is certain that Washington wide receiver Art Monk will not be available when the Redskins vie for the right to play in Super Bowl XXII.

Green pulled cartilage in his ribs while returning a punt for a touchdown in Washington's 21-17 victory over the Chicago Bears last Sunday. The three-time Pro Bowl selection watched Wednesday's practice session from the sideline and is not expected to see extensive action today.

"We're making preparations as if he's not going to play, hoping at the same time that he can go," Gibbs said. "That's the best approach right now."

Green's role is extremely important because he is usually assigned to the opposition's best receiver. In this case it's Minnesota's Anthony Carter, who has thus far been virtually unstoppable in the playoffs.

Gibbs said Monday that Green's injury was a "pain thing" that he thought the 5-foot-8 cornerback could overcome. Wednesday, Gibbs wasn't so sure.

"Our approach now is different than it was earlier in the week," Gibbs said. "Right now, we're working under the assumption that he can't play."

Green was listed as questionable on the Redskins' injury report to the league, meaning there is a 50-percent chance he will participate.

Take on revengeful Browns Sunday

Broncos not lacking for motivation

By JOHN MOSSMAN
AP Sports Writer

DENVER (AP) — Although Sunday's AFC championship game rematch between Cleveland and Denver isn't expected to measure up to the heightened drama of last year's overtime thriller, the teams aren't lacking for motivation.

It's just a fact of life in the NFL. "Very few championship games or Super Bowls have lived up to their billing," Broncos Coach Dan Reeves said Wednesday. Besides, having one team drive 98 yards in the final five minutes for a tying touchdown and then win in overtime — as Denver did — is a hard act to follow.

"I don't know that the sort of game we had last year can be repeated for a long time," Reeves said.

Ironically, both teams probably have more incentive this weekend than they did a year ago.

The Browns are spurred on by revenge, while Denver is driven by the hunger of having climbed to the top without grabbing the ring. Reeves can still vividly describe the emptiness of losing a Super Bowl.

"It's a tremendous disappointment to get there and lose," he said. "It's very unfulfilling. I know our players won't forget it. We were 30 minutes away from being the world champion. So there was never any lack of motivation for us to get back to the Super Bowl. I think all of our players feel they have some unfinished business to take care of.

"Cleveland was five minutes and 98 yards away from getting to the Super Bowl last year. But their disappointment at losing the AFC title game is no less a motivator than ours at losing the Super Bowl."

After putting his team through its first practice of the week Wednesday, Reeves had more cause for optimism. Defensive backs Dennis Smith and Randy Robbins both appear likely to play on Sunday.

Smith, the team's starting strong safety, has been sidelined since Nov. 22 with a broken arm. Robbins, a backup who had taken Smith's place in the starting lineup, has been out since Dec. 13 with a knee injury. "They both looked good," Reeves said after the workout in 35-degree weather. "They didn't seem to have any problems. But we'll wait to see if they have any complications."

Reeves was withholding judgment on whether Smith would reclaim his starting job. If he doesn't start, rookie Tyrone Braxton likely would open at strong safety. Braxton finished up on Sunday after Mike Harden, who had played cornerback and free safety before moving to strong safety, broke his right forearm.

Asked to guess whether he would start, Smith, his voice rising with incredulity, said, "There's no guess. I'm starting. I'm in. I think my practice today showed that I'm capable and ready to play."

By former Texas Tech player

Record punting day recalled

By PETE KENDALL
Cleburne Times-Review
CLEBURNE, Texas (AP) — Milton D. Hill was already a wizened 22-year-old of few illusions or fears by the time he snapped on a leather helmet for the first time for the legendary Pete Cawthon at Texas Tech in 1937.

He'd slipped off the farm in Lexington, Ala., at a tender age in the early 1930s to join the Marines and see the world.

A 5-foot-9, 165-pound scatback, he had spent most of four years in California, where he played for a memorable service football team that opposed, among others, Amos Alonzo Stagg's College of the Pacific powerhouse.

He couldn't have known exactly what he was getting into when he joined forces with the late Cawthon — a stern taskmaster whose difficult training camps were admired by Paul (Bear) Bryant — but at least he knew he'd be prepared.

The Marines have a way of preparing young men.

Of course, even the Marines are capable of missing a trick every now and then.

They couldn't possibly have prepared Hill, Cawthon and the rest of the Red Raiders for one gray, depressing afternoon in Shreveport, La., on Nov. 11, 1939, when Texas Tech and host Centenary played to a 0-0 tie and combined to establish an NCAA record.

On a day when it rained, rained, and rained some more, it also rained with footballs. Punted footballs. Seventy-five punted footballs, to be exact.

Cornell and Penn combined for 51 punts in a game in 1942. The NCAA thought that was a record and carried it on the books as a record until last summer. It's now an ex-record, thanks to Tech and Centenary.

"The NCAA called one day and asked if I'd heard about a Texas Tech-Centenary game in 1939," said Texas Tech sports information director Joe Hornaday. "I said no, they asked me to look it up. They thought there might be some sort of record involved. What I found absolutely amazed me."

It amazed Hill, now a 72-year-old Cleburne resident, even more, because he was one of the Tech punters. He shared kicking duties with Charles Calhoun.

Hill's recollections of that long-ago day are remarkably clear.

"We must have left Lubbock on Friday by train," said Hill, a halfback at Tech from 1937-40. "The game in Shreveport was on Saturday afternoon."

"It had rained hard there for several days. The morning of the game, it was raining. During the game, the rain would come in surges. There would be a deluge of showers, and then the storm would pass through, but it would still rain."

"It rained so hard at times that you couldn't see the stands. There weren't but about 50 people up there. There was water all over the field. Water up to your ankles in spots. It wasn't a field you could run real fast on," he said.

"I fielded most of the punts. I guess I let about a half-dozen go," said Hill.

"Cawthon told me to use my judgment on fielding punts. I was always glad to field punts, but that day the ball was so heavy with water and caked with mud. The officials would wipe it off after every play, but when it landed in the water on a punt, it was like an egg in a nest. It just sat."

It was not a good day for the passing game. You can't catch what you can't see, he said. It wasn't a particularly good day for the ground game, either. The Gents' Billy (Weenie) Bynum was the leading rusher with most of his team's 31 yards. The Raiders lost eight on the ground as a team.

Many oldtimers claim they enjoyed playing football in the rain. There was no fun to be had in Shreveport, said Hill.

"It's not much fun when you're trying to hold the ball and it's covered with mud," he said.

His and the rest of the Raiders' accomplishments in one very bizarre game in 1939 will be remembered for a very long time.

"I think it's safe to say," said Hornaday, "that 75 punts will stand as a record forever."

Six times as an assistant

Burns is veteran Super Bowl coach

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Jerry Burns remembers Super Bowl I and Super Bowl II and he didn't really think the game would evolve into the super-hyped extravaganza it has become.

Burns, the second-year coach of the Minnesota Vikings, knows as much as anyone about the Super Bowl. He has been a part of six of them as an assistant coach, two under Vince Lombardi with the Green Bay Packers in the 1960s and four under Bud Grant with the Vikings in the 1970s.

"I can remember back to the days where it was a crusade," said Burns, who will be in his seventh Super Bowl if the Vikings can defeat the Washington Redskins on Sunday in the NFC title game. "It was like Lombardi had to carry the NFL superstructure, which was saying: 'We're not going to let this upstart AFL into the power structure.'"

He told a Wednesday news conference in Tampa, where the Vikings are preparing for Sunday's game, that the Super Bowl has changed from a grudge match to a football spectacle since the NFL-AFL merger.

It was Burns' first big postseason news conference and he said he didn't mind the hype.

"I'm crazy about it. I love the media," he joked. "No, it's just a job. A job like you (reporters) have a job. Ask me if I'd rather be in the bar having a beer, and I'd say, 'Yes.' But I understand that this is part of the job."

Much of the talk Wednesday centered around Anthony Carter, who grumbled while catching only 38 passes during the regular season, but has come on to snag 16 passes for 306 yards — including many dazzling and acrobatic receptions — in the playoffs.

Asked how many passes a game he'd need to catch to be happy, the former Michigan All-American and USFL star said: "It's just a matter of catching more than two or three passes in a game, that's all it takes. I think any receiver would like to catch more than two passes."

Which is exactly what Washington cornerback Darrell Green has held him to in each of the last two meetings between the teams, both won by the Redskins in overtime.

But Green suffered a rib injury in Washington's victory over Chicago last week and his status is questionable for Sunday's contest. If Green plays, Carter knows he can expect to see man-to-man coverage, which Carter exploited last Sunday against the San Francisco 49ers.

"That's their philosophy, to take out the opposing team's best receiver with Darrell Green's speed," Carter said. "Last year, I had two catches against him. This year, I had two catches against him. It's something I'd like to change."

UIL to reprimand coach for pressuring teacher

WACO, Texas (AP) — The state executive committee of the University Interscholastic League has been asked for the first time to publicly reprimand a high school coach for pressuring a teacher to change a football player's grade.

A district executive committee voted Wednesday, after 11 hours in closed session, to refer the case of Waco High School coach Johnny Tusa to the state committee. The district committee recommended that Tusa receive a public reprimand.

"I cannot recall another case of this nature that got before the state committee," said Bailey Marshall, state UIL director.

"We have had other situations where teachers felt they were pressured, but they were settled in-house. In none of those cases did a teacher change a grade."

The district 14-5A panel also placed all Waco High School sports on probation for the 1988-89 year.

In November, sociology teacher Sue Collins said Tusa and Principal Wilbur Luce pressured her into giving a passing grade to football player Trell Payne, allowing him to retain his athletic eligibility. Her admission led to the team forfeiting six games and being disqualified from advancing to regional playoffs.

Waco High's probation means the school can earn district championships and compete in playoffs, said Jack Frost, chairman of the district committee and superintendent of Georgetown Independent School District. The panel thought about the students when deciding on probation instead of recommending sport suspension, he said.

Waco High Principal Luce said, "I'm glad we're still eligible to play for championships next year, Waco High Principal Luce said. "It did not eliminate us from any possibility of playing for championships. It doesn't penalize our kids."

Tusa can have a hearing before the UIL state executive committee if he wants to protest the public reprimand the district committee suggested, said UIL state director Marshall.

In a public reprimand, a statement is printed for a period of time in the UIL "Leaguer" publication, which is published about eight times yearly and distributed to schools.

Says dermatologist

'Miracle' creams only moisturize

Those anti-aging creams touted at the cosmetic counter don't make anything disappear but money.

Though such skin creams claim to prevent or remove wrinkles, the only thing that has been proven about these cosmetics is that they moisturize the skin surface, said Dr. John E. Wolf Jr., professor and chairman of dermatology at Baylor College of Medicine.

"These products are not sold as drugs, so they're only required to prove that they're safe—not that they work," Wolf said. "Virtually none of these companies publish the research that goes on to develop the creams, so the scientific community can't investigate the industrial 'trade secrets.'"

Wolf said an understanding of the aging process should make people skeptical about skin products that supposedly turn back the wrinkles of time. Youthful skin can only be maintained through the use of sunscreens, following a well-balanced diet and avoiding chemicals and pollutants.

But Wolf said there is one prescription product called Retin-A which is being tested.

Skin has three layers. The epidermis is the outer layer, which is formed of cells that constantly grow and get replaced by new cells. This layer determines the texture and surface appearance of skin.

The middle layer, or dermis, is formed of two fibrous proteins that work together: collagen and elastic tissue. The collagen enables skin to stretch; the elastic tissue causes skin to snap back into position.

The inner layer, called subcutaneous fat tissue, consists of fat cells that provide a cushion for the top two layers to rest on, and gives skin its depth and softness.

As people age, their subcutaneous fat tissue gets thinner, causing the skin to seem looser.

"The whole contour of the face may change because the outer skin no longer has a nice, soft fatty cushion to sit on," Wolf said. "This is a natural consequence of aging. It's often controlled by genetics, and there's not much you can do about it."

Deep wrinkles and furrows in the skin are caused by damage to the dermis. The skin doesn't snap back into place because of the damaged elastic tissue.

Skim creams containing collagen and elastin that are rubbed into the outer skin layer cannot replace damaged collagen and elastic tissue. Even if these ingredients filter down into the dermis, the body will treat them as foreign particles and dissolve them, Wolf said.

The most common cause of premature damage to the dermis is excessive exposure to sunlight, which penetrates the skin surface and destroys collagen and elastic tissue in the middle layer.

Wolf said wearing a sunscreen with an SPF (sun protection factor) of 15 or higher will offer maximum protection from the sun's harmful rays.

Because vitamin C promotes production and growth of collagen, Wolf said a well-balanced diet also protects the dermis. He cautioned, however, that no scientific studies have shown that "megadoses" of vitamin C are of special benefit to the dermis.

Exposure of the outer skin to chemicals and pollutants in the water and air, irritants in abrasive soaps, and bad weather can result in rough, dry, scaly skin with tiny fine lines. These may become more noticeable because the oil glands secrete less oil on the skin surface as the body gets older.

Whether expensive or not, any skin cream that adds moisture to the outer layer can help resolve the problem of dry skin, Wolf said.

Using "super-fatted" soaps designed for dry skin and avoiding antibacterial soaps that are available to the skin can also help minimize damage to the epidermis.

There is one drug product which "offers a glimmer of hope" for wrinkled skin, Wolf said. Retin-A, or retinoic acid, is a drug derived from vitamin A and originally designed for treatment of acne. Researchers later discovered that the drug stimulates production of new collagen and increases new cell growth.

Wolf said several U.S. dermatologists are testing Retin-A on aging skin. The drug is available by prescription only, and its side effects must be carefully monitored by a physician. The strong medicated cream can make skin more sensitive to sunlight and can cause redness and peeling. Pregnant women should not take the drug.

Dear Heloise: Self-sealing bags are so useful. I want to share some of the uses I have found for them.

After grocery shopping, I clean and prepare the vegetables and put them in separate bags before I store them in the vegetable bin.

I use the bags for all my pantyhose. Each bag holds a separate pair. To mark each one I cut the name off of the package and insert it in a bag.

Now for my sewing room, I stick the patterns in bags to keep them from tearing as I dig through for a certain pattern. I also like to put in a small scrap of the material, then I can easily remember just how the garment turned out. — Ethel Diaz, Hot Springs, Ark.

Two women forced out of urban life

By BECKY KNAPP Austin American-Statesman

BLANCO, Texas (AP) — The first night in her new home just this side of the Blanco Rover, Dana Miller was scared to death.

She was frightened of the bugs and the wild animals, and when curious armadillos began digging under her tent, she became frantic.

But during the past three months, Ms. Miller has grown used to the wilderness lifestyle she is living out of desperation, not choice.

Ms. Miller, 30, suffers from environmental illness, which means that she cannot tolerate life in a society saturated with chemicals and toxins.

She is camping of 1,700 acres of unused ranch land near Blanco. But the owners want Ms. Miller to move so they can put cattle on the property, and she needs a new home.

Southwest of Elgin, Patricia Day, 38, also lives on someone else's land and is searching for another location.

"Something came up and I have to move, and when you have this disease, finding a place to live is not as easy as going out and renting an apartment," Ms. Day said. "You have to find land that has water and electricity, that is not in a flood plain, and where no aerial or chemical spraying is being done."

"The land needs to have not been sprayed in a few years, or better still, never have been sprayed. And since there is always a problem of wind drift, the neighbors mean a lot

You can't move someplace where the neighbors will be spraying or burning plastic or rubber and things like that."

Ms. Day, a weaver, lives in a converted metal storage shed that has been insulated against pollutants.

Her bed sits in a corner of the one-room structure, and centered in the middle is an old-time porcelain bathtub.

"I got plumbing in two years ago," said Ms. Day, who has lived in the shed since 1981. "This is really my home. It's served me well, and I'm really proud of it."

Dana Miller and Patricia Day are a growing number of people across the country who suffer reactions to substances that are taken for granted in the 20th century: plastics, gases, synthetic fabrics, resins, beauty products, chemical cleaners, and insect repellants.

Although their cases are extreme, their conditions are not as uncommon as many people think, said Dr. Alfred Johnson, a physician with the Environmental Health Center-Dallas.

"About 30 to 40 million Americans have allergies, and those people may or may not be additionally sensitive to chemicals in the environment," he said. "We are seeing more and more people who can't tolerate the modern world. A big part of that, I would say, is that pollution is becoming worse in our cities."

"Another problem is that modern architecture often gives us closed buildings where there is no fresh air and no ventilation, and people are constantly being exposed to chemicals used within the building," he said. "Those buildings are very bad, because there is no way to circulate air and people become ill. And lastly, some people are just more vulnerable to toxic environment."

Environmental illness causes varied symptoms, from headaches, irritability, fatigue and disorientation to vomiting and numbing of the hands or feet, researchers say.

Almost everyone suffers from some type of environmental illness, said Dr. Alan Levin, a San Francisco immunologist.

"You may be a person who gets a headache from perfumes or car exhaust when you have a cold or the flu," he said. "What happens in that situation is that the flu or the cold is altering your immune capabilities. What one person may feel with a cold or the flu is the way people with EI, or multiple chemical sensitivity, feel all the time. They might get headaches from perfumes, or get nauseous from exposure to certain things like cigarette smoke or pesticides."

Ms. Miller came to Texas in September, after learning that environmentally ill people were successfully living in the Wimberley-Blanco area, and that a Wimberley resident, Sue Pitman, has built a guest house designed especially EI victims.

When Ms. Miller could not tolerate the guest house because of pesticide use in the area, she was forced to move to the open, unsprayed wilds.

She gets her staples from Whole Foods Market, and survives mainly on raw vegetables and meat that is cooked by Ms. Pitman and brought to her by another woman she has hired to run errands.

She drinks only bottled water, used baking soda and vinegar for laundry and cleaning, and Neo-Life Green, a product made from kelp, as a soap substitute. (She also used the product to kill fire ants.)

Ms. Miller spends most of her time eating, reading and writing in the vicinity of her borrowed blue tent, sometimes hand-washing her clothes and bedding at a nearby windmill-powered pump. A metal yard chair and two ice chests are her living room, under a ceiling of live oak branches.

When her tent collapsed recently, in high winds and rain, Ms. Miller had to move into the cab of her truck, which has no upholstery.

"The interior got contaminated," she said, "so I tore all the upholstery out of it."

This is an unusual existence for a woman who graduated magna cum laude from Brown University in 1960, attended Harvard Law School for two semesters, and worked for M.I.T. and the Massachusetts Senate.

"So you think I like living like this?" she asked, nodding at her tiny camp. "I hate it. I cannot stand living this way!"

Ms. Miller has not always been a fugitive from society. Raised in Manhattan, she grew up "using pesticides, dry-cleaning my clothes — just a normal person, like everybody else."

In 1984, she was engaged and attending law school at Harvard University when a downstairs neighbor in her apartment building used the insecticide Raid to kill some ants.

Although she had experienced mild reactions to insecticides on other occasions, the carbamate in Raid caused a severe reaction in Ms. Miller, sensitizing her to all types of pesticides and a variety of other chemicals.

Ms. Miller moved out of the apartment the day after exposure, but her symptoms did not go away. She saw doctor after doctor, finally consulting Levin in San Francisco, who told her that — because of the damage done to her body by exposure to pesticides — she had developed several auto-immune conditions.

"The pesticide affected my hypothalamus and my endocrine system," Ms. Miller said. "My hypothalamus only functions partially now. My thyroid and ovaries have been affected; I haven't menstruated since 1984. It's comparable to eagles that, after being exposed to pesticides, were laying thin-shelled eggs — except that I am human."

"My total medical bills over the last four years have been in excess of $400,000," she said. "With an auto-immune disease, your body is attacking itself, so what is happening to me now is that my body has found the glands that don't function properly, and is attacking and destroying them."

In addition, Ms. Miller said she suffers from damage to her heart and central nervous system as a direct result of exposure to pesticides.

Patricia Day does not know what triggered a reaction in her, but she suspects that a job dyeing silk scarves in chemical baths contributed to her condition. She began experiencing serious bouts of fatigue and weakness in the late 1970s.

When the symptoms continued, Ms. Day finally consulted an Austin nutritionist, who put her on a program that helped somewhat.

But when the nutritionist saw no great improvements in his client, he advised Ms. Day to consult with Dr. William Rea of Dallas, one of the country's leading cardiologists who is described by a colleague as "the absolute authority on EI in this area."

Rea advised Ms. Day to "go home, move to the country, drink only bottled water, eat only organic foods, rotate my diet and exercise when I could."

"He also told me that the best treatment for my problem was avoidance," she said.

She took her doctor's advice and moved to her present homesite near Elgin.

Although she does not advocate that Americans return to pioneer lifestyles, Ms. Day said she would like to see use of pesticides and chemicals better controlled in our society.

Ms. Miller added that people need to be aware of the dangers when using chemicals on a daily basis.

"Our world is so polluted, and our lives are so comfortable with pollution that we don't want to change it or stop it," she said. "People tend to discount the future until the future becomes the present, and they discount remote possibilities. But the problems with chemicals in our society are becoming more prevalent, and it's going to catch up with us. I am not a mutant, and this is going to keep happening until people wake up. What happened to me can happen to anyone."

Social Security

PLANNING TO RETIRE
By Jim Talbot
Social Security Manager
in Amarillo, Tx.

December is a favorite time of the year for people to retire. However, September is the time you should be thinking about it. Too many people wait until the last minute and often find that the process of retirement may take a little longer than they expected.

Generally, we like to have people contact us about 3 months before they are ready to retire.

In considering various retirement options under Social Security, a person should not the following:

EARLY RETIREMENT — Benefits can be paid as early as 62. Such benefits are reduced for each month before 65, up to 20 percent for a worker who starts receiving benefits at 62. A widow or widower may apply for Social Security survivors benefits on the earnings record of a deceased spouse as early as 60.

DELAYED RETIREMENT — People who delay retirement past 65 receive a 3 percent retirement credit for each year (4 percent for each month) after 65 up to 70 that they do not get a benefit. Starting in 1990, the delayed retirement credit will increase gradually until it reaches 8 percent by the year 2009.

EFFECT OF EARNINGS — There is a limit to how much a person can earn and still receive all Social Security Benefits. The amount of the annual earnings limit depends on one's age and changes each year with increases in general wage levels. A monthly test is applied the first year of retirement, which makes it possible for a person to retire at any time of the year without having earnings in the months before retirement reduce benefits. For people who plan to continue top work after retirement, it's important to let Social Security know how much they expect to earn.

MEDICARE — People don't have to retire to get Medicare. A person who plans to keep working after 65 can still get Medicare by applying at any Social Security office 2 or 3 months before 65. Medicare provides help with hospital and doctor bills for people 65 and over, certain disabled people under 65, and people with permanent kidney failure.

ITALY'S RED GRAPES

The grape of quality in Italy is the Nebbiolo, a red wine grape producing the rich, full wines of Piedmont and Lombardy. Barbera and Grignolino are also grown in those regions but produce softer, lighter wines. The Sangiovese grape is grown in several regions but is best known near the Chianti area. The Lambrusco grape makes the popular wine of the same name in Emilia-Romagna. In the Veneto region, the Corvina Veronese grape produces both Bardolino and Valpolicella. The Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, and Pinot Nero (Pinot Noir) grapes are grown successfully in the northern regions of Italy that border on Switzerland and Austria.

Domestic and imported wines in various price ranges are available at THE STORE. Whether you prefer California Chardonnay or fine wines from Italian winemakers chances are we have your favorite. ## Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I would like to respond to "Life at 30,000 Feet," the airline employee who had some harsh words for parents who send children alone on cross-country flights.

If you have a child and your former spouse lives a few thousand miles away, you might not have a choice. The judge makes the decision for you.

I spent one of the most wretched holiday seasons of my life after my 7-year-old son was dragged, kicking and screaming, to his father's home on the other side of the U.S.A. My ex-husband sent an airline ticket (non-refundable) and I was forced to send the boy to a father he hardly knew. The little tyke was scared to death. He clung to me, screaming, "Don't leave me, Mommy," but what could I do? If I had the money I would have flown with him, but I'm barely scraping by, so the child had to go alone.

Several days later, when he was to return, I got to the airport an hour early and eagerly watched all the passengers as they deplaned. My child did not appear. I was frantic and ran to the booth to ask, "Where is my son?" The flight attendant went into the plane and brought back two strange children. I had to board the plane myself and finally found my child sound asleep, under newspapers.

Thank God I only had to live through that hell once. His father is now back in town, and guess what? He never even phones.—Glad It's Over

DEAR GLAD: Many divorced parents wrote to complain about that letter. They felt that I was too hard on the parents who, for financial reasons, had to send their children on long journeys unaccompanied.

Granted, divorce is never pretty. Too often the children get the neck of the chicken and the rumble-seat ride. But there is something that can be done to make the trip less traumatic. If a child must travel a long distance or change planes unaccompanied, it's a good idea to talk to the flight attendant in advance and enlist his or her help. You will find that most of them are well-trained, cheerful and eager to be of assistance. In the last few months every airline I've traveled has improved dramatically.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Last week a car accident occurred in our town. It happened seconds before I arrived on the scene.

I stopped to see if I could do anything to help. One of the witnesses said the mother had made an illegal left turn in front of another vehicle. She was screaming hysterically as the paramedics and highway patrolman tried desperately to get her daughter out of the twisted mass that once was a car.

I learned later that the mother had been fighting with her daughter just before the crash. I experienced a sinking feeling as I remembered how many times I had been behind the wheel, arguing with my own teenage daughter and not giving my full attention to driving. It never occurred to me that I was putting us both in danger.

Let us add another rule for vehicle safety. Don't drive and argue. Save the fights until you reach your destination. When the flow of adrenalin is stepped up suddenly, the judgment may not be the best.

My heart goes out to that poor mother. I hope the girl makes it. —Lucky in Bakersfield

DEAR BAKE: So do I. Please let me know the outcome. Meanwhile, there is an important lesson to be learned from this tragedy. Thank you for bringing it to the attention of my millions of readers.

Planning a wedding? What's right? What's wrong? "The Ann Landers Guide for Brides" will relieve our anxiety. To receive a copy, send $2.50 plus a No. 10, self-addressed, stamped envelope (39 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11562, Chicago, Ill. 60611-0562.

Military Muster

Navy Airman Recruit Raymond G. Casarez, a resident of Hereford, has completed recruit training at Recruit Training Command, San Diego.

During Casarez's eight-week training cycle, he studied general military subjects designed to prepare him for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic fields.

Casarez's studies included seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid. Personnel who complete this course of instruction are eligible for three hours of college credit in Physical Education and Hygiene.

A 1986 graduate of Hereford High School, he joined the Navy Reserves in April 1987.

The Great Fire of London started Sept. 2, 1666, and virtually destroyed the city in five days.

Sorority dance plans confirmed by chapter

Connie Matthews served as hostess when members of Xi Epsilon Alpha Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi Sorority met Tuesday evening in the Southwestern Public Service Reddy Room. Holly Bixler was co-hostess.

Matthews called the meeting to order. It was announced that Tim Homer would serve as D.J. for the sorority's annual Sweetheart Dance planned at 8 p.m. Feb. 6 at the Knights of Columbus Hall. Tickets are priced at $10 per person and $20 per couple. Chapter members were asked to bring chips and dips and it was noted that those who plan to assist with decorations need to be at the KC Hall by 10 a.m. Feb. 6.

Also, the Sweetheart Brunch was set for 10:30 a.m. Jan. 30 at the Hereford Community Center. All members were encouraged to attend.

Before the business meeting concluded, the group was reminded that the city council will purchase new ritual books for each chapter. Also, the next meeting was planned at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 19 at the home of Denise Haflinger, 312 Douglas. Marge Bell will serve as co-hostess and Ruby Sanders will present the program. There will be another pledge training session during the meeting.

Those attending included Deann Harris, Pene Coplen, Gaye Reily, Haflinger, Melinda White, Susan Shaw, Matthews, Peggy Hyer, Susan Cardinal, Donna Grady, Sharon Bodner, Bixler and Bell.

ASK DR. LAMB

DEAR DR. LAMB: After stewing fryer chickens, I remove the skin, fat and bones as soon as they are cool. I refrigerate the broth until the fat can be removed from the top. I use the broth for soup. Is this method similar to skinning and removing the fat before cooking?

DEAR READER: This method is helpful, but it is not quite as good as removing the skin and fat before cooking. Some of the fat in the skin can permeate the flesh. Baking poultry with the skin still intact also results in more fat in the flesh than there will be if you remove all you can before cooking.

However, removing the skin after cooking will significantly decrease the amount of fat you will consume. That is important if you want to limit your total fat intake or your calorie consumption. Putting the broth in the refrigerator until the fat is solid enough to remove is a useful trick. It will also work for the drippings from roast beef or from the juices from roasting poultry. The juices that are left are nearly fat free and can be used for gravy, or added to dressing or added to meat after it has been cooked.

Skimming poultry before cooking it is the most important thing you can do to limit its fat content. But you should also choose the bird that will contain the least fat. The fryer chicken you use is one of the lowest in fat. A roasting hen contains much more fat. The same applies to turkey. The young turkeys contain the least fat. Your choice of pieces to eat also helps to limit fat. Regardless of how it is cooked, you will get far less fat from the breast of turkey or chicken than you will from any other piece.

I have listed the fat content in the poultry most commonly used in food tables — as well as the values for individual pieces — in Special Report 57, Poultry-Wise, which I am sending you. Others who want this report can send $1 and a long, self-addressed envelope with 39 cents postage to THE HEALTH LETTER, Dept. 57, P.O. Box 19622, Irvine, CA 92713.

The fat in poultry is lower in saturated fat than the fat in red meat. That is why it is often recommended to replace red meat with more poultry. But many chickens and turkey contain just as much or more fat than many cuts of beef. Just because it is poultry does not mean it is low in fat at all.

DEAR DR. LAMB: I am 30 years old and almost all gray. My family also is gray-haired. Could this problem be corrected or reversed? What kind of therapy or vitamins could I take to correct this problem? It is extremely embarrassing to me.

DEAR READER: Gray hair has little or nothing to do with nutrition, including vitamins and minerals, except in rare metabolic diseases — which I am certain you do not have. There is a familial tendency to have gray hair at an early age.

The color of the hair depends upon pigments produced by the same type of pigment cells that give color to the skin. The type of pigment determines the color of your hair, with blond and red hair having a different pigment from black or brown hair. Bright red hair contains a unique iron pigment not found in other human hair. As the amount of pigment decreases, the hair becomes gray.

I'm afraid the only choice you have is to color it, if you really don't like having gray hair.

DEAR DR. LAMB: I am a 62-year-old male. I had heart bypass surgery in 1976 and again last September. Ever since 1969 I have had leg cramps when I walk any distance, but since my last surgery these cramps have become much more severe.

I only have the problem when I walk. Until recently, the pain would subside after a few minutes of slow walking, but now I must stop for a minute or two for relief. Is there a solution to this problem?

DEAR READER: You have given a clear description of intermittent claudication — a condition caused by inadequate blood flow to your legs. When you are not working your leg muscles, as when walking, you have enough circulation to the muscles, and you have no pain. But when you are walking, and your working leg muscles require more blood, your circulation cannot provide it.

The condition will progress in most cases. That is why at first you could simply slow down your walk, and the pain would disappear, but now you have to stop and rest.

The cause is usually obstruction of the arteries that go to your legs. Since you have obstruction of your coronary arteries that has required bypass operations, it is a good bet that you have the same process in the arteries to your legs. Your doctor can tell from an examination. The arteries can be visualized by dye studies and X-rays that can show the presence, location and extent of any obstruction you might have. If such obstructions do not involve the entire length of the arteries, you can have the obstruction bypassed, much like the obstruction in your coronary arteries was bypassed. In fact, bypass operations for such obstructions to the leg arteries were done for years before the popular coronary bypass operation was possible.

New techniques are also available or being developed that may enable the opening of extensive artery obstructions that could not be operated on in the past.

DEAR DR. LAMB: I am 66, widowed, 5 feet 4, of medium build and weigh 140. I thought I was in good health, but during a recent checkup the doctor said I have a mitral valve click. He suggested telling my dentist and having penicillin tablets before and after dental cleaning. Would you please explain the dangers, limitations, cause and treatment? My sister had rheumatic heart disease, but otherwise no one else on either side of the family has had any heart trouble.

DEAR READER: I would have to know more about what the doctor actually heard to be able to tell you what you really have. You could have damage of the mitral valve, between the upper and lower chambers of the left side of your heart. That could be on the basis of rheumatic heart disease, because of your sister's history.

Rheumatic fever — and therefore rheumatic heart disease — is a complication of a streptococcal infection, such as a strep throat. Such strep throats are contagious and that does raise the question about the possibility that you may also have had a mild, then unrecognized, infection.

Rheumatic heart disease often involves the mitral valve, causing permanent damage. The other possibility is that you have a mitral valve prolapse. This is not the same thing, but it can cause a click. These are common and are caused by a portion of the valve not closing properly, allowing a small backward leak when the heart is contracting.

We used to think these sounds were just normal variants of the heart's function, but now we know the cause, and some individuals with this disorder require treatment. In other cases it is really not very important. Regardless of the cause, it is clear that your doctor thinks you have some abnormality of your mitral valve.

That can result in bacteria lodging on the deformed valve and causing a condition called bacterial endocarditis. This is a serious illness. The penicillin is to prevent such an infection. Most individuals with heart defects and artificial heart valves require such preventive treatment. That does include treatment before having your teeth cleaned.

DEAR DR. LAMB: After reading your remarks about palm oil and palm kernel oil I started checking food labels and was horrified to find one of my pantry staples, Crisco, contains palm oil. What to do? Could I bake with margarine? I'm trying to spread the news as not many people suspect Crisco.

DEAR READER: The most dangerous fats for your health are coconut oil, palm kernel oil and palm oil. Vegetable shortenings are not the only place you will find these. These hidden sources of highly saturated fats are a big problem. They do increase the body's tendency to form fatty-cholesterol particles that lodge in arteries and cause heart attacks.

Yes, you can use a margarine that is low in saturated fat and relatively high in polyunsaturated fat for baking. Or you can use an oil that is low in saturated fat, such as safflower oil or corn oil. Check the labels. Usually, for the best results, you can substitute two-thirds as much oil for lard, butter, or solid shortening listed in the recipe. Crisco does have a cooking oil that is low in saturated fat, made from soybeans.

Dr. Lamb welcomes letters from readers with health questions. You can write to him at P.O. Box 19622, Irvine, CA 92713.

Dallas Mavericks edge Pacers 110-108

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Mavericks coach John MacLeod reached a personal milestone, but he wanted to talk about the accomplishment of Dallas power forward Roy Tarpley.

Tarpley came off the bench to pull down a team-record 23 rebounds as the Mavericks defeated the Indiana Pacers, 110-108, Wednesday night to give MacLeod his 600th NBA coaching victory.

With the victory, MacLeod became only the eighth coach in the history of the National Basketball Association to reach the 600-victory milestone.

"It's a milestone, sure," said MacLeod, who won 579 games as coach of the Phoenix Suns and stands eighth on the all-time list. "I feel fortunate to have lasted this long. The juices are still flowing, though. I feel I have a long way to go."

MacLeod preferred to talk about Tarpley's work on the boards. Tarpley had a personal season-high 19 rebounds Saturday night in a victory over Golden State, then Wednesday night broke James Donaldson's previous team record of 22 rebounds.

"His 23 rebounds is quite an accomplishment," MacLeod said. "He's establishing himself as a big-time rebounder."

Tarpley said he was unaware he'd set a record until after the game.

"I had no idea," said Tarpley, who had 12 rebounds on the offensive glass. "They must have given me a few of James Donaldson's rebounds. Now I've got to work at putting the ball in the basket."

Tarpley finished with 12 points but hit only 4 of 18 shots.

"I feel I'm filling my role, which is to rebound," Tarpley said. "It's just a matter of being in the right place at the right time."

Mark Aguirre provided the scoring punch with a game-high 35 points as the Mavericks won their 11th-straight home game.

Tarpley's rebounding also drew praise from teammate Derek Harper.

"He has a knack for knowing where the ball is," Harper said. "He tips the ball and tips the ball until he gets it."

Indiana was forced to go without starting center Steve Stipanovich, who left the arena and returned to the hotel before the game because of a bout with the flu.

"When you're forced to play without a key member of your team such as Stipo, you just have to go out and play and try not to make mistakes," said John Long, who hit 11 of 15 field goal attempts and led the Pacers with 26 points.

"We were unable to keep them off the boards and that was the difference tonight," Long said.

Wilkins scores 48 points, leads Hawks over Spurs

By DAVID SEDENO

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins knows that when he's hot he's tough to stop.

The San Antonio Spurs tried to muscle the 6-8 forward, but he penetrated their defense and scored a season-high 48 points to lead the Hawks to a 120-110 NBA victory Wednesday.

Wilkins, who led the team in rebounds with 11, also was perfect from the free-throw line, 18-18.

"It was just one of those nights when I was going good and my teammates were giving me lots of help," Wilkins said.

"When I'm feeling like I did tonight, I can be really hard to stop," he said.

His teammate, Glenn Rivers, scored 19 points and led the Hawks with seven assists.

Walter Berry led Spurs scorers with 28 and Alvin Robertson had 24.

Central State, Cameron now in NCAA Division II

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Two Oklahoma colleges will switch from the NAIA to full membership in NCAA Division II on Sept. 1 after a vote taken by National Collegiate Athletic Association members.

The NCAA voted Monday to waive the second year of probation for Cameron University in Lawton and Central State University in Edmond. Both schools will become members of the Lone Star Conference with the 1988-89 season.

Cameron and Central State have been members of District 9 of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Central State plans to drop out of District 9 next season.

Bill Carter, athletic director at Cameron, said Cameron's philosophy also has been to be a full NCAA member without dual affiliation.

"If we are considering dual memberships at all it would be in our spring sports — baseball, golf and women's tennis," Carter said.

Other Lone Star Conference teams are Eastern New Mexico, West Texas, East Texas, Texas A&I, Abilene Christian and Angelo State.

Use angry energy to beat Houston

Suns are 'Fighting mad'

By WALTER BERRY
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The Phoenix Suns seem to be fighting mad these days in the middle of a frustrating NBA season.

Wednesday night, they channeled some of that angry energy into a 117-106 win over the Houston Rockets as Jay Humphries scored 11 of his season-high 26 points during a fight-marred third period and Larry Nance had 10 of his 19 in the game's final 8:08.

"We hung in there," said Phoenix Coach John Wetzel. "We had a little distraction, but afterward we maintained our composure. We didn't get jumpy. Sometimes in situations like that, you try to get people back and get even. We just came back and executed."

Houston, down 69-61 with 7:16 remaining in the third quarter, closed to 71-70 on Allen Leavell's jumper with 4:58 left.

Humphries, whose three-point play 46 seconds before halftime halted an 11-0 Rockets' run and put Phoenix ahead 58-55, scored five points in a 9-2 spurt for an 80-72 lead with 2:24 left in the third period.

Suns reserve guard Jeff Hornacek and Houston's Eric "Sleepy" Floyd were then ejected for getting into two separate shoving-and-wrestling matches that erupted into bench-clearing brawls with 2:20 left in the third quarter.

After the ejections, Humphries added a layup and a jumper to give the Suns an 88-79 lead entering the final period.

Cedric Maxwell came off the bench to score six points to bring the Rockets to within 105-98 with 3:47 left to play. But Nance hit two hook shots and Humphries and rookie Armon Gilliam both sank jumpers to make it 113-102 with 1:10 remaining and Houston never threatened again.

Rockets Coach Bill Fitch said the brawls may have literally taken the fight out of his team.

"It can go two ways," he said. "It can either work for the home team or work against them. I don't think we played particularly good basketball after that point. Whether it was the loss of 'Sleepy' or whether it was a combination of what we had, we never really put on a sustained spurt at either end and the Suns played very well all the way through."

Hornacek and Floyd also were ejected for fighting in a game last season at Oakland, Calif., when Floyd played for the Golden State Warriors.

Nance was fined $3,000 by the NBA on Monday for his fight here last week with the Dallas Mavericks' Mark Aguirre.

"Anytime you get the crowd behind you, you should play a notch or two better. That's what Phoenix did. They rose to the occasion and made the big plays," said forward Purvis Short, who paced the Rockets with 20 points. "We wanted to keep forcing the issue and keep our composure," Humphries said. "We knew that the game was ours if we kept playing the way we were playing."

Walter Davis added 24 points for the Suns, who had lost six of their previous 10 games and had their roster decimated by injuries all season. James Edwards added 20 and Gilliam, making his third NBA start, had 16 plus a career-high 10 rebounds.

Leavell and Akeem Olajuwon both had 15 points for Houston with Floyd scoring 11 before being ejected.

Olajuwon, the NBA's 15th-leading scorer with a 20.5-point average, was held to nine points by halftime and had only 11 field-goal attempts in the game although he made seven of them. Floyd was just 5-of-14.

"They double- and triple-teamed Akeem down low," Short said. "We had to kick the ball outside and we had our shots but most of them wouldn't go in."

"What we wanted to do was double-down on Akeem and make 'Sleepy' shoot outside," Humphries said. "If he made 10 or 15 field goals, they beat us. But they had to beat us from 22 feet."

The loss snapped the Rockets' two-game winning streak. They had beaten the Suns in 12 of the last 16 meetings, including four of the past five in Phoenix.
