FBI may have spied on Reagan opponents

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government documents outline a six-year FBI campaign of domestic surveillance against opponents of the Reagan administration's Central America policies, and a theology professor who was among the targets says he is "insulted, offended and perplexed."

"I have grave reservations about the U.S. policy in Central America, but I am not a terrorist," said Paul Knitter, a professor at Xavier University in Cincinnati.

The Center for Constitutional Rights, a New York-based lawyers group, on Wednesday released copies of government documents it obtained through the Freedom of Information Act outlining the FBI's domestic surveillance campaign.

The center said the documents it received showed that the FBI investigated hundreds of organizations and individuals, such as Knitter, opposed to the U.S. policy in Central America.

The FBI issued a statement saying it investigated one group opposed to U.S. involvement in Central America, but it was looking for "alleged criminal activity" and was not harassing critics of administration policy.

But Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the House subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights, said that when the FBI found no evidence of criminal activity, the investigation "look on a life of its own."

"We want the FBI to catch spies, terrorists and crooks and put them in jail, not keep political groups under surveillance, even ones that disagree with the president," Edwards said.

The Center for Constitutional Rights released a list of more than 150 organizations named in the FBI files. Among them were the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Atlanta; the Maryknoll Sisters in Chicago; the United Steel Workers Union, the United Auto Workers Union and the National Education Association, all in Cleveland; Walker Methodist Community Church in Minneapolis; and the Women's Rape Crisis Center in Norfolk, Va.

One of the documents released indicated that the FBI began investigating Knitter, who has made three trips to Nicaragua and given numerous talks to church and civic groups, after his name appeared in a 1984 article in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

According to the document, FBI agents visited the Xavier campus last May, asked about the classes Knitter taught and spoke to another professor about their concerns about terrorist activity in universities and colleges.

The FBI acknowledged that it had investigated the Committee in Support of the People of El Salvador, or CISPE, but maintained that it was looking into "alleged criminal activity rather than the motives and beliefs of those being investigated."

The FBI added in a statement that it "is sensitive to the constitutional rights of the American public and the bureau has no interest in interfering with the exercise of these rights."

Margaret Ratner, an attorney with the center, said the investigations violate the First and Fourth Amendments to the Constitution, which guarantee freedoms of speech and assembly and the right to be secure from unreasonable searches and seizures. She said the center was considering a lawsuit to prevent similar FBI surveillance campaigns in the future.

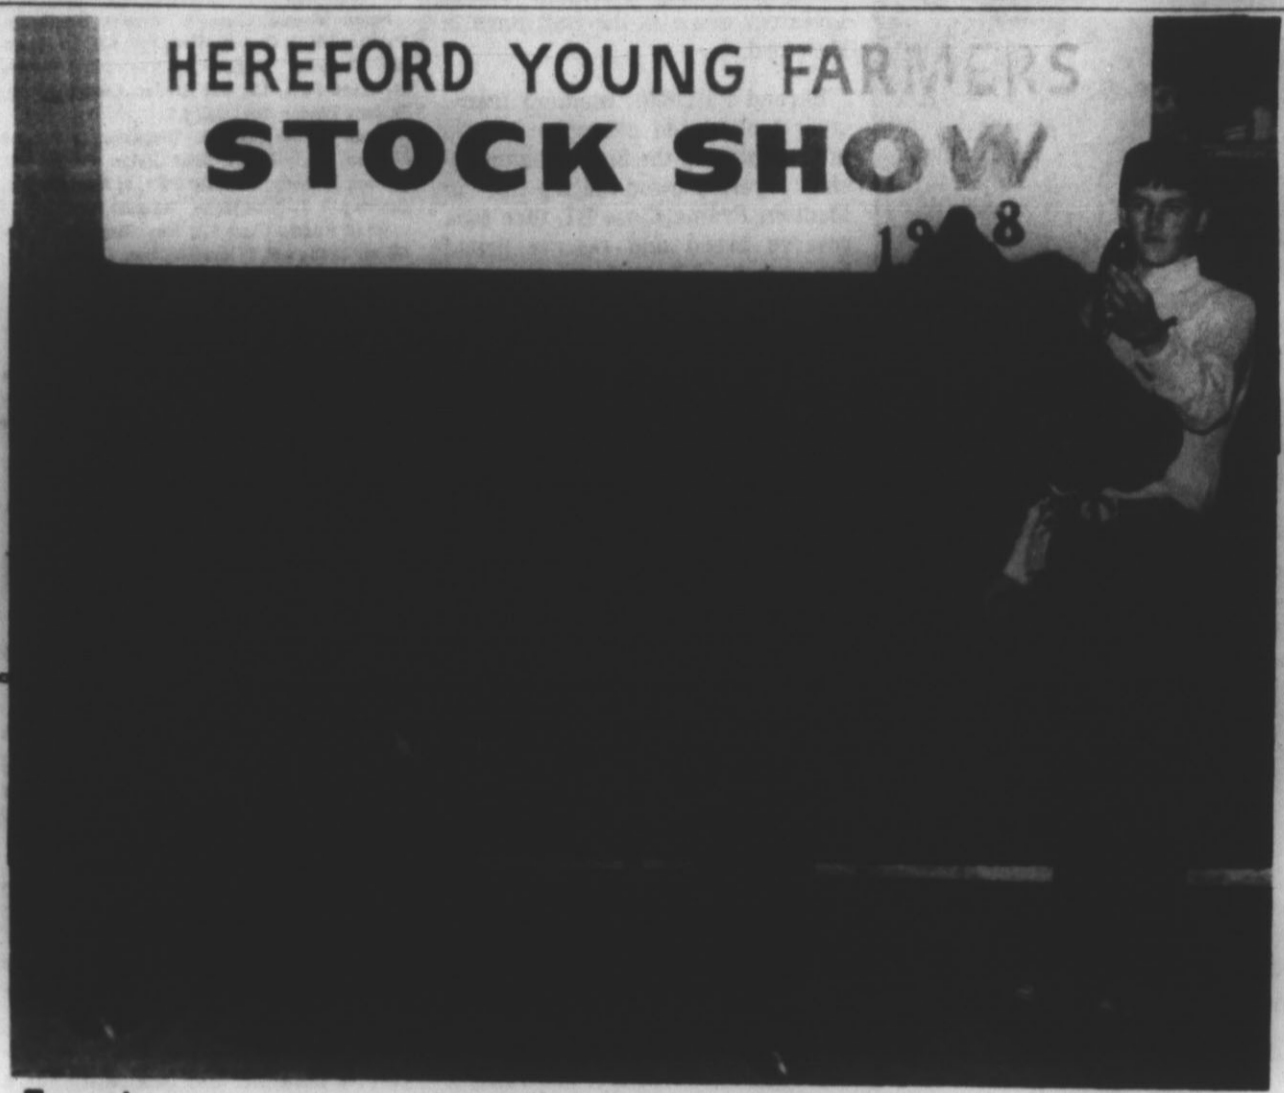

Ratner said the FBI began its investigation in 1981 to determine if any members of CISPE, a group working to end U.S. intervention in Central America, were foreign agents.

But when FBI field offices found no evidence to back up that claim, she said, the investigation was turned into a "foreign intelligence-terrorism inquiry."

"The new category allowed the FBI to utilize 'special techniques' that are considered illegal when applied to domestic investigations," she said.

On Capitol Hill, Edwards said FBI headquarters officials assured him that "they had good reason for starting this." He said they also assured him that the bureau is no longer probing CISPE.

Contra push is on

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has begun a personal lobbying campaign for $36 million in new aid to the rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist government, but House Democrats are drafting their own rival proposal that leaves out any money for weapons.

The opposing plans were being pushed hard with a show-down House vote on the Reagan proposal just a week away. The outcome is crucial to the existence of the rebels, known as Contras, who would get $3.6 million in lethal aid under the Reagan proposal.

"It's now or never," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., a leader of pro-Contra forces in the House. "We cannot afford a defeat on this aid package."

Reagan held a series of meetings with undecided lawmakers on Wednesday, and more meetings were scheduled for today. The House will vote on the president's aid proposal on Feb. 3 and if it passes, the Senate will vote the next day.

"I didn't come to Washington to preside over the communication of Central America," Reagan said in a speech announcing the proposal.

With the Contras and the Sandinistas beginning direct cease-fire talks today in Costa Rica, Reagan said only continued support for the rebels will keep the negotiations going.

The Reagan package would give a total of $36.2 million to the rebels to last them from March 1, when current aid runs out, until the end of June.

Of the total, roughly $20 million would go for transportation of supplies to Contra troops in the field inside Nicaragua, and another $12 million or so would buy supplies such as food, clothing, medicine and communications gear.

The most controversial part is $3.6 million for ammunition and Redeye anti-aircraft missiles. That money would be held in escrow until March 31, when it would be up to Reagan to decide whether to release it to the rebels.

The decision would be based on whether a cease-fire is in place between the Contras and the Sandinista government, and whether the president believes the two sides have bargained in good faith. Reagan also promised to consult personally with the presidents of the region's four democracies — Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala — before letting the lethal aid flow.

Challenger remembered

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA workers tempered their enthusiasm for a new shuttle launch date with a silent tribute to the seven Challenger astronauts who died two years ago today.

Flags at the Kennedy Space Center were lowered to half-staff at 11:38 a.m., the moment Challenger roared off launch pad 39B on Jan. 28, 1986. For 73 seconds, the duration of the fatal flight, all activity stopped in memory of the worst disaster in the history of space exploration.

At the same time, in Concord, N.H., students at Concord High School were to stand for a moment of silence in honor of Christa McAuliffe, the social studies teacher who died in the explosion that grounded the shuttle program.

"Everybody has their own, very silent way to remember and to rebuild themselves and that's the way it's been going," school Superintendent Mark Beauvais said Wednesday.

He said the low-key observance reflects how the community has tried to heal from the shuttle tragedy, respecting the privacy of McAuliffe's husband, Steven, 39; and children, Scott, 11; and Caroline, 7, who live in Concord.

"What we are dealing with now is the respect for the living, the three people who were closest to Christa," said Beauvais, who was in the bleachers at Cape Canaveral when Challenger blew up.

After the silent memorial, some Kennedy Space Center workers returned to preparing Discovery for launching on Aug. 4, the new date announced Wednesday by Rear Adm. Richard Truly, NASA's associate administrator for space flight. Others are working on Atlantis and Columbia for later flights.

Setting the date lifted the spirits of workers here who had been without a firm target since Dec. 29, when the space agency announced it was

Memory of Apollo astronauts lingers

HOUSTON (AP) — An attorney who represented the widows of astronauts killed in space tragedies says that as the memory of such disasters fade, the women are forgotten.

While today is the second anniversary of the space shuttle Challenger disaster, Wednesday marked the 21st anniversary of the 1967 Apollo 1 capsule fire in which three astronauts died.

"Yes, I know how it went then, and I know how it goes now," said Ronald D. Krist of Houston, who represented astronaut widows seeking compensation in both tragedies.

"The president attends your husband's funeral. Congress lowers all the flags to half mast. The president delivers the eulogy."

"Every television station in the world talks about it. You are in 3,000 headlines around the world."

"But in three years you are forgotten," he said. "NASA doesn't care. You have to present your identification at a 7-Eleven to cash a $5 check. Tears are cheap, and memories fade, and you better look out for yourself. And that's how that cookie crumbles."

On Jan. 27, 1967, astronauts Virgil I. "Gus" Grissom, Roger B. Chaffee and Edward H. White II were killed in an electrical fire, trapped inside the Apollo 1 capsule at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

Like the Challenger accident in which all seven crew members were killed, the Apollo 1 fire was shocking not only because of the deaths, but also because the accident erupted after 16 consecutive successful flights of the Mercury and Gemini series.

In 1972, Krist won a landmark case and a financial settlement for Betty Grissom, widow of Gus Grissom, just as the case's statute of limitations was expiring in Florida.

"Betty never doubted that she was doing the right thing. She never

Police arrest two for burglaries

Hereford police arrested a 30-year-old man Wednesday on charges of burglary after the police received a tip through Crimestoppers that alleged that Raymond Leon was storing stolen musical equipment in his home at 432 Ave. D.

Four guitars, two large speakers and one amplifier were found in Leon's home during a raid at 3:30 a.m. Wednesday. Some of the items discovered were reported stolen from a church at Campbell Avenue and Bradley Street, and the remaining equipment was taken from a storage shed at U.S. Highway 385 and 18th Street.

Police said Leon confessed to the burglaries to Deaf Smith County sheriff's Deputy Jimmy Hudgens, even though authorities suspect two other persons were involved.

Leon currently is out of jail after posting bail. Police also arrested Julian Guerra of 503 Blevins St. Saturday after he confessed to stealing a VCR from his neighbor's home at 505 Blevins St. last weekend.

Police Sgt. Sammy Sanchez linked Guerra to the burglary by tracing a lost button at the crime scene to the remaining buttons on Guerra's jacket.

Guerra is being held in the county jail.

County not likely candidate

Should the Yucca Mountain site in Nevada prove unsuitable for a nuclear waste repository, it appears unlikely that Texas will be considered in the future, according to Phillip Niedzielski-Eichner, executive director of the Waste Deposit Impact Committee.

Eichner voiced that opinion this week while addressing the Hereford Board of Realtors' monthly meeting. "Since Congress has moved away from a technical to a political basis for the siting program, it is my opinion that the potential for Deaf Smith County again becoming a candidate site is very unlikely," said Eichner.

In a memo to members of the WDIC committee, Eichner said it was his interest "to keep unfounded rumors or expectations (that Deaf Smith County will continue to be a site) to a minimum." In talking to some of the top professionals in the radioactive field, Eichner said it was his assessment that Congress would start another nationwide search for a site if the Nevada site is unlicensable.

In addition, the WDIC director feels that the monitored retrievable storage facility (MRS) would take on greater significance as a waste repository, thereby allowing a longer term for the geologic solution to the problem.

Scientists discover second AIDS virus

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The nation's first diagnosis of AIDS from a second kind of virus does not signal a new AIDS epidemic, said a researcher who recommended against testing blood supplies for the strain.

Others, however, favored use of new tests for the virus, which medical authorities said was the first confirmed case in the Western Hemisphere.

The virus, discovered 2½ years ago in West Africa and later spread to Europe, was seen by researchers from the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey in a patient exposed to it in West Africa, the university reported Wednesday.

The state school would not disclose the patient's identity or location, and would not say when or where the diagnosis was made.

The virus is called HIV-2, for human immunodeficiency virus, type 2. That distinguishes it from the original AIDS virus, designated HIV-1.

But Dr. Myron Essex of Harvard University, a leading expert on HIV-2, said Wednesday it was "inevitable that we'd see a case here," and he does not believe it will lead to an epidemic.

"The evidence that this virus causes AIDS in the same way or degree that HIV-1 does is not very great," Essex said in a telephone interview from his hotel room in New York City, where he was attending a medical conference.

However, Luc Montagnier of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, who discovered HIV-2 and was a discoverer of the original AIDS virus, said illness caused by HIV-2 is exactly the same as the illness caused by HIV-1.

Essex said there is no cause for concern that HIV-2 could have infected the nation's blood supply, because the incidence of HIV-2 infection in this country is "so astronomically low."

As a result, there is little point in testing the blood supply for HIV-2, he said.

"The proportion of people picked up (as infected with HIV-2) would not be as high as the number of people missed with the HIV-1 test, which is 99 percent effective, he said.

But the American Foundation for AIDS Research noted that the two viruses are transmitted in the same ways, and the same prevention methods will protect people from either virus.

"There is still only one AIDS epidemic," said Dr. Mathilde Krim, founder of the New York City-based foundation.

She said discovery of HIV-2 in this country will hinder testing because the genetic makeup of the two viruses is different enough to demand different kinds of tests.

"Testing methods will, therefore, need to be adapted to detect both viruses," she said.

A test for HIV-2 has been developed and is awaiting approval by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Essex said HIV-1 tests are 50 percent to 95 percent effective in catching HIV-2, depending upon the manufacturer of the test.

"The best ones are 90 to 95 percent effective in picking up infections of HIV-2 even though they're made for HIV-1," he said.

However, he said some physicians, particularly those in West Africa and other areas where incidence of HIV-2 is high, want more effective tests.

Gayle Lloyd of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta confirmed the Newark case is the first case of HIV-2 diagnosed in the Western Hemisphere. There was an unconfirmed case in June in Sao Paulo, Brazil, said Montagnier.

Also that month, HIV-2 had been detected in 100 people in France, West Germany and Great Britain, and some of those infected had AIDS, he said.

In some countries in West Africa, researchers have found 17 percent of the population infected with HIV-2.

HIV-2, like HIV-1, is believed to be transmitted through sexual contact, blood transfusions and contaminated hypodermic needles.

Dukakis says Mexico needs attention; less time on Nicaragua

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis says the United States should spend less time worrying about Nicaragua and more time working with Mexico in its policies south of the border.

"In my administration, our relations with Mexico will be a top priority," Dukakis said after addressing about 550 supporters at a rally in El Paso Wednesday night.

The Democratic presidential candidate, who speaks three languages, got his biggest applause of the night from the largely Hispanic gathering when he said in Spanish: "Little by little, step by step, hand in hand, together — let's go win."

State Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso and head of the legislature's Hispanic Caucus, endorsed Dukakis and presented him with a pair of handmade Tony Lama boots.

In other Texas political developments, the state Republican Party chairman defended a plan that allows all six major candidates to be eligible to win national convention delegates in Texas. Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson has threatened a legal challenge of the plan.

But GOP Chairman George Strake of Houston said the decision on the March 8 primary ballot was approved by other party leaders and cleared by all presidential contenders, including Robertson.

"I feel certain they will stick to their word and agree that we did the right and fair thing," Strake said of Robertson and his aides in an interview published Wednesday by the Houston Chronicle.

NEW YORK (AP) — Two companies have achieved scientific triumphs by creating appetizing substitutes for fat, but they still must win the battle for the hearts, minds and stomachs of the American public.

NutraSweet Co. on Wednesday unveiled the fat substitute Simplesse and emphasized that it was all-natural. But company executives still faced questioning from reporters who wanted to know why it had not received approval of the Food and Drug Administration.

Simplesse does not require FDA approval because it is ordinary protein. It has not been chemically altered, only changed in size and shape to give it the feeling of fat.

But several experts said the questioning reflected a widespread skepticism in the general public — even cynicism — about the application of technology to food.

Procter & Gamble Co. has encountered the same difficulties in promoting olestra, its own fat substitute, which was announced last May. Olestra must clear the hurdle of FDA approval because it is a synthetic substance, made of ordinary sugar and fatty oils.

"People are afraid of what they don't understand and they're afraid of things that are made out in headline news as possibly being damaging," said David Williams, a principal in the New England Consulting Group of Westport, Conn.

Despite that fear, though, Americans do end up buying processed foods because of the special features they offer, such as a longer shelf life, fewer calories or better taste, Williams said.

The task of Cincinnati-based Procter & Gamble and Monsanto Co.'s Skokie, Ill.-based NutraSweet is to convince consumers that the product is safe enough to try, he said. After that, he said, the products' special attributes should make them successful. That is what has happened with NutraSweet, the most popular low-calorie artificial sweetener.

Procter & Gamble probably faces a bigger public-relations task because it cannot make the claim that olestra is all-natural, even though the ingredients that make it up are natural.

The Center for the Science in the Public Interest has asked the FDA to reject olestra, contending that P&G used "blatant manipulation of the data" in its petition and should have conducted safety studies on mice as well as rats.

Any possible controversy over olestra might rub off on Simplesse, even though the products are entirely different.

Simplesse must contend with "the normal paranoia associated with any new food product," said Theodore Semegran of Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc.

Stock in St. Louis-based Monsanto jumped $4.75 a share to $83.50 on Wednesday, while Procter & Gamble sagged 50 cents a share to $84.25 in consolidated New York Stock Exchange trading.

Products using Simplesse could reach the market within 12 to 18 months, Robert Shapiro, NutraSweet's chairman and chief executive, told Wednesday's crowded news conference.

The biggest drawback of Simplesse is that it cannot be used in frying or most kinds of baking because it congeals the same way as egg whites when heated. Heating it is harmless, but unappetizing.

Simplesse would allow calorie reductions in food servings ranging from 28 percent for yogurt to 54 percent for premium ice cream, 55 percent for cream cheese, 70 percent for refrigerated salad dressing and mayonnaise and 78 percent for butter, the company said.

Hart vows to pelt Bush with questions

By LAURA KING

Associated Press Writer
George Bush is coming under renewed questioning about his role in the Iran-Contra affair, with Democratic rival Gary Hart vowing to "hammer" him daily on the subject if the two turn out to be their respective parties' presidential nominees.

Meanwhile, a poll indicated a dramatic drop in Hart's support in New Hampshire, which holds the leadoff primary Feb. 16. And Hart was the only one of the 13 Republican and Democratic presidential candidates to miss out on a share of the nearly $4 million in federal matching funds doled out Wednesday by the Federal Election Commission.

Bush, for his part, saw Pat Robertson surpass him as the GOP's main magnet for federal matching money. The FEC now has earmarked a total of $6.5 million for the former television evangelist, compared with Bush's $6.4 million.

The vice president, campaigning in South Dakota, again was asked Wednesday whether he'd divulge the advice he gave President Reagan about the secret sale of arms to Iran.

"I've told what I can," he said. Democrat Paul Simon, in California to raise money, said Bush's claim of confidentiality in his relationship with the president doesn't wash.

"I'm sure if he goes to Ronald Reagan and says 'Will you help me tell them what I said to you?' — I'm sure the president would say, 'Fine, go ahead and do it,'" the Illinois senator said.

"The only way he can clear himself and not make this an issue in the fall is to be candid."

Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr., in Mobile, Ala., said: "I don't think the vice president has yet clarified exactly what his role was."

"He wants full credit for what he sees as the accomplishments of the Reagan presidency, and yet he wants none of the blame for the serious mistakes that have been made."

Questions about Bush's Iran-Contra role were spotlighted in a combative live interview Monday night on the "CBS Evening News." The drama of the faceoff between Bush and anchorman Dan Rather grabbed much of the immediate attention, but as the dust settled, Bush's rivals in both parties were warning that he had best prepare for a long siege.

Bush's chief Republican foe, Bob Dole, predicted the affair will haunt Bush if he is the GOP nominee.

"Democrats are not going to let this issue die," the Kansas senator said as he campaigned in North Conway, N.H.

In Iowa, Hart pledged to keep the issue alive if he and Bush face each other in the general election, saying "I will hammer George Bush daily about that."

The congressional Iran-Contra report concluded that Bush was a minor player. If that is so, Hart said, "the issue then isn't as you telling the truth. The issue is why didn't you know?"

A poll taken for WBZ-TV in Boston suggested Hart's support among New Hampshire Democrats was cut nearly in half in the last six weeks, falling from 19 percent to 10 percent.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis retained a strong lead, with the support of 35 percent of those surveyed.

The survey of 402 New Hampshire Democrats also suggested that Simon's support in New Hampshire had slipped slightly while Rep. Richard Gephardt gained.

Railey's parents still have hope

DALLAS (AP) — The parents of Peggy Railey say they haven't given up hope even though doctors say their daughter will probably never regain consciousness from a coma.

Bill and Billie Jo Nicolai say their lives now revolve around caring for their daughter. They are either at the Tyler nursing home where their daughter lies or driving the 14 miles to it. They say they eat when they can and sleep when they can.

Doctors say Mrs. Railey will probably never regain consciousness — that her body is alive, but her brain is dead.

"How do you stop hoping?" Nicolai said. "We can't. We will always hope that one day she'll come out of it. She'll just wake up."

Former Methodist minister Walker Railey has transferred guardianship of his 39-year-old wife to her parents and left his children in the care of a Dallas couple. He moved to California in November, saying he needed to escape the despair that has haunted him since the near-fatal choking attack on his wife at their home last April.

Despite doctors' explanations that Peggy Railey's brain is dead, her family said that her eyes sometimes follow their movements through the room.

"Peggy wouldn't want to be living like this. I know it," her grandmother, 87-year-old Ella Renfro, said in an interview with Dallas Times Herald columnist Laura Miller last week. "I'm old enough to know that there are things worse than death, and this is one of them."

But there is no decision to be made about life support, because Mrs. Railey is not hooked up to any machines.

She wears a permanent plastic mouth guard, which her mother removes every day to brush her teeth. She is physically carried by nursing home attendants into a shower three times a week, and on other days she is given a sponge bath in bed.

Occasionally a hairdresser sits next to her bed and trims her hair, and she is given physical therapy — rubbing, massaging and flexing — every day.

Her father carries her to a wheelchair every day after she is disconnected from her feeding tube and straps her into a wheelchair, careful not to dislodge the tracheotomy tube in her throat.

When her eyes close and her body sleeps at night, her mother puts heavy elastic stockings on her legs to help her circulation. And then she gathers the soiled hospital gowns she bought her daughter after the assault, takes them home and hand washes them.

Until last April, the Railey family's life had seemed ideal. Railey had been senior minister of the First United Methodist Church in Dallas for seven years. Then, he told police April 22 that he returned home to find his injured wife in the garage of their home. He later attempted suicide and refused to talk further with authorities. He admitted himself for treatment to a psychiatric hospital and was later released.

Railey, who was placed on leave of absence from his pastorate, gave up his ministerial credentials and sold his Dallas home before moving away.

Family members said there are no pictures in Mrs. Railey's hospital room of her husband of 17 years, who they say never visits and never calls.

scrubbing a June 2 launch because of the failure of a nozzle part during a test firing of a solid fuel booster rocket like the one that caused the Challenger explosion.

Officials at the time estimated a six-to-10-week delay.

"Our morale here is high and everything is pulling together," said shuttle operations director Charles Gay. "That morale should hold up because these people live to process and launch space vehicles and the end is in sight."

Under the new schedule, Discovery will roll to the launch pad on May 15. A 20-second firing of its three main liquid-fueled engines is set for June 13, with the spacecraft booted to the pad. That will test the engines as a unit for the first time and provide valuable countdown practice for the launch team.

Tree, shrub species topic of club meeting

Jaime Neeper of the local Soil Conservation Office presented the program when members of the Bud To Blossom Garden Club met recently in the home of Kathleen Brockman. Her topic of discussion was on tree and shrub species for windbreak and conservation plantings.

Neeper, a 1982 graduate of the Tucson University of Arizona, told the group that the Hereford office is the third busiest in the state due to the CRP program. The office orders several thousand trees each year to be used as windbreaks. She showed slides of various plantings that had been done in this area and other parts of the state.

Mildred Fuhrmann gave the conservation series to the women entitled "Roots."

Members were reminded of the State Garden Club Convention to be held April 21 in Houston. Also, get-well cards were sent to members, Jane White and Naoma Hare.

Members planned a seminar concerning instructions for the planting and care of plants to be presented for the clients at the Hereford Satellite Work Training Center. The group also had an auction sale to raise funds for the club.

The remainder of the meeting was spent planning the district meeting to be held March 14-15 in Hereford. Clora Brown was welcomed as a guest by those present. They included Wilma Bryan, Phyllis Brown, Brockman, Fuhrmann, Patricia Robinson and Winnie Wiseman.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I am weary of reading letters in your column about how family members neglect their kin who are in nursing homes. Lord knows there is enough guilt to go around without piling on more.

My 89-year-old mother is in a very good facility for the elderly. Every time I see her she complains that her sister and brother do not write or call. I don't want to tell her that they both have been dead for 30 years. So, I listen and say, "Well, maybe you'll hear something tomorrow."

Whenever I walk into mother's room she asks, "Why haven't you been here in such a long time?" I don't want to tell her that I was there yesterday - in fact I have rarely missed a day in eight months.

Some days she doesn't know who I am and asks, "Why doesn't my daughter come to see me?" When I tell her that I am her daughter she says, "No, your hair is gray. My daughter's hair is dark brown." She then takes out pictures of me when I was a bride, 40 years ago, and says, "See?"

I can understand why relatives are reluctant to visit the elderly more often than is absolutely necessary. It is draining to be around a person who is argumentative, negative and often irrational. And it's also depressing to see my dear mother, who was a wonderful parent and friend, in such a confused state. I cry every time I leave her.

So please, Ann, give us a break.—Sad in Decatur

DEAR SAD: As usual, there are two sides to every story. Thank you for letting us hear yours. It's not new to me, incidentally. I have heard it a lot and my heart goes out to all of you.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Recently my father and younger sister went to a national park for the day. While there, my sister found a child's purse. There was identification in it, so she wrote to the girl to let her know that she had found the purse and that she would send it to her.

Today my sister received a letter from the girl's mother saying that she is glad my sister "admitted that she has the purse." The woman added, "You can keep a dollar but please return everything else."

Fortunately, my sister, who is only 8 years old, was not aware of the hostile attitude and accusatory tone that the woman displayed in that letter. But I was quite upset by it.

After all, my little sister did not have to write to the girl in the first place. She could have kept the purse and forgotten all about it. But we were not raised to be dishonest and she is the kind of person who would do the right thing.

How sad, I thought. What could have been the start of a lovely long-distance friendship turned out to be a sad disappointment.

I hope the mother who wrote that letter sees this one in your column and realizes the damage she could have caused had my sister understood the ungenerosity of her words. Sigm me—Jacksonville, Fla.

DEAR JACKSONVILLE: If the woman reads my column she can't help but see herself today.

How empty are the lives of those who are suspicious and untrusting and see the worst in everyone. They miss out on all the fun in life.

Planning a wedding? What's right? What's wrong? "The Ann Landers' Guide for Brides" will relieve your anxiety. To receive a copy, send $2.50 plus a No. 10, self-addressed, stamped envelope (39 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11562, Chicago, Ill. 60611-0662.

BIG COMPUTER IS WATCHING YOU

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — As many as 6 million office workers are having all or part of their work days scrutinized by computers, according to Discover magazine.

It says computers are being used to tally the number of keystrokes needed to enter data on a terminal, the number of checks being processed by the bookkeeping department, and even the number of packages passing through the mailroom.

The magazine says problems could result from electronic surveillance.

Now You're Cooking

By GAYE B. REILY
Staff Writer

Marcie Ginn of 117 Kingwood doesn't let physical limitations keep her from being an active part of Hereford, nor does she refrain from one of her great loves—cooking.

"I love to collect and try new recipes. I'm a country girl at heart, so I enjoy plain country cooking. Making desserts, casseroles, and Mexican food is my specialty," said the energetic, lively Ginn, who has lived here for the past five years after residing in Plainview for 18 years.

A former president of Hereford's Newcomers Club, Ginn is now active in Wyche Extension Club and was a member of Bud to Blossom Club. She works part time at the Barn House and is a Mary Kay Cosmetics consultant.

An Oklahoma native, Ginn has always found time and energy for entertaining friends and relatives despite disabling back pain resulting from deteriorating discs and a muscle disease. "I like to decorate for fancy or fun dinners by using different sets of dishes, napkins, and napkin rings. I can cook for two people but if I'm going to the trouble I'd just as soon cook for a group."

Ginn and her husband, Marion, who is employed by Whiteface Aviation, are the parents of Cindy Senter and Lisa Ginn, both of Canyon, and Brad Ginn of Dallas, and have two granddaughters, Robyn and Amy Senter.

The Ginn's years in Hereford have been tough as she has had back surgery, worn a body cast, used a walker or crutches, and had open heart surgery. "I can now empathize with older people who have trouble getting around—it's hard to cope with such a loss of mobility," she said.

In the midst of her medical troubles, urged by doctors to reduce stress, Ginn witnessed one of the worst air disasters in history on Aug. 2, 1985. "My Delta flight from Austin landed ahead of the Delta flight that crashed at DFW airport. As I was exiting my plane, someone screamed and I turned around in time to see the Delta jet appear to hover in the air motionless as lightning seemed to strike it. Then the plane crashed and bodies were everywhere."

Such a sight was indeed stressful to Ginn, who knew she had to board another plane shortly so her husband could pick her up at Amarillo Airport. "Torrential rain began to fall and we could hear updated news on the disaster over radios in the airport. Boarding the next plane was hard but it was really tough on the flight crew, who seemed to be in shock."

"As our flight took off, we could see yellow coverings over bodies everywhere," Ginn remembered. "I don't like flying but I still appreciate the convenience of it."

During this time of physical debility, Ginn read a great deal. "Marion was a big help to me. Since he has had kidney stones and back problems, he knew what I was going through so he helped with the housework. I still kept up with the cooking."

Perhaps the worst result of her back problems was the inability to participate in sports. "I played basketball and volleyball in high school and didn't really care about cooking. I have continued playing volleyball throughout the years; I miss it but I do exercise and now feel great and concentrate more on cooking."

When she is not trying a new recipe, Ginn dabbles with various hobbies. She sews, makes ceramics, embroiders, and does tile painting, to name a few of her endeavors.

"I'm never bored—I hate to sit still and do nothing. As the oldest of six kids, I was brought up to stay busy!"

Wellknown as a good cook, some of Ginn's favorite tried-and-true recipes follow:

Skin cream reverses aging

CHICAGO (AP) — After many "hoaxes and false starts" in claims about skin creams to reverse the ravages of time, one has finally proved effective in undoing early aging from too much sun, researchers say.

The cream, sold for years as a prescription anti-acne drug called Retin-A, smoothed wrinkles, erased spots and gave skin a rosy glow in 30 subjects with sun-damaged skin who used it daily for four months, researchers said Thursday.

The treatment even reversed some pre-cancerous changes in skin cells, said one of the researchers, Dr. John J. Voorhees, chairman of dermatology at the University of Michigan Medical Center at Ann Arbor.

The benefits were accompanied by an unhappy side effect, however: Occasional severe patches of redness and peeling in treated skin that lasted up to three months, the researchers said.

And there was no indication whether benefits are permanent, with or without continued use of the cream, said an editorial accompanying the findings in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

Nonetheless, the study is "extraordinarily important," said the author of the editorial, Dr. Barbara A. Gilchrist, chairman of dermatology at Boston University School of Medicine.

"For the first time, there is good sound scientific work demonstrating the reversibility of the aging process in skin," she said in a telephone interview. "There have been so many hoaxes and false starts in the business of anti-aging preparations."

She added the study will "arouse enormous interest on the part of people who would like to have fewer wrinkles" and will be "an incredible economic event for the pharmaceutical and cosmetic industries."

The study was partially funded by the drug company that makes Retin-A, Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp. of Raritan, N.J. But Ms. Gilchrist said she knows the researchers to be credible and the quality of their work was excellent.

Ortho is a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson of New Brunswick, N.J., whose stock jumped $3 after the news Thursday, closing at $74.75 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Both Ms. Gilchrist and Voorhees emphasized that Retin-A, known generically as tretinoin, will never replace staying out of the sun and using sun blocks to protect the skin from harmful rays.

"I'm quite sure the sun can destroy your skin faster than tretinoin can fix it," said Ms. Gilchrist, also senior scientist at the USDA Human Nutrition Research Center on Aging at Tufts University in Boston.

She added that skin changes produced by Retin-A, though significant, are often undramatic. "This is not going to make your friends think you've suddenly found the fountain of youth," she said.

The cost of Retin-A for daily application for acne treatment is about $8 a month.

Voorhees said his team's research must be confirmed by others before Retin-A can be established as a treatment to reverse sun-caused aging.

The cream may also have use in reversing effects of normal skin aging, the researchers said.

Study subjects, ages 35 to 70, rubbed Retin-A on one forearm and a cream containing no medication on the other. Half of the subjects also tested the drug on their faces. None knew which cream contained the drug.

All 30 patients showed statistically significant improvement in sun-related skin damage on the tretinoin-treated forearms, compared with the forearms treated with the drug-free cream, the researchers found.

"There were dark spots, called liver spots, which either disappeared or were lightened by Retin-A," Voorhees said in a telephone interview Thursday from New York. "Fine wrinkles and coarse wrinkles were improved. The sallow skin of older people became rosy, developed a pink color."

Improvement also was seen in 14 of the 15 patients who used tretinoin on their faces, the researchers said, adding that there was no facial improvement in those who used the drug-free cream.

WOMEN ON THE MOVE

WILTON, Conn. (AP) — Women, half of whom are married, now account for 10 percent of corporate transfers.

Homequity Inc., which has handled the moves of some 32,000 corporate transferees a year, says more and more women are involved in corporate career moves. This has led to the growing practice of a male giving up his job to follow his wife.

Human resources executives need to be aware of this factor in planning employee relocation, says the firm.

FINE DOMESTIC WHITE WINES

For the wine enthusiast who wishes to find a traditional white wine of fine European quality at a domestic price, there is Chardonnay. This California varietal, sometimes labelled Pinot Chardonnay, is made of the European grape that is considered to be the finest in the world. It is the same green-skinned grape that makes up the finest French white burgandies. These include Meursault, Puligny-Montrachet, and Chablis. The California cousins of these great wines also have magnificent character and flavor. They are, in fact, the most successful domestic white wines. Those that are aged in oak display increased complexity. These wines are always dry and benefit from the aging process more than any other domestic white wine.

AT THE STORE you will find a terrific selection of domestic and imported wines to complement just about every meal. If your plans for St. Valentine's Day include a romantic dinner for two, take some time and talk with our knowledge staff about wines. We're here at 400 N. 25 Mile. Call 364-7802. Open: Mon.-Sat. 10-9, use our drive up door until midnight for beer and wine, on Sun. only beer and wine is available from 12-12.

A California Chardonnay is more similar to a French Chablis than is a California Chablis, a misnomer.

Randall joins district; Canyon to class 3A

Hereford remains in District 1-4A

By GARY CHRISTENSEN
Sports Editor

There were no surprises in the class 4A realignments announced by the UIL on Wednesday, as far as the Hereford schools athletic director and high school coaches are concerned.

Hereford High School will continue in District 1-4A athletics, with the only change to be the new Randall High School as a district opponent instead of Canyon High School. Canyon will become a member of District 1-3A.

"It's not a surprise, from everything we heard," Hereford athletic director and Whiteface head football Coach Don Cumpton said.

"If both the Canyon schools would have been 4A, our district probably would have been divided -- probably," he continues, emphasizing the word "probably."

"This has been a good district for us. We've developed some good rivalries, like with Estacado, Borger and Frenship. I really hate to see Canyon go down a class, but with their other school coming in, it will be all right.

"I'm happy with it. It's a good deal. I think all our athletes at the high school will look forward to it. I think it will be exciting.

"I think we were prepared for anything. We can't make any official schedules until Feb. 25," Cumpton notes.

The major change in the UIL classifications this year has to be the increase in the number of class 4A districts. Through this year, there have always been 16 class 4A districts, but the UIL took the first step toward what might eventually be 32 districts by adding six districts.

What is currently District 2-4A will be known as District 4-4A, and there will not be a District 2-4A or a District 3-4A. Several class 4A districts will receive a first-round bye in some playoffs, such as football.

Coach Cumpton figures that District 1-4A and District 4-4A in the next two football seasons will not play in bi-district playoff games, but will play first in area playoff games. Cumpton adds that this is not necessarily a fact.

District representatives for the class 4A playoffs must be determined by Nov. 12, and the state 4A championship will be played by Dec. 17.

District 4-4A will have one change from its current District 2-4A alignment. Lamesa High School will drop to District 5-3A, leaving the district with eight schools.

If District 1-4A and District 4-4A playoff teams are among those who play their first game a week later than others, then there would be district games played the same week that the other districts have their teams in playoff games.

Cumpton still plans on having a 10-game regular season football schedule, with two non-district games and eight district games.

Here are the enrollment figures used by the UIL to assign schools to classifications in this year's realignments: class 5A, 1,470 and more; class 4A, 740 to 1,469; class 3A, 300 to 739; class 2A, 145 to 299; and class 1A, 144 and fewer.

Schools with fewer than 95 students may play in six-man football districts.

Several changes were made for high schools in West Texas in the three lowest classes, but no changes were made in the two 5A districts, District 3-5A and District 4-5A.

Canyon High School replaced Boys Ranch in District 1-3A. Boys Ranch was moved to District 1-2A.

Two District 3-3A schools were moved -- Post to District 3-5A and Idalou to District 4-2A. Two teams from District 1-2A, Gruver and White Deer, will drop to District 1-1A.

District 3-2A will have Farwell up from District 5-1A, with Springlake-Earth leaving to go to District 3-1A.

Several more changes were made in class 1A district, including Bovina and Groom dropping from 1A football to six-man football.

On the bench, that is

Redskins have QB advantage on Sunday

By DAVID GINSBURG
AP Sports Writer
SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Washington Redskins have an advantage at quarterback over the Denver Broncos in this Sunday's Super Bowl.
On the bench, that is.
Redskins' backup Jay Schroeder, a Pro Bowl selection last season, has better credentials than Denver's Gary Kubiak. Yet it is likely both will get into the game only as holders on placekicks, because Doug Williams is the Redskins' starter and John Elway will direct the Broncos' attack.

Schroeder entered the season coming off a glorious year in which he threw for 4,109 yards, the 10th-highest total in NFL history. He was given a new three-year contract that, with bonuses, earns him $1 million a season.

But after he injured his shoulder in the season opener against Philadelphia, Schroeder never really showed the consistency of 1986. Finally, Williams replaced Schroeder in the midst of the regular-season finale against Minnesota and kept the job.
Sitting on the bench has not been easy for Schroeder, who possesses a fierce competitive spirit.
"It's tough to deal with because you've been out there playing," he said. "I'm just going to have to make the best of the situation and deal with it."
"The guy on the other side (Williams) went through it for a year and a half," Schroeder noted. "No one's immune to it."
Although he's now No. 2, Schroeder played an important role in helping the Redskins move to within a game of the world championship. Washington won eight of the 10 games he started.

"Jay has meant an awful lot to this team," Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs said. "He won a lot of the games that put us in the Super Bowl. It just so happens that Doug was playing at the end of the year."
This week Schroeder has been playing the role of Elway, directing the scout team against the Washington defense. To his credit, he is making the best of the situation.
"I enjoy doing that," he said. "It makes me a better player, and it's a big help for the defense."
It's not the first time Schroeder has been a backup. He had only one start in college, and languished on the bench in Washington until inheriting the starting role in November 1985 when Joe Theismann broke his leg.
The job remained his until the Philadelphia game, but he regained his starting spot after the 24-day players' strike. He lost it Nov. 15, got it back two weeks later, then hit the bench for good in the final game before the playoffs.

Williams struggled against the Vikings in the NFC title game, completing only nine of 26 passes. Schroeder said he was ready — and well prepared — to play if called upon.
"I've done that every game I haven't been playing and every game I started," he said.
Schroeder and Kubiak would prefer more extensive roles, but both find consolation in the fact that they are in the Super Bowl.
"It's kind of flattering being on a team that has a chance to be world champions," said Kubiak, who has thrown only seven passes this season.

Schroeder said he is studying the game plan for the Broncos intently, just in case he gets a chance. And he is not taking for granted his job as the holder.
"I take pride in that," he said. "The game could come down to a field goal and everybody's got to be in sync. It's about two seconds worth of work, but it might be the most important two seconds of the whole game."

Cameron Scored 13 Points

Cameron Betzen lays up two of his 13 points for St. Anthony's Green in a 35-28 win over St. Anthony's White Saturday. The action came in the St. Anthony's boys' basketball tournament. Behind Betzen is teammate Jeremy Paetzold. St. Anthony's Green placed second in the tournament. (Brand photo by Gary Christensen)

Window treatments save energy, money

Like a thief in the night, your windows may be robbing your home of valuable heat and comfort. A typical home can lose between 20 and 50 percent of its heat through windows. A single-paneled window can conduct 20 times as much heat from your home as a comparable area of well-insulated wall.

Movable insulation is one way to reduce this heat loss. Hinged or removable opaque insulating shutters can be pressed into place over your windows at night and popped out in the morning. During the day when the insulation is not being used, you receive full benefit from the window including solar heat gain. At night with the insulation in place, you will have reduced heat loss, improved comfort near windows, and privacy.

Insulating shutters should be constructed of lightweight, insulating material for easy handling. The panels can be covered with decorator fabrics to enhance the character of the window. Cork or other natural insulating materials are attractive and often can be used in their natural state.

Shutters made from foamboard insulation should be covered with a sheet metal skin as protection from the toxic fumes given off by certain types of foam in the presence of fire. The skin would also prevent panels from becoming unsightly due to deterioration of the unprotected foam.

Insulating shutters can be purchased or easily made by the do-it-yourselfer. The insulating value (R-value) of the various shutters depends on the R-value of the insulating material used and the airtightness of the shutter when in place. Commercially available shutters range from about R-4.78 to R-8.00.

Information about this and other energy-saving window treatments is available free from the Texas Energy Extension Service's Energy Hotline. Call toll-free 1-800-643-SAVE.

Hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:
When credit cards, bank cards and check-cashing cards become too numerous for a wallet to hold, try purchasing a small photograph album with clear plastic pages (sometimes called a "brag book").

Two cards will fit on each side of each page and they fit rather nicely, are easy to see and slip in and out without sticking. This eliminates a bulky wallet.

When switching to an evening bag, take along only the cards you need. If a purse is lost or stolen, it's much easier to replace one or two cards than it is all of them. — M. Einzig, Youngstown, Ohio

THREAD SPOOL
Dear Heloise: When starting a new spool of thread, I mark the slit the manufacturer made in the edge of the spool with a red pen or a pencil.

It makes it easy to find when I want to anchor the thread. Keeps my sewing box neat. — Dorothy Whitcomb, West Lebanon, N.H.

FAST-FOOD MEAL
Dear Heloise: Eating out isn't always very nutritious, especially at a fast-food restaurant. Here's a tip I use to help eat better: Substitute skim milk or fruit juice for soda or a milkshake and eat only one-half of the french fries! Every little bite counts. — B.R., Camden, Ark.

PATTERNS
Dear Heloise: When I have finished using a sewing pattern I press it with a warm iron and fold it and fit it into the envelope more neatly. I fold it to show the number of the pattern piece on top.

I can find needed pattern pieces without unfolding them when I use a pattern again. This is especially helpful when the pattern has several pieces. — Jeanette Haynie, Loves Park, Ill.

TOOTHPICK HOLDER
Dear Heloise: I have a little hint that might help at home or while camping or on picnics.

Save an empty spice jar with a plastic insert lid with holes in the top and use it for toothpicks. Just put them in the jar and then place the lid back.

When ready for a toothpick, just shake one out. They are always clean and easy to get to. — Lenora Miller, Glen Carbon, Ill.

LAUNDRY TIP
Dear Heloise: When I notice that spots have developed on clothes headed for the laundry, I tie a loose knot (in the leg or sleeve if that's where it is located) before placing in the hamper.

If a knot is not practical, a safety pin or clip clothespin does the trick. This marks the garment for special treatment, and other members of my family who occasionally do a load of wash from the hamper know to leave this item for mom. — A Reader, Billings, Mont.

Makes laundry day easier, doesn't it? I have lots more suggestions in my pamphlet, Heloise's Rules of Laundry, which you can obtain by sending $1 and a stamped, self-addressed, legal-sized envelope to Heloise/Laundry, P.O. Box 19768, Irvine, Calif. 92713. Get one and put it next to your washing machine for those other family members. — Heloise

LETTER OF COMPLAINT
Dear Heloise: Why have apparel manufacturers almost abandoned putting buckles that fasten on dresses, especially in larger sizes?

The slide buckles do not stay put and it is so annoying to find your belt dangling.

Please draw attention to this! — Eileen Breedlove, Brevard, N.C.

You have and maybe someone will listen. — Heloise

MUFFIN TINS
Dear Heloise: To grease muffin tins, I put about one-half cup oil in one of the cups and, using a teaspoon, I dip from this to fill the others.

Fast, simple and only a spoon to wash. — R.B., Beaumont, Texas

Keep tax records

When it comes taxes, the best strategy for record-keeping is to assume your tax return will be audited, says a family economics specialist.

"Although the chances of an audit are small, you should be able to show on a worksheet how you arrived at each deduction, and back it up with canceled checks and receipts," says Nancy Granovsky, a home economist with the Texas A&M University Agricultural Extension Service.

Sort paper, records and receipts into the following categories: income receipts, including Forms 1099 and W-2; bank statements; mortgage statements; all other categories that match deductions, adjustments and credits you plan to claim.

If you run out of desk space or have cartons of old financial papers in the garage, Granovsky says you may be able to throw some of them away.

"The general rule is that records should be kept as long as they're important for any federal tax law. So records supporting income or deductions should be kept at least until the period of limitations expires for the return."

The specialist notes that the period of limitations for legal action is usually 3 years from the date the return was due or filed, or two years from the date the tax was paid, whichever is later.

However, she also points out that the period of limitations does not expire until six years after the return was filed if income was under-reported by 25% or more, and action can be brought at any time for false or fraudulent returns or if no return is filed.

ASK DR. LAMB

DEAR DR. LAMB: Recently I had a SMAC blood test for 21 different things. My doctor was not clear on the results. He said my cholesterol was below 300, which was about normal for my age, 76. My HDL-cholesterol was not tested. My triglycerides were under 250, not bad he said. He advised me to stay on a low-cholesterol diet and watch eggs, cold cuts, bacon and dairy products. I'm taking Tenormin for high blood pressure.

Could you send me some specific information on foods to avoid?

DEAR DR. LAMB: I don't think people's cholesterol levels should really be a lot higher just because they are older. It is important to control these levels at all ages to decrease the risk of heart attacks. If your level is approaching 300, it is too high.

The SMAC test is one of the automated procedures in common use, and they give cholesterol readings that are higher than the standard test used by the Lipid Research Clinics (LRC). The normal values and the risk factors are based on the LRC method. A level of 295 by the SMAC method would only be about 260 with the LRC method. That is still too high.

A large number of cholesterol tests done through doctor's offices, private laboratories and hospitals use the SMAC method or the Du Pont aca method, which give values of 10 to 15 percent higher than the more accurate LRC method. The result is that many people get false high readings.

I've discussed this point in more detail, along with the risk for various levels of cholesterol in Is Your Cholesterol Level Misleading? which I'm sending you. Others who want this issue can send $1 with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to THE HEALTH LETTER, Dept 29-05, P.O. Box 19622, Irvine, CA 92713. I'm also sending you a report on diet to help you in that department.

You should have your HDL-cholesterol measured too. No evaluation of the risk from a total cholesterol level is complete without also knowing what the HDL-cholesterol level is. The higher it is, the less likely that a high cholesterol level will be dangerous. Also, even if your total cholesterol is low, if your HDL-cholesterol is low too, you may still have an increased risk.

DEAR DR. LAMB: I'm a healthy 36-year-old male and have been donating blood off and on for 10 to 15 years with no trouble. Recently I've been rejected at the blood bank for slightly elevated blood pressure — as high as 180 over 100 — and a low hematocrit of 36 or 39. Can you tell me if these are related? Is there something I can do to bring them to the normal range? Donating blood is important to me.

DEAR DR. LAMB: Your hematocrit measures the percent of your blood volume that is from the blood cells, typically about 45 percent. You may not have enough red blood cells or they may be smaller than normal. You need additional studies to define your problem. If you have been giving blood at frequent intervals, this may be caused by an iron deficiency. Each time you give blood you also give iron. You need enough iron in your diet to replace the loss. That may require an iron supplement.

If none of your blood pressure readings are over 160 over 100, I would suggest looking at such problems as being overweight, not getting enough exercise or being tense. I doubt it is related to your donating blood, except for some anxiety you may have developed about whether you will be accepted or not. You really should see your doctor to resolve your problems.

DEAR DR. LAMB: I am 65 years old and smoked for 39 years. I stopped six years ago. For the past five years I have had a cough, better one day and worse the next. I cough and spit up white phlegm. I never have fever any more, haven't in years.

I have been to five allergists. Three say I'm allergic. I say I am not. I went to an otolaryngologist last month and he shot two needles up each nostril and sprayed my nose with antibiotics. That hasn't helped as yet.

I feel like I have a cold all the time. I sneeze a lot, cough and spit — more easily in the mornings and in the evenings, not after going to bed. I get hot and then chilled in the evening and during the night. Do you have any suggestions?

DEAR DR. LAMB: You might see a lung specialist. That long history of smoking could have caused chronic bronchitis. The glands that line the air passages in the lungs can be enlarged and produce an excess of secretions. You should pay more attention to the allergists. Often cold symptoms that persist are because of an allergy. The fact that you are not bothered much at night when you lie down also suggests that. In cases of excess secretions, lying down often makes the cough worse.

There is a long list of things that can cause a chronic cough. That even includes warts in the ear. I have listed the main causes for chronic cough in Special Report 53, Cough: What to Do About It? I'm sending you a free copy. Others who want this report can send $1 with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to THE HEALTH LETTER, Dept 53, P.O. Box 19622, Irvine, CA 92713.

Heading into Sunday's Super Bowl

Redskins are enjoying underdog role

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) — While the bookmakers are playing favorites with the Denver Broncos, the Washington Redskins are enjoying the role of Super Bowl underdog. After all, it's been good to them.

NFC champions for the third time in seven years, the Redskins lost as favorites against the Raiders in 1984, Washington's last appearance in the Super Bowl. The previous year, the Redskins were underdogs to Miami and won.

"Let them be the favorites," linebacker Neal Olkewicz said. "This team thrives on being the underdog. It's part of the Joe Gibbs philosophy to have us thinking we always are the underdog. It makes us want to get out there and prove ourselves even more."

Denver is a 3½-point favorite for Sunday's game, the Broncos' second straight Super Bowl. Denver was a 9-point underdog when beaten 39-20 by the New York Giants last January.

"We're not uncomfortable in that role," Steve Watson said. "We don't pay any attention to point spreads and lines because they don't mean anything to the game. I think we're favored because we had to prove something by getting back here. I don't think we got a lot of respect last year. It was the New York Giants this and New York Giants that."

"This year, we did prove ourselves by getting back a second time. That's why we're favored, not because we're a better team than Washington."

The Broncos are having no trouble accepting the role as a favorite away from home, a rare occurrence. In Denver, where they have lost only one non-strike game in the last 17, the Broncos nearly always are favored.

"We played so much better the last six, seven games, we really just came together," Dave Studdard said. "The chemistry is better than last year, the confidence is higher."

"We may have been overshadowed by the Giants, but it didn't bother us. The less publicity, the less pressure."

"Being favored doesn't bother us. The drive to come back to the Super Bowl and win it this time is what I think they looked at. That's how they decided the line."

The Redskins figured they'd be considered an underdog, even though they are the only team to qualify for three Super Bowls in this decade.

"It doesn't matter how we rate or how they rate," Darryl Grant said. "It's how we feel about ourselves. We get told we're too old and too slow, but we wind up back in the Super Bowl."

As underdogs.
"I like it," Clint Didier said. "I think Denver deserves to be the favorite. They played in the toughest division and came out on top. They went through the playoffs scoring a lot of points, beating a really good Cleveland team."

Since both teams are relatively healthy and have performed well under playoff stress in close championship games, the spread derives from one factor — John Elway.

"He's a game-maker and a gamebreaker," said Grant, one of the Redskins' massive linemen who consistently must pressure the Denver quarterback. "He's an awesome quarterback."

So awesome that the oddsmakers place enough value on Elway that he means the difference on the betting sheets.

"Elway is scary," Olkewicz said. "He's as good as you'll find and he gets everyone's respect."

Including the oddsmakers?

"Sure."

While Elway can dominate a game with his passing, scrambling and instincts — he is the NFL's most imaginative quarterback — Washington's Doug Williams isn't quite so creative.

"If winning depends just on what I do, we probably wouldn't be here," Williams said. "This is a team, not ...

just individuals."

Williams has shown impressive resourcefulness in surviving eight pro seasons, two in the USFL. But, basically, Williams is one-dimensional on the field.

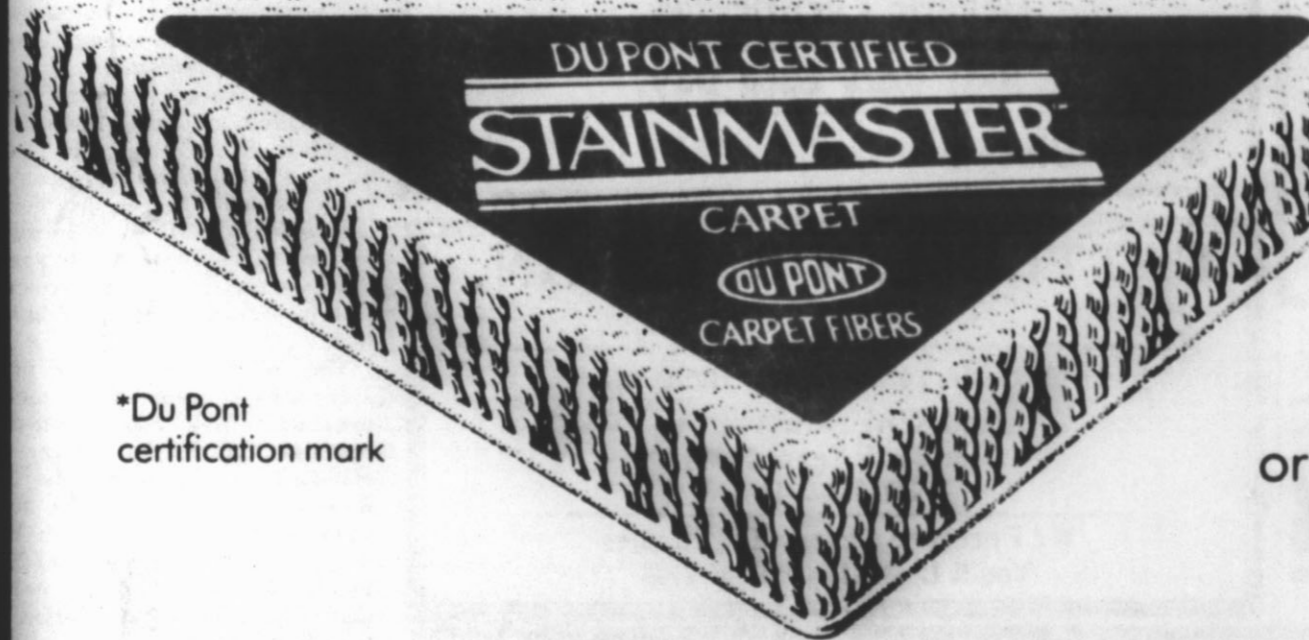

"Doug won't scramble, he won't roll out, he'll stand in there and, because he's so big, he can take it," Gibbs said. "He's a very efficient quarterback."
But he's no Elway.
