Schools start 'model' dyslexia program

By ANDREA LAMB
Staff Writer

Having completed more than six weeks of training in how to teach dyslexics to read, three Hereford teachers will graduate Sunday from the Scottish Rite Learning Center of West Texas in Lubbock.

Marlene Watson, second-grade teacher at Aikman Elementary School, Billee Landrum, who teaches first grade at Aikman, and Dolores McCustian, a third-grade teacher at Tierra Blanca Primary School, started the Alphabetic Phonics course to teach dyslexic children (children who have trouble with words) how to read.

Starting the fall of 1988, they'll be teaching other teachers the technique

The course, which the teachers attended in segments over two years, operates on the theory that dyslexic children can learn through visual, hearing and kinesthetic modes—kinesthetic meaning learning through touch.

"Some kids learn better through visual means and others learn better through auditory or kinesthetic means," said Watson. "The theory is if you use all three kinds, the child will weed out his weaker points and learn through his strong point—either audio, visual or kinesthetic."

Sending the teachers to Lubbock was a "do it now or do it later" approach since State House Bill 72 says that Texas school districts must offer some form of dyslexic instruction program by the 1988-1989 school year.

According to Marc Williamson, HISD assistant superintendent, there are several forms of dispensing the dyslexia training and Hereford has the Cadillac of those methods.

"We're the only school district in the Panhandle to have this kind," said Williamson. "We actually have teachers certified in this sort of thing whereas other schools are just planning to show tapes. In fact, we're viewed as a model school district and we already have other school districts wanting to take a look at our program."

The three teachers who volunteered for the training will be instructing other Hereford teachers on how to teach dyslexics as part of their work day.

Landrum and McCustian will be teaching half a day to two schools each and Watson will be devoting her entire time to teaching instructors at six schools.

"In teaching dyslexics, we use all 44 speech sounds of the English language and have an alphabet activity each day," said Watson. "Then we have reading practice in which we present a letter-like 'g'—and teach one sound that letter makes such as 'guh,'" explained Watson.

"As the child says it, he looks in the mirror. Then I write samples of the letter 'g' on the board. They then write 'g' on big paper so they can use their big arm muscles. That's when the kinestatics come in."

As the children learn a letter each day, the foundation grows and bigger words are introduced. "This program can help just about anyone, not just dyslexics," said Landrum. "It's all phonetical and it helps to make sense of the words."

The program works, says B.J. Lockmiller, a fourth grader at Shirley Intermediate School who is dyslexic.

"It got me on the honor roll," said Lockmiller, whom Landrum has been instructing for several months. "My reading grades were really low before and I felt really bad because I had to read next to my mother. But now I can read a lot better."

A lack of self-confidence is common among many dyslexics because their inability to read is oftentimes passed off as below-average intelligence when, in fact, the average dyslexic is above-average in intelligence.

"They're usually very creative too," said Watson, who says dyslexia's cause hasn't been discovered yet. "It's most prevalent in boys and it is usually hereditary."

Mom's desire began big effort

By ANDREA LAMB
Staff Writer

Fourth grader Chad Hutson and his mother, Terry, sat in the family car and watched a street sweeper drive by.

For Chad, it was the end of another school day riddled with frustration because the intelligent boy couldn't read or write like the other kids did.

As Chad watched the machinery slide by, he said, "Mom, don't worry about me. I'll just grow up to be a street cleaner."

Terry refused to believe this was Chad's destination because the boy was bright. Because of her desperate need to find the solution, Terry soon discovered that Chad was dyslexic—rather, having difficulty with words.

Chad certainly fit the mold—reversing the letters in words and switching numbers in equations.

"We knew Chad had a problem when he was in first grade," said Terry. "He would always do things funny like writing his name in a mirror image, but the teachers said he would grow out of it, so we left it alone for a while."

But Terry said she knew there was something more to Chad's difficulty with reading than his youth because his problem extended to second grade.

The school district stuck him in a learning disability class, but I knew he was in the wrong program because he would cry every morning before going to school and cry every day after school. We had to do something," she stated.

Two years later when Chad was in fourth grade, Terry's brother-in-law showed her an article about the Aylett Royall Cox Institute in Dallas which taught dyslexics "alphabetic phonics"—a reading method using the audio, visual and touch senses.

"I called them immediately about enrolling Chad, but she said I was only 100 miles away from an extension center in Lubbock (the Scottish Rite Learning Center)," Terry said.

The center in Lubbock tested Chad and confirmed Chad's dyslexia, so Terry set out to install a learning program targeted for students like her son in the Hereford school district.

Terry brought a representative from the learning center to speak with the local PTA, and the attendance of 120 was astounding, said Terry.

Despite having a little wrangle with the school administration, Terry finally convinced the administrators that such a program was needed in Hereford, and three teachers (Marlene Watson, Dolores McCustian and Billee Landrum) volunteered to learn the "alphabetic phonics" at the Scottish Rite Learning Center in Lubbock.

Watson has been working with Chad since she started attending the school, and the improvements in Chad's school work are noticeable, said Terry.

"His grades are higher and his attitude is much better. I think Marlene is just great," said Terry.

After two years of "alphabetic phonics," Chad (who is now a sixth grader) and fellow dyslexic Adam Perry will be graduating Sunday from the Scottish Rite Learning Center along with the three teachers, even though Chad's and Perry's diploma just denotes the student section the learning center offers.

Because his mother had enough foresight to see that her son would be more than a street cleaner, and because of some teachers who were willing to give their time to help the dyslexic, Chad will be able to read that diploma without a single glitch.

For children with dyslexia, the world is a confusing array of letters and numbers. Thanks to the efforts of a Hereford mother and some local teachers, Hereford now has a model program for public schools.

Pulse problems persist

Local bank officials believe that area Pulse cardholders will be able to fully utilize their cards early this week after problems resulting from the destruction of an Illinois Bell switching station resulted in limitations on using the debit cards.

"Due to the major problems with the Illinois Bell switching network, it has knocked out our communications lines," said Steve Gilbert of Hereford State Bank. "Anyone with a Pulse card hasn't been able to use it. We aren't able to check with the data center in Lubbock, where the information goes to Dallas and then to Chicago to get an okay or denial. Everything has just been an automatic denial."

"We appreciate the understanding of our customers because of the catastrophe in Illinois and appreciate our customers' understanding."

A Security Federal official told the Amarillo Globe-News that its Pulse cardholders have had the same problems.

EDITOR'S NOTE — From the time they are born (on an average of 10,279 a day), Americans become part of a numbers game. A bureaucracy of bean counters is watching what they do and don't do, what they like and don't like. Some of the data are useful. But does anyone really care that the most popular names for newborn Nebraskans are Katie and John?

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

Whether dieting or eating ice cream, skipping school or studying, getting married or getting divorced, Americans every day unwittingly become statistics.

It isn't done consciously, of course, but between government and private bureaucracies, the bean counters have compiled significant collections of numbers about life in America — what's typical and what isn't.

In fact, almost every American, from Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon to tiny Alice Feagin Jones of Frankfort, Ky., is part of the statistics of daily life in the United States.

Each day, America's 244,427,098 people (as of Jan. 1) work and play, love and hate and contribute to the endless collection of data about themselves.

The good and the bad, the fun and the tragic, this information eventually supplies a compilation of bits and pieces of the things Americans do to and for each other.

Folks facing the battle of the bulge may take some solace in the estimate that, on any given day, 63,092,400 adults are trying to lose weight.

Of those, the statisticians say, 51,735,768 try to do it by dieting, while 37,856,660 are exercising to trim off pounds. Many, of course, are doing both.

On the other hand, Americans consume an average of three-fourths of an ounce of ice cream every day of the year.

Doesn't sound like much, does it? Well, that comes to 18 yummy pounds of the frozen confection annually.

Americans eat even more cheese than ice cream, doling nearly a full ounce daily, or over 22 pounds per year.

The average daily American diet, the Department of Agriculture reports, also includes 3.5 ounces of beef, 2.7 ounces of pork, 0.6 ounce of fish, 3 ounces of poultry, 9.4 ounces of milk.

Add to that, 5.4 ounces of breads, a half-ounce of pasta, about the same for breakfast cereals, 2.8 ounces of sugar, plus 3.8 ounces of corn

Of 244,427,098 Americans . . .

63 million lose weight, eat an ounce of ice cream, 107,887 buy a new home, 1 million see a dentist, 8,800 turn 13, drink 15.9 ounces of soft drinks, murder 50 people, 6,082 get chicken pox, fight 1,704 house fires, 6,000 turn 65, eat 3.5 ounces of beef, drink 8.2 ounces of beer, 6,548 couples marry, 3,230 couples divorce, 10,279 are born, 5,700 die, 10,400 turn 40, eat 2.8 ounces of sugar and 3.8 ounces of corn sweetener, 51 million diet, drink a cup of coffee, and 2.7 million see a doctor sweetener, a little more than one cup of coffee; 15.9 ounces of soft drinks, 2.5 ounces of juice, 8.2 ounces of beer, 0.8 ounce of wine and 0.6 ounce of liquor.

. . . every day

Usually, when senior citizens are mentioned, popular retirement areas like Florida and Arizona come to mind, but seniors are in every state and community in growing numbers. In fact, the Census Bureau reports that nearly 6,000 Americans turn 65 every day.

And, adds the National Center for Health Statistics, on a typical day 3,212,857 elderly parents receive a phone call from one of their children.

Did you just buy a new home? You're not alone.

On an average day in America, 107,887 people move to a new home.

And that's not all.

The federal government hires 216 new workers, and 236 are hired by state governments; 37,514,400 adults get less than 7 hours sleep, 56,061 drive a car after drinking alcohol, 337 children are injured while playing with toys, 1,594 people are hurt in bicycle accidents and 108 men cut themselves seriously while shaving.

Among the younger set, on a normal day 36,582,990 children attend public school, while 2,951,836 children who should be in school, aren't.

For Oklahoma youngsters, the statistics on those playing football may change a bit under a suggestion by Gov. Bellmon. He has proposed a rule that students who fail their studies be barred from extracurricular activities such as sports.

Also in a typical day, 6,548 American couples are wed, according to federal statistics. In addition, 288 couples decide to live together without bothering to marry, and 3,230 couples are divorced.

While joy and hope for the future marks the thousands of weddings cataloged daily, tragedy was the focus of the Russellville, Ark., entry into the federal data bank.

Sixteen people were slain in December in and near that small community in one of the nation's worst mass murders. Forty-seven-year-old R. Gene Simm, as has been charged in the case, an extreme example of the more than 50 murders that occur daily in this country, according to the National Center for Health Statistics.

In a nation with more than 244 million people, crime is a continual concern, statistics compiled by the Federal Bureau of Investigation show.

No particular day is, of course, typical, nor is any individual crime. But on average, the statistics say a day in America includes 239 rapes, 1,364 robberies, 1,980 assaults, 8,419 burglaries, 18,975 thefts, and 3,021 motor vehicle thefts.

Little Alice Feagin Jones, who debuted at 8 pounds on Jan. 1, the offspring of Wesley and Alice Jones, was the first baby of 1988 in Frankfort, Ky.

Katie and John, meanwhile, probably were among the first new Nebraskans arriving. In Lincoln, Neb., the state health department took a look at the names most popular with new arrivals there in 1986. The winners: Katie for girls and John for boys.

The National Center for Health Statistics reports that 10,279 babies are born on an average day in the United States. There is, however, no longer such a thing as a typical day.

The increasing use of Caesarean delivery has resulted in more babies arriving on weekdays, and a sharp decline in births on weekends and holidays.

No word yet on how this will affect the future of astrology.

Of the more than 10,000 babies born daily, 1,994 are children of unwed mothers.

The other side of birth is death, and on a typical day more than 5,700 people die in this country.

Daily deaths, according to the National Center for Health Statistics, include 1,254 from cancer and 2,686 from heart disease, the most common killers. Also on a normal day, 123 people die in motor vehicle accidents on America's highways.

Fires join accidents among the most common threats to Americans.

A Toledo, Ohio, family of eight was left homeless on Aug. 8 when a child playing with matches started a blaze that caused extensive damage to their apartment.

The fire was one of an estimated 1,704 house fires in the nation if that was an average day, according to the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission.

Happily there were no injuries in the Toledo fire, although blazes claim 14 American lives daily, according to the Commission and the National Center for Health Statistics.

While the elderly population is growing rapidly, so are those in middle age, children of the post-World War II Baby Boom, meaning that more than 10,000 Americans turn 40 daily.

But those folks haven't been replacing themselves, resulting in smaller populations of young people. Only about 8,800 people become teenagers each day.

Despite the relatively smaller size of the young population, children's diseases continue to threaten youngsters. For example, Oklahoma Health Commissioner Dr. Joan K. Leavitt reports a dramatic increase in the number of cases of whooping cough in her state.

Oklahoma recorded 75 cases of the disease in the first half of 1987, up from 56 in the same period a year earlier. Most cases have been in small children.

Nationally, six cases of whooping cough are recorded per day, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control. Incidents of the disease have risen in recent years as some parents have delayed having their children immunized.

While not all diseases have to be reported to federal officials, the Center estimates that on an average day Americans are infected with 6,082 cases of chicken pox, 2,298 cases of gonorrhea, 192 cases of syphilis, 22 cases of AIDS, eight cases of mumps, seven cases of measles and two cases of Legionnaires' disease.

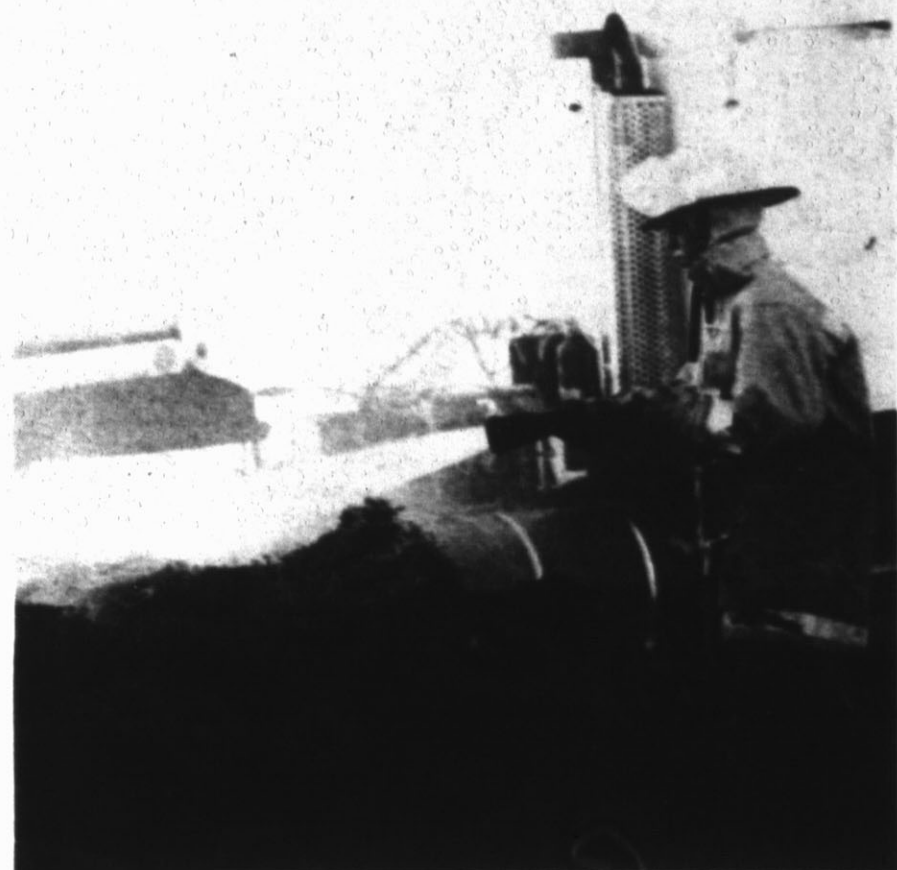

Many of those folks join the 2,753,425 people who see a doctor every day. An additional 1,041,095 people visit their dentist.

How do they get there? Most drive, leading to the estimate that more than 30,250 automobiles are sold in the United States in a normal day. And while many are replacing others that are wrecked, the total in use continues to grow.

Texas Department of Corrections. Incidents included a tire and wheel coming off a semi-truck as it passed by the Holiday Motor Hotel on U.S. 60. The large tire plowed through a chain link fence, caved in part of a brick wall, and broke the front glass door to the hotel's office. No injuries were reported. Other incidents included a man at 128 Ave. G who reported he was awakened by loud voices, went outside to investigate, and discovered that his car had been scratched and egged by two men and a woman; theft by check charges filed by the Chateau Inn against a person who wrote $104 worth of hot checks; and a domestic disturbance at the Eldorado Arms. The Hereford Fire Department responded to fires at the Texas Highway Department and a barn fire on FM 2587. Police issued eight citations and covered three minor accidents Friday.

'Master Forger' striking all over area, state

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Every forgery investigator in Texas probably knows self-proclaimed master forger James Jennings, says Dan Smith, an investigator with the police department of suburban Hurst.

"This isn't an amateur we're after. He's one of the best," Smith said.

Jennings is author of the book, "Nation's Master Forger." He ran away two years ago from the minimum-security federal prison at Big Spring and hasn't stopped running, officials say.

Local and federal authorities also say Jennings has returned to forgery on a grand scale. That's why they want to alert citizens about the "smooth-talking, blue-eyed con man," as Smith describes Jennings.

Jennings, 50, gained his reputation by swindling people from Arizona to Tennessee for almost three decades, according to police reports. His record includes five prison sentences in three states for forgery and counterfeiting since 1961.

He was serving an eight-year prison term for possessing and passing counterfeit cashier's checks when he escaped, Smith said.

"When we get him this time, he should be in for a very long time," said Jack W. Lisano, an investigator with the Harris County district attorney's office in Houston.

Among the dozens of investigators after Jennings in Texas, those most interested are Lisano, Smith and David Freriks, a Lubbock-based U.S. Secret Service agent. Lisano has trailed Jennings since his escape. Freriks and Smith have chased Jennings for about a year.

"I was just a day behind him in January in the Lubbock area," Freriks told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "But that meant 300 miles apart."

Historically, Jennings' con game is simple: He searches through classified newspaper ads looking for something valuable to buy. He sometimes dresses as an airline pilot or business executive. When he finds something, he pays with a cashier's check.

Most of his transactions have occurred after banking hours, when verification of the check cannot be made, Smith said.

His con game is predictable, but Jennings' movements follow no pattern, investigators said. He jumps from region to region, state to state, Freriks said.

In the latter part of 1986, Jennings was believed to be in Houston. But he also took his con game to Louisiana, San Antonio and Oklahoma City.

In early 1987, a man fitting Jennings' description struck with counterfeit cashier's checks in Fort Arthur, El Paso, Dallas, Odessa and San Antonio.

Now, police in Fort Worth, Amarillo, Austin, Lubbock, Beaumont, College Station, Waco, Canyon, Little Rock, St. Louis, Nashville, Albuquerque, Phoenix and Fairmont, Ga., have warrants against him, Lisano said.

But law officers believe Jennings could be slowing down because of an illness.

Earlier this year, Jennings checked into hospitals in Sweeney and Denton.

"He walked out of both without checking out," Lisano said. "He's very paranoid, so we believe he was there too long and had to get out."

On March 18 and 19, authorities believe Jennings passed counterfeit personal checks in Borger and Dimmitt, each for less than $200.

In Dimmitt, he posed as a land owner who recently had bought land near the city and needed the money for his Mexican workers.

"He's getting just traveling money. Money for food and gas for that day," Lisano said. "That's not been his style before."

Jennings' also has switched to personal checks and traveling with Linda Childress Rollins, who police want for counterfeiting.

"We're not giving up," Lisano said. "He must be getting tired of running and sooner or later we'll catch him."

DYSLEXIA

"unclear," many dyslexics have difficulty expressing their thoughts, seeing printed symbols properly, or keeping the days and months in order.

These characteristics can be found in 26 identified dyslexic children in the Hereford school system but the dyslexic courses (formerly recognized as special education) can only be offered to children in second through eighth grades.

"You really can't teach anyone younger than second grade," said Landrum. "I started teaching it to about 15 first graders, but they ended up not learning very much because there's too much philosophy involved and first graders really need to have developed their minds more."

Billingsley recognized by PTA

The final meeting of the school year for Northwest School PTA was held Thursday night as special presentations, election of officers, and a program by third graders was held.

Gary Billingsley, principal of the school, was recognized by PTA President Sherri Huckins for his "contributions to improving the quality of life of children and youth." Billingsley was awarded a life membership in PTA, which is the highest honor a PTA can bestow on an individual and he received a plaque and pin. The award honors those who have "given outstanding service demonstrating that they care about youth," according to the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

President Huckins opened the program via a welcome speech, then proceeded to list the organization's accomplishments for the past year. While expressing appreciation toward parents, teachers, and staff at Northwest School, Huckins also recognized David Fanning, assistant principal, who noted his appreciation PTA support.

Officers for 1988-89 were elected, then installed by PTA member Camille Williamson. They include: Huckins, re-elected president; Vivian Andrews, first vice-president; Lupe Balderaz, assistant vice-president of membership; Janice Carr, secretary; Olivia Denning, treasurer; Ginger Dearing, co-treasurer; Cara Dearing, historian; Donna Tice, room mother chairman; Rosemary Davila, hospitality chairman; and Maria Garcia, teacher advisor.

A variety of Walt Disney songs, centering on "It's a Small World", was presented by third graders to conclude the meeting. Music teacher Tammy Yenzler accompanied the youngsters.

YOUR EYES

TEENS & CONTACT LENSES

If your teenager refuses to wear glasses and walks around squinting, why not ask if he or she would like to have contact lenses as a gift? Many of his or her friends probably already use them. Teens make excellent contact lens patients because they are generally highly motivated and dislike wearing glasses, especially if they have heavy, thick lenses.

It is true that contact lenses require special care. Your teenager must learn to clean and disinfect them regularly. He or she must learn how to put them in and take them out, and what to do in an emergency. But teens are quick learners. And if, like other youngsters, he or she is concerned about appearance, odds are that he or she will be wearing the "contacts" and seeing clearly soon after they are prescribed by a professional optometrist.

The executive editor of a large daily newspaper recently explained to his readers how that newspaper determined what goes on the front page of each day's edition. He pointed out that a group of editors—four or five—meet each afternoon for an "editorial conference" or a "news budget" session.

The final decision is made after the editors evaluate the news events and agree on what should be on Page 1. The choice between two events is generally based on which will be of the most interest to the most readers. Reader surveys also show that Page 1 is the best-read page in a large daily.

Well, folks, the criteria for a front-page story is about the same in Hereford, but the other factors are a little different from time to time. Facing a noon deadline each day, Tuesday through Saturday, our committee of one (the news editor) decides about 9 a.m. each morning what to put on Page 1. Sometimes the publisher makes a suggestion if he's not too busy explaining to someone why their story was not on Page 1 the day previous.

The "layout" of a page is somewhat like working a jigsaw puzzle, changing the pieces until they all fit—hopefully with some semblance of balance—within the allotted space. The length or size of the article also makes a difference to the layout of the page, as well as the choice of photographs. On any given day, the reader may see a story on the front page while another—maybe just as important—is on page two.

The number of major events for any given day also influences the Page 1 choices. A certain type of story may be on the front page on a slow day that would have wound up on page six if it was a busier "news" day. Statistics show that the big-city newspaper has to be more concerned about the front-page package. Surveys for smaller, community papers have shown that each page is read almost equally.

Whether it's one editor or five making the front-page choices, all readers will not agree. We just hope that we guess right for most of the readers, most of the time!

Re-election rate

If Congress is doing such a poor job, a caller asked the other day, why do its members keep getting re-elected?

That was a good question. Re-election rates for House incumbents have not dropped below 90 percent since 1974. Senate officeholders have held their own rates at 93, 90 and 75 percent in the three elections since 1980.

Part of the reason for longevity is election financing, especially in the area of political action committee money. On the average, incumbent congressmen receive 10 times as much PAC funding as their challengers. In 1987, PACs gave $11 million more to incumbent senators than to their challengers. PACs contributed more than $24 million to House incumbents, but less than $300,000 to their opponents.

Incumbent congressmen also enjoy free postal services. In 1986, Congress issued more than 12,000 pieces of mail for every incoming letter. That year, Congress appropriated $97 million in postage to cover 759 million items, a 17-fold increase in volume since 1954. Challengers have to pay out of campaign funds for everything they send to potential voters.

Another advantage is a growing, full-time staff. Congressional staffs tripled from 1957 to 1987.

The trends in congressional activity do not justify increases in staff. Between the session of 1975-76 and 1985-86, House in-session days went down 10 percent; committee meetings fell 39 percent; bills introduced decreased 59 percent; and recorded votes dropped 30 percent. Senate figures also show considerable decreases in these categories, while the total number of bills passed by both chambers is about the same.

Thus, members of Congress have purchased re-election insurance for themselves—and they pay the premiums with the taxpayers' money.

Letters to the Editor

Dear editor:

A short time ago, I urged all ex-students to learn more about the WT saga by calling a teacher whom you have known and respected to ask him or her about the situation at your school. Better hurry, I warned, because many are leaving rather quickly.

Citing a need for community awareness, your organization, using your "Ex-Students' Association" name in bold print, has taken it upon itself to pursue some policies which I feel are quite inconsistent with the thoughts many of you have expressed to me.

So, Exes, I call upon you. If you do not feel that your organization is expressing your views, let it be known. Speak up. Make some phone calls. Write some letters. Give your opinions to policymakers. If you do not speak up at this time, you are about to get the type of school you deserve.

Dear editor:

On Thursday, May 5, at the Whiteface Stadium, about 400 kids representing Bluebonnet, Nazarene Christian Academy, Shirley, St. Anthony's, Walcott, and West Central schools were involved in a track competition sponsored by the Noon Kiwanis Club. The exceptional organization and planning of this event was in evidence that day.

I realize it takes a lot of manpower, patience, and fortitude to pull something like this off, and I want the Kiwanians to know that our participating students certainly appreciate their efforts in this annual event.

Thanks to Mike Veazey, 1988 chairman, Harley Daniel, president of the Noon Kiwanis Club, all the Kiwanians who helped with the track meet, the Physical Education teachers from each school who have the unenviable task of selecting a team, and to the school administrators who allowed their students to participate.

There were no losers out there last Thursday, just 400 winners, and a bunch of Kiwanians who can be proud that they sponsor such a youth activity.

Sincerely,
George H. Ochs,
Principal
West Central School

THE COUNSELOR

I just heard that Ray Cowser is ill. It scares me when one of our real characters has health problems. They are not replaceable. Fortunately they are unforgettable so, no matter what happens, they stay with us. I know some of the characters who lived here 40 years ago. Their stories live on and they live on in the stories.

I have often said this town produces more genuine characters than anyplace I know. Ray Cowser is one of the more delightful characters our town has produced. He is a throwback of sorts (I can just hear him having fun with that phrase). He is a self-taught lawyer. They don't allow that anymore. Now it takes a degree and a license. The degrees and the licensing don't seem to produce many Ray Cowserts. Maybe we should look at the process again.

Ray not only taught himself to be a lawyer, he became one of the best-read men I know. He is especially sharp in Texas history and the history of the American Indian. An afternoon visiting with Ray makes history come alive.

Ray even has a hat named after him. I do not know when or why he began to wear his almost western hats, but all of the stores call this particular model their Ray Cowser model. Of course they laugh when they say it. Somehow it is hard to say Ray's name and not laugh. The man is just a funny man. He has a droll sense of humor, his eyes twinkle, his rather bulbous nose twitches, and he giggles. I do not know very many men who giggle.

My gosh, this is sounding like an eulogy. The best thing I know about Ray Cowser is his ability to get to Clint Formby like no one else. As long as I live I will relish the memory of the day Ray, Clint and some more cronies were eating at the Thompson House Restaurant when it was on the edge of town.

The group was giving Ray fits as usual. They had gone to the restaurant in Ray's car and it must have been his time to buy, or maybe the decision to buy was done with a little game of chance which Ray had lost. Anyhow when Ray had had enough of their stuff he got up to go pay the bill. He paid, walked out of the place, got in his car and went to Amarillo.

The group found out they had been left about the time Ray got to Dawn. That, my friends, is a classic from a real character. Get well Ray.

Public Service Week

This week is National Public Service Recognition Week, and in honor of it, the nation is being asked to recognize the many achievements of public employees.

Fair enough. We all tend to criticize "the government" and "bureaucrats" more than we praise them, but the truth is that many fine men and women work for public agencies and they have done much to make this world better.

For example: "Teflon" and the thin plastic wrap which keeps food fresh were discovered at the Naval Research Laboratories. NASA scientists discovered the first "black hole" in the universe, and government scientists also developed sonar and radar. A Census Bureau employee invented the first modern computer, and an Agriculture Department scientist developed wash-and-wear fabrics. The National Institute of Health began in 1887 with a $300 appropriation, and it has sponsored more than 90 Nobel Prize winners.

The list goes on and on, so let's give credit where credit is due: Thanks, public employees, and keep up the good work.

Tax Freedom Getting Later

"Bracket creep," an unlamented feature of the old federal income tax code, has given way to what could be called calendar creep. That is because Tax Freedom Day, an unofficial observance sponsored by the Tax Foundation, falls this year on May 5—the latest date ever.

According to the foundation, a non-profit Washington research organization, it will have taken the average taxpayer until (May 5) to earn the money to meet his total tax obligation for 1988, assuming all earnings since Jan. 1 went toward federal, state and local government taxes. The purpose of the observance is to demonstrate the government's impact on the economy in a readily comprehensible way....

Asbestos Rule Is Unrealistic

If the federal government can extend the deadline for cities to meet clean-air standards, it also should be able to extend deadlines for school districts to inspect their facilities for asbestos.

Many local school districts despair over meeting an Oct. 12 date by which they are supposed to identify buildings with crumbling asbestos and submit a maintenance or cleanup plan. They face fines of $5,000 a day if they fail.

There simply may not be enough qualified people around to conduct the inspections in time, let alone begin whatever cleanup may be needed. Then, there is the financial wallop to consider: up to $200,000 just for an inspection and maintenance plan.

One critic says EPA's rules could "drive schools toward unnecessary removal of asbestos-containing materials, increase exposure to building occupants and spark a future wave of asbestos-related disease among abatement workers, whom everyone acknowledges are most at risk."

The critic could be right. Congress should require that the rules be revised.

Bootleg Philosopher

Editor's note: The Bootleg Philosopher on his Johnson grass farm on Tierra Blanca Creek examines speech-writers this week.

Dear editor:

A while back there was a great stir when an ex-White House press secretary reported in a book that he'd made up quotes and said the President had said them, when the President didn't know it. Not only did he not know it, he didn't know "his" quotes had been printed in the newspapers.

I can understand that. He may have missed that day's paper. You know how some paper boys are, they'll sometimes throw your paper into the rose bushes instead of at the front door.

Anyway, columnists jumped on the guy for pulling such a stunt, saying it was grossly unethical. They ought to know. Some of them used to write speeches for Presidents.

Perhaps it was unethical, but it's hard to get exercised over the fact that, as everybody knows, Presidents don't write their own speeches. Some Presidents don't know what they think about some things until somebody writes it down for them.

Lincoln probably was the last President to write his own speeches, although one or two since who went down in defeat for a second term may have tried their hand at it.

Not only do Presidents hire speech writers. Senators, Congressmen, cabinet officers, Governors and perhaps a state legislator here and there do it. Maybe even justices of the peace and an occasional school superintendent.

I don't know who the Democratic and Republican candidates, back at the start of the Presidential nomination campaigns, hired as their speech writers, but as the campaigns droned on it made you feel that somebody else had already hired the good ones.

Yours faithfully,
J.A.

A Rising Tide

This year's annual report of the Council of Economic Advisers published a few weeks ago didn't get as much attention in the media as it deserved. The reason, perhaps, is that it was so full of good news.

The U.S. economy continues to roll in the longest peacetime expansion, now in its sixth year. Since 1983, 13 million new jobs have been created, five times as many as Japan came up with and nearly 100 times as many as West Germany, the economic powerhouse of Europe.

Welfare Reform

In his State of the Union address, President Reagan challenged states to come up with innovative ways to wean people from welfare and get them into the workforce. Gov. Bill Clements indicated this week that Texas will answer the challenge.

Clements announced a 10-member task force to study welfare reform. It is indeed a vital topic.

Part of the task force's work will be to oversee pilot projects in San Antonio, Houston and Beaumont in which welfare recipients will be provided day care and transportation as they seek employment or undergo job training.

Another goal will be to identify the underlying needs of welfare recipients. Some just need a break to get back on their feet. Some need retraining. Some are illiterate. Each segment needs to be handled differently. Without reading skills or proper training, some people will be a burden of the state for their lifetimes.

Welfare reform is one area where ideological lines melt away.... It is good to see the governor drawing a focus on this important issue. He is likely to find allies from unexpected sources. Welfare reform is one of the biggest challenges facing the country. Texas has enlisted its services.

We're Not Ready To Back Away

The broadened role of the United States forces in the Persian Gulf signals a further change in policy in the volatile region which sends a message to those who thought Washington was ready to back away from further confrontation with Iran.

In announcing that the U.S. Navy would now come to the rescue of so-called neutral shipping under attack in the Gulf, the Reagan Administration has warned both foe and ally that American policy of maintaining freedom of the seas is not something which can be compromised.

Our only regret and reservation about the U.S. role is that more of our allies aren't more actively involved.

Although Britain and France have moved to bolster their naval forces in the area, the whole project should have been a well-coordinated operation in which the Free World acted in concert.

For the most part, this government and that of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher have demonstrated the willingness to defend freedom wherever it may be threatened. It is far better to stop that threat far from one's shores than have it eventually rear its head on one's doorstep.

THE NEED TO WORK WITH OTHERS

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Many children think it would be "cheating" to help classmates with schoolwork. Yet, to be successful on the job, most adults need to work well with others.

So Dirk Hightower, a University of Rochester psychologist, is testing whether children who work in pairs can improve academic performance and learn social skills.

So far, teachers and fourth and fifth graders in the "Study Buddy" program seem to think the new curriculum is paying dividends.

Do You Know?

Question: Is God A Respector Of Persons?

Answer: "There is no respect of persons with God." (Romans 2:11).

"Then Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he who fears (reverential fear) him, and works righteousness is accepted with him." (Acts 10:34, 35).

Filming of scenes for movie to take place

Colonial National to have added glitz

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The Colonial National Invitational has a storied history and the reputation of being one of the best party stops on the PGA Tour.

There will be additional glitz and glamour this year because scenes from Dan Jenkins' book on golf-tour life, "Dead Solid Perfect," will be shot before, during and after the tournament.

Jenkins will be on hand to watch HBO's filming of his hilarious book, which begins at an old Fort Worth golf course called "Goat Hill."

Jenkins is a native of Fort Worth and chose the Colonial for the filming because he used to cover the tournament during his days with the Fort Worth Press and the Dallas Times Herald. Colonial is moving to a larger press room this year, and one of the reasons is the movie.

Jerre Todd, Colonial NIT public relations director, is an old buddy of Jenkins'.

"I got a small part in the movie," Todd said. "During the press room interview of one of the golfers, I have the line: 'Kenny, how many times did you hit your driver?' I've practiced it so many times I'll probably say 'Benny, how many times did you hit your 1-iron?'"

Colonial, which gets under way May 18, still rates among the top five tournaments on the PGA Tour for the professionals.

"They just take great care of you and your family," said former champion Ben Crenshaw. "They provide you a car. They take your wife shopping. And even more importantly, they provide a baby-sitting service. Do you know how hard it is to find a good baby sitter when you are on tour?"

Colonial is, like its name suggests, an "invitational."

Like a coveted invitation to The Masters, few golfers ever turn one down. Only the Masters and Colonial have resisted the temptation to turn to tournament sponsors who insist on having their names on the letterhead.

Colonial doesn't always get everyone it wants. This year, it won't have Masters' champion Sandy Lyle; he decided to go back to Europe after the Byron Nelson Classic to cash in on his victory at Augusta in April.

Former champion Jack Nicklaus, who has drastically cut his tour appearances, also won't play.

There have been some changes, none major, on the golf course. The roughs around Colonial's greens have been cut back to the way they were in the 1950s and 1960s.

"We just decided to go back to the old way. It gives the players a little bigger target to shoot at," said Roland Harper, Colonial's director of golf.

Colonial didn't oversee rye on the fairways this year, but Harper said recent rains should bring out the old course's beauty.

Canyon eliminates Dumas, 11-10, from 1-4A playoff

Canyon eliminated Dumas from the chase for District 1-4A's second place playoff by defeating the Demons 11-10 Friday at the Hereford High School baseball field in Hereford.

Dumas held a 7-0 lead after two innings of play and an 8-1 lead after 4½ innings of play, but Canyon rallied with five runs in the bottom of the fifth inning and four runs in the bottom of the sixth inning to tie the game at 10-10.

Dumas scored two runs in the top of the sixth inning on Waylon Chamblee's home run over the left field fence.

Canyon won the game in the bottom of the seventh inning on an RBI single. Jason Roach of the Eagles hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning which tied the game at 10-10.

Dumas gained a 1-0 lead in the first inning on an RBI single. In the second inning, three straight singles led to one run for Dumas, and two straight batters were hit by pitches, bringing in the next run.

Dumas eventually would score six runs in the second inning, one on a wild pitch, two on a single by Jeff Baker, and the other run on an error. With Dumas leading 8-1, Canyon scored five times in the bottom of the fifth, on two walks, a single, an RBI groundout, a ground-rule double, and a two-run double.

Chamblee's home run made it 10-6 for Dumas in the top of the sixth, but three errors by the Dumas defense opened up the pathway for the Eagles to rally and tie the game, 10-10, in the bottom of the sixth.

An RBI single, an RBI groundout, and Roach's two-run homer moved Canyon into the tie.

Canyon was scheduled to play Lubbock Estacado Saturday afternoon for the bi-district playoff berth. That game was also to be played in Hereford.

The second place team from District 1-4A will meet District 2-4A champion Andrews in the bi-district playoffs. Hereford, the 1-4A champion, will play Pecos, the 2-4A runner-up, on May 20-21 in Lubbock.

The game schedule is May 20 at 7 p.m. for game one and May 21 at 1 p.m. for game two, with game three, if necessary, to be played right after game two. Those games will be played at Chaparral Field at Lubbock Christian University.

One reason Honda lawn mowers are so popular is that most have Honda Overhead Valve engines—so they're rugged and long lasting. Plus, with sturdy cast iron cylinder sleeves, sealed shaft drive systems and electronic ignitions, they'll take on extra yardage season after season.
Since they're Honda Overhead Valve four-stroke engines, they run up to 30% more fuel-efficient than comparable side valve engines.

This year Oakland seems to have the good luck

Why do Rangers have so much bad luck?

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — How do you explain all the bad things that seem to happen to the Texas Rangers, the American League team the baseball gods seem to hate?

Their namesakes never had luck so bad 100 years ago — and they had to fight Indians, outlaws, flash floods, dust storms and rattlers. Being an old Texas Ranger in the wild West was a picnic compared to the bad luck that keeps turning up at Arlington Stadium.

The team that has never won a pennant apparently isn't going to break that long-standing tradition in 1988.

That streak of ice crystals in the stratosphere you see is the Oakland A's, who have blended a combination of speed, power, defense and pitching into a club record game-winning streak.

Even Rangers general manager Tom Grieve admitted the other day that "Oakland will be very difficult to catch. Even though it's May, you can see it will be very tough."

The Rangers, who were last in the AL West in 1987, had high hopes in '88 based on the ability to score a lot of runs. Last season's Rangers had ample firepower, setting a club record in homers.

So what happened this year was that the Rangers' hitters cratered coming out of spring training. And not even adequate pitching, which the Rangers were getting, can make up the difference. A power outage in April put Texas in a deep, almost unrecoverable deficit.

"We weren't worried about the hitting, and that turned out to be the reason for our slow start," said

Grieve. "We'll still hit. But I hope it isn't too late."

The Rangers had an awful April in 1987, losing 10 of 11 games in one stretch. This April, they fell nine games behind the league-leading A's because the hitters looked like they had found termites in their bats.

At one point, the Rangers' run production was under that of the Baltimore Orioles, who lost 21 consecutive games.

The Rangers' hitters finally broke out against the New York Yankees as they swept a weekend series, but the damage may have already been done.

Texas appears at least another year away from a title. The Rangers admirably are trying to develop their own talent, and it appears owner Eddie Chiles isn't ready to jump into the free-agent market where the big bucks bounce around like they are on a Monopoly board.

The morale of the team got a big boost when manager Bobby Valentine's contract was extended through 1991. What Chiles was saying to the club was that the ownership is committed to the youth movement.

"I don't blame Bobby for the slow start because he doesn't have all the talent in the world," Chiles admitted. "We compete on limited resources in this franchise. We can't spend the big bucks and buy the high-priced players like some other teams can."

The Rangers have the lowest payroll in the major leagues.

"Bobby doesn't quite have the gunpowder some teams do," Chiles added.

Grieve said Valentine's contract extension means the Rangers are "making a commitment to the long run. We have confidence in what he is trying to do. It also puts any rumors to rest."

So what do the Rangers need to shakeoff 16 seasons of sadsack baseball?

— They need to become more fundamentally sound on the basepaths.

— They need a catcher who can throw out baserunners.

— They need at least one more power hitter (remember Jack Clark was a free agent and the Yankees got him).

— They need another dependable starter.

That shopping list would carry at least a $2 million tag or more on the free-agent market.

For now, Rangers' fans must be content with watching the youngsters from the farm team grow into their big league jobs. They showed in the series against the Yankees they can have their moments.

But a pennant probably isn't in the cards for them until the early 1990s.

Can Valentine last that long?

The other day he pondered the question and quipped, "I hope I still have some hair left."

Oldsters keep at it in Indy 500

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Johnny Rutherford says he has it all figured out.

"Old age and treachery will beat youth and inexperience every time," says the 50-year-old Texan who hopes to become only the third four-time winner of the Indianapolis 500 this year.

Rutherford, of Fort Worth, admits it's an old line. But he insists there is some truth in it.

In most other sports, athletes who are still playing at 40 are compared to archeological artifacts — valuable but rare.

Occasionally there will be a Tommy John or Phil Niekro in baseball, a George Blanda in football or a Kareem Abdul-Jabbar in basketball. But they are special cases.

This month at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, besides Rutherford, there are no less than half a dozen relics of another age in auto racing hoping to make the lineup for the May 29 running of the Indy 500.

And they are still a competitive group.

Four-time Indy winners A.J. Foyt of Houston and defending champion Al Unser are 53 and 49, respectively, while two-time winner Gordon Johncock is 51, and 1989 winner Mario Andretti is 48. Dick Simon, whose sixth-place finish here last year was his best in 16 Indy starts, is the oldest at 54. George Snider, Foyt's longtime friend and Indy teammate, is 47 and trying to make his 23rd Indy start.

When this grizzled group began racing, there were few old Indy-car drivers.

Until the early 1970s, when a nearly fail-safe fuel cell was introduced to the Indy-car set, almost every crash resulted in fire and injuries, often fatal.

Beyond that, until the last 15 years, the race cars themselves did little to protect the driver.

"There weren't any old guys around years ago because they either were killed, broke up or retired early so they weren't killed or broke up," Foyt said. "You never heard of nobody 50 years old driving a race car back then."

The last generation of cars bore little resemblance to the aerodynamic machines made of space-age materials that now keep the drivers relatively safe in a tub, the pod-like central core of the cars.

And now that drivers set up retirement plans and talk about the distant future, some tend to stick around a lot longer than veterans in other sports.

"I can't talk for other people, but I still enjoy getting into the race car and competing," said Andretti. "And I think perhaps experience works for you."

"If a person is physically fit and keeps a certain edge, there's no reason he can't keep on driving. After all, we're not all total wrecks in our late 40s.

"The guys who do retire earlier usually just get their belly full of it and get out. It's really an individual situation."

Johncock, who came out of a two-year retirement last May to drive at Indy, said, "I'd be watching a race on TV and say to myself, 'I can still be out there doing it. Why am I here?'"

"It's not the money or anything like that," he added. "There's just the feeling that you can still compete, still win races. Why sit at home?"

Rutherford said, "My money is better, the cars are better, there are more competitive teams, there is TV and the sport is growing. Those are all good reasons to stick around as long as you can still be competitive."

"When I make speeches around the country, I like to say about the other sports that I've found out those guys all have to run everywhere they go. In my sport, I get to drive," he joked.

"But, really, an athlete in those other sports can wind up with bum knees or other physical problems, or he can just get flat tired of running the length of the field or the playing floor."

"Racing is very physical, but as long as you keep your good eyesight and keep your tone and shape, you can do it. When things are right, I can still get around this place just as fast as anybody out there."

All the older drivers agree, though, that experience is the key word for aging racers.

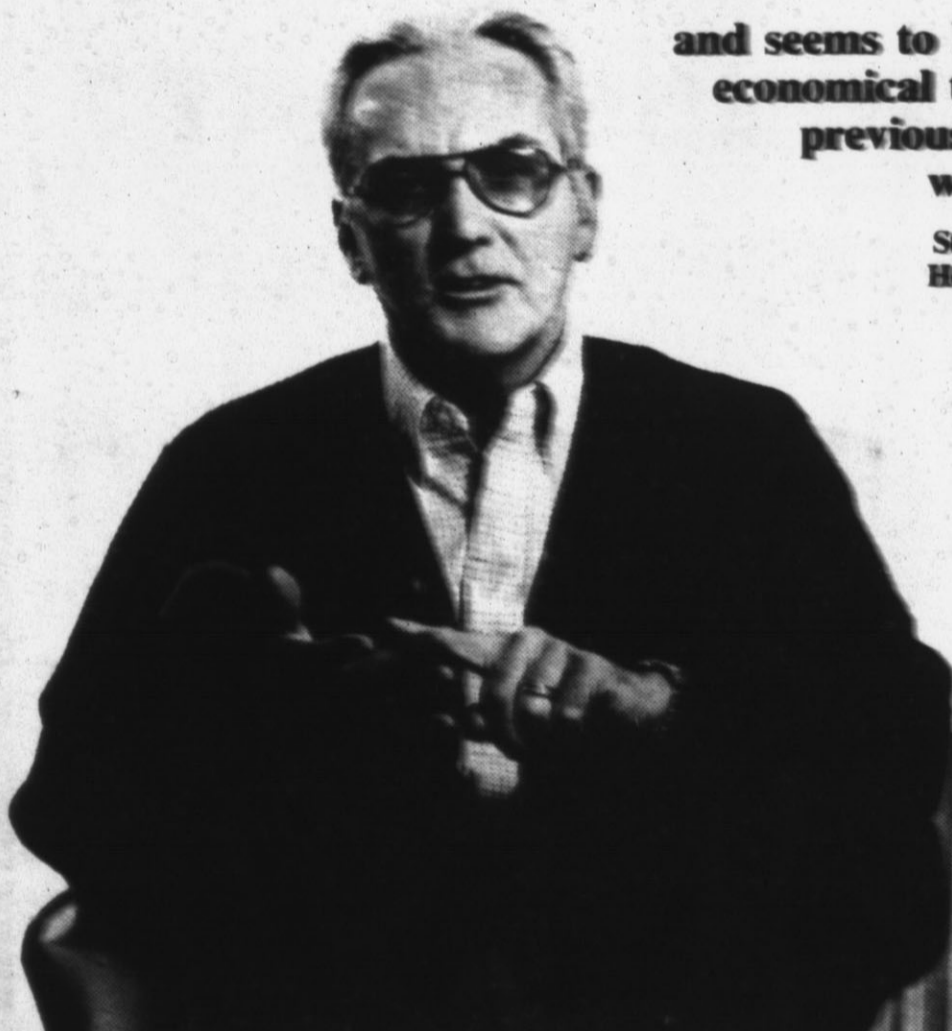

"It becomes a challenge to run against the youngsters, and experience is the greatest ally for us older drivers," Rutherford explained. "We've been through it all so many times. As you get older, you have to learn to rely on that experience. Sometimes, it can help you avoid the pitfalls that a younger driver just walks into."

"I like to think us old guys are smarter than the young ones."

Fly fishing is fast-growing sport in Texas

By JOE DOGGETT
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON (AP) — According to the traditional Lone Star lore of Billy Clyde and Bubba, anybody waving a fly rod was a wimp. But today, Billy Clyde might be working on his double-haul cast while Bubba is trying to tie a Dahlberg Diver. Fly fishing is one of the fastest-growing sports in Texas.

"We've had a 15 percent growth rate each year in our fly fishing business," said Dave Hayward, manager of Orvis Houston. "We've been open seven years, and that annual increase has been consistent despite the economy. Most of our customers seem to be from two groups. We have a lot of older, experienced fishermen, and we're getting increasing numbers of young professionals."

One of the attractions of the sport is its versatility. The time-honored image of a trout fisherman standing in a Rocky Mountain stream is only one of many options. You can load the action up or down as much as you dare, and all of the specialized equipment is on the shelves of fly fishing shops.

Texas is an exceptional fly fishing venue, one which provides year-round access to a variety of sport species. Largemouth bass, white bass, striped bass and bluegill sunfish are standouts in fresh water, and speckled trout, redbfish, skipjacks and mackerel are popular in salt water. Even tarpon are now being caught on flies off South Padre Island.

Freshwater fishermen can turn to major reservoirs, smaller power-plant cooling lakes, or the moving waters of Texas rivers such as the Trinity, San Jacinto, Colorado and the beautiful network of clear Hill Country streams, embrace. Even rainbow trout are stocked annually at various sites, the oldest and largest being the Guadalupe River below Canyon Dam.

Triathlon set for August 27 in Amarillo

The fifth annual Amarillo Triathlon is scheduled Aug. 27, with competition in swimming, running, and bicycling, in that order.

The triathlon will be held in the Lake Tanglewood area this year. The swimming event this year is being expanded to 1,000 meters.

The run will be on a 10-kilometer or 6.2-mile course in a scenic area of canyons, trees and a waterfall. The cycling portion of the triathlon will be eastward on Farm-to-Market road 1151, for 40 kilometers.

Joel Thompson, a triathlete from California, is the defending men's champion, having won the last three years. Amy Aikman won the women's triathlon division last year and went on to place sixth in the Iron Man competition in Hawaii.

Other top triathletes who have competed in the Amarillo Triathlon have been Paul Hufille, Richard Wells, Paula Newby-Frazier, Dianne Girard and Jann Girard.

Entry fee is $25, with a $10 charge for one-day insurance. Prize money will be awarded to the top three overall finishers and a minimal amount to the top finisher in each age bracket.

For more information or entry forms, write to: Amarillo Bud Light Triathlon, care of Jeff Cleaver, 5302 W. 21st Avenue, Amarillo, TX, 79106; or call Kevin Knapp at 352-2587, Tom Slaughter at 358-2421 or Jeff Cleaver at 352-0491.

Countless small, private ponds and "stock tanks" are available. Lakes of Danbury, a catch-and-release, trophy-managed series of stocked lakes, caters to fly fishermen.

Saltwater anglers have available countless miles of shorelines and shallow flats in the various bay complexes along the Texas Coast. West Galveston Bay and East Galveston Bay offer choice water, as do many protected "lakes" of the primary bays. Farther south, the clear flats of Aransas Bay near Rockport, and the sprawling Laguna Madre between Corpus Christi and Port Isabel offer some of the finest fly fishing on the entire Gulf coast — including Florida.

Because long rodders do not have to look far to find quality water in Texas, Lone Star ranks are growing daily. Fly fishing, with its blending of handcrafted tradition and high-tech trappings, has become fashionable among Houston's young movers and baby boomers. The sport has glamour and finesse yet provides a raw contact with the elemental forces.

At the same time, salty fishermen with years of seasoning with bait casting tackle are turning to fly rods to add a fresh dimension to familiar water. Casting the weight of the line rather than the terminal weight of a lure or bait is a different concept.

There is a bit of the analyst and artist in each of us and fly fishing, more so than most other types of recreation, stimulates both. Beginners are flush with excitement over his revelation, but there is nothing new about the concept. Izaak Walton, the patron saint of fly fishing, said in 1653 in "The Compleat Angler: "Angling may be said to be so like the mathematics that it can never be fully learnt."

Concerning the more pastoral side of the sport, he added, "You will find angling to be like the virtue of humility, which has a calmness of spirit and a world of other blessings attending upon it."

Bait-bucket skeptics and electronic bass-boat wizards may scoff at the musings from a lost era. For those preferring a more updated endorsement, Roland Martin, considered to be the greatest bass tour-namment professional of all time, says in his book, "One Hundred and One Bass-Catching Secrets": "This fly rod bass fishing is probably the most satisfying of any work I do in the year. I and others tend to overlook the pure sporting type of fishing which the fly rod offers. This is the epitome of bass fishing."

The aesthetic qualities and serene foundation of the sport are appealing more-and-more to Houstonians fighting burn-out in the fast lane.

"There's no question that fly fishing has really taken off among young professionals," said Rick Lewis, of Buck & Duck, a specialty hunting and fly-fishing shop located in The Woodlands. "I think that a lot of people in high-pressure corporate jobs are getting tired of team sports, where you just trade one stress situation for another. Fly fishing is a personal sport and a relaxing pastime."

Brooks Bouldin of Houston is recognized as a master fly caster and fly tier. His new specialty shop, the Angler's Edge, caters to all levels of expertise, but Bouldin is well-qualified to offer tackle advice to beginners. "My all-around choice for this area is a 9-foot rod rated for an 8 or 9 weight line. With it, you can cast bushy, air-resistant bass bugs, or go down to the coast and fish the bays for speckled trout and redbfish."

"It's important to start out right. You don't have to have the most expensive gear, but the rod and line weight must be balanced. Beginners today are really fortunate because so many good instructional aids are available — most specialty shops offer fly casting lessons, and good videos and books are on the market. A dozen or so specialized fly fishing guides are now operating, and you can learn a lot by spending a day with a professional."

Perhaps the greatest boost to contemporary fly fishing was, literally, in the casting arm. For centuries, fine fly rods were hand-crafted from various exotic woods tempered and glued by mysterious — almost occult — alchemy. For example in her 15th-century landmark book (not to be confused with BASSmaster Magazine), "The Treatise of Fysshynge wyth an Angle," Dame Juliana Berners stated that she preferred a rod with a butt section of hazel, willow or aspen, and a tip section crafted from blackthorn, crab-tree medlar or juniper.

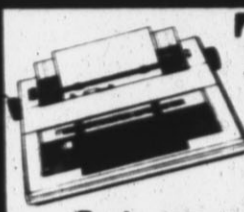

I'm not sure that I would know a medlar tree if it crashed on top of me while I was poaching the king's beat, but fortunately today I don't have to. We have available a far superior rod blank material.

It is called graphite. High-modulus graphite puts a lightweight, responsive, inexpensive tool in the hands of the average person. A line shot from a fast graphite rod can carry with ease to effective fishing distances, even with bushy flies, even into or across a gusting wind. For these reasons, graphite is superior to traditional (and staggeringly expensive) split bamboo and heavier, slower fiberglass for local use — especially in saltwater.

Fly fishing's tide of popularity fun-nels directly through the rich network of coastal bays. John Ford of Contex, a specialty fly shop in Conroe, said, "We've seen a big turnaround in saltwater interest during the past two years. People have the right rods, lines and fly patterns, and they're catching more fish now because the overall fishing has improved through the bay stocking program and the tighter limits. Saltwater is really on a roll."

Farm and Ranch

1988 plantings almost even with 1987

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers may be planting almost as many acres for the 1988 crop harvests as they did last year, says an Agriculture Department analyst.

And that is having some effect on the amount of land farmers are putting into the long-term Conservation Reserve Program, or CRP, says Ed Allen of the department's Economic Research Service.

Based on surveys taken in March, farmers indicated they would reduce 1988 plantings of major crops by only 871,000 acres, he said in the current issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine.

"This is in marked contrast to 1987, when area planted to the same crops fell 24.1 million acres, and to 1986, when the decline was 14.2 million," he said.

For example, the March survey showed corn plantings this year may be around 66.9 million acres, up by almost 2 percent from 1987. But last year's corn plantings, at 65.7 million acres, plummeted 14 percent from 76.7 million acres in 1986.

The total wheat acreage planted for the 1988 harvest was estimated at 65.1 million acres, down about 1.1 percent from last year. The 1987 wheat crop was planted on 65.8 million acres, a drop of more than 8 percent from 72.1 million acres in 1986.

"Higher prices, lower acreage reduction requirements for cotton and rice programs, reduced paid land diversion payments, and possibly lower program participation rates are partially offsetting the continued entry of area into the long-term Conservation Reserve Program," Allen said.

Commodity prices received in March were up 10 percent, overall, from a year earlier, including: feed grains, 22 percent; cotton, 21 percent; oilseeds, mainly soybeans, 19 percent; and food grains, 13 percent.

"However, crop prices are not high by historical standards, and corn is still below the national average (price support) loan rate," he said. "Over the same period, the index of prices paid, interest, taxes and farm wage rates increased only 4.4 percent."

According to USDA projections, corn prices may average around $1.75 per bushel in the 1987-88 marketing year, up from $1.50 in 1986-87. The 1988-crop corn price support loan nationally is $1.77 per bushel.

Six sign ups for the long-term CRP have been held since the program got under way in 1986, the most recent earlier this year when farmers offered bids to take 4.5 million acres of highly erodible crop land from production.

Although no decision on how much land will be accepted from the 4.5 million acres offered in the latest bids, around 23 million acres were enrolled in the CRP in earlier rounds.

The 1985 farm law set a goal of 40 million to 45 million acres of land in the CRP by 1990. Under the program, farmers agree to keep the land out of crop production for 10 years and get financial help to plant protective grass or trees, plus annual rental payments from the government.

Allen said the latest sign-up "did not attract heavy bidding" by farmers who wanted to enroll their land, which makes the 1990 goal of the program more difficult.

But Carol Fesco of the American Farmland Trust, a private, non-profit Washington-based conservation organization, said she did not think the slowdown in CRP offerings means much as far as the goal is concerned.

"We still think that that is very possible and that we won't have a problem of reaching the 45 million-acre goal," she said Tuesday.

"We're going to continue working towards that. We haven't lost faith in the CRP to date, and neither have any of the other conservation or environmental groups that I'm aware of."

'88 wheat 4 percent higher

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1988 winter wheat harvest could be around 1.62 billion bushels if the Agriculture Department's initial forecast is borne out, up 4 percent from last year's production.

Based on surveys May 1, the average yield of this year's harvest is expected to be 40.7 bushels per acre, compared with 39.8 bushels per acre in 1987 when winter wheat output was 1.56 billion bushels.

Farmers are expected to have about 39.8 million acres for harvest this year, up 1 percent from 39.3 million in 1987.

"As of May 1, over 60 percent of the winter wheat in the major producing states rated in good or better condition," said the department's report Tuesday. "Another 26 percent is rated in fair condition."

Winter wheat is planted in the fall and harvested the following summer. It makes up about three-fourths of total U.S. wheat production.

The outlook for wheat prices at the farm also has brightened, reflecting brisk export demand and a reduction in once-awesome U.S. wheat stockpiles.

In a related supply-and-demand report, the USDA projected total wheat production this year, based on historical trends, at 2.17 billion bushels, up slightly from 2.1 billion bushels in 1987. That would include winter wheat and other kinds planted this spring for harvest later in the year.

The report also projected the U.S. wheat stockpile is expected to decline further to around 796 million bushels by the end of the coming marketing year on May 31, 1989, compared with more than 1.23 billion bushels of old-crop wheat expected to be carried over this June 1.

Carl Schwensen, executive vice president of the National Association of Wheat Growers, said the expected reduction in U.S. wheat inventories will mean tighter supplies in the year ahead.

Does that mean the United States is running low on wheat after the recent years of huge surpluses?

"That's relatively correct," Schwensen said. "And if we're going to stay in the world market, we're going to have to have adequate supplies for our customers. That's why we feel the acreage reserve level can be relaxed and farmers can have the opportunity to market more bushels in the 1989 season."

Schwensen referred to a farm law provision that limits USDA to no more than a 20 percent land-idling requirement when the wheat stockpile is projected to drop below a billion bushels. At a projected 796 million bushels on May 31, 1989, that would be well below the mark.

For the last two years the USDA has required wheat farmers to idle 27.5 percent of their base acreage in order to qualify for supports and other federal benefits. Schwensen said the association wants to see the 1989 requirement reduced to between 10 percent and 20 percent.

Wheat market prices were projected for 1988-89 at an average range of $2.80 to $3.20 per bushel, compared with $2.55 estimated for 1987-88.

Wheat field day set for May 26

Activities for the regularly scheduled Wheat Field Day at the USDA Conservation and Production Research Laboratory at Bushland will start at 1 p.m. on May 26, according to Dr. B.A. Stewart, director of the laboratory.

Both dryland and irrigated small grain nurseries will be featured. Dr. Kenneth Porter, Texas Agricultural Experiment Station wheat breeder, says several new varieties and hybrids are being evaluated. Yields from Small Grain Trials for several years, including 1987, will be available.

In addition to small grain breeding, research with livestock grazing, limited tillage, wheat streak mosaic, fertility, as well as control of Russian aphid and greenbug will be discussed.

Drs. Stewart and Porter invite everyone interested in agricultural research to the field day. "Our research is most valuable to the area when people see and adopt new varieties or practices," Stewart said.

The field day is sponsored by Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, Texas Agricultural Extension System, USDA-Agricultural Research Service, and Texas Wheat Producers Association.

Being aware is the best prevention. Summer and spring insects create more problems for humans than snake bites. Being aware of where insects tend to be and what to do when threatened can make a lot of difference. Avoid walking outside barefooted. Don't wear sweet or strong smelling perfumes or colognes. Cover soft drink cans and ripened fruit when outside. Try to work in yard and flowers in the early morning when insects are less active. If a stinging insect is near, remain still. However, if attacked by a swarm of bees, wasps, yellow jackets or hornets, run from them, covering the face with hands and arms. People have different reactions like itching or slight inflammation of the skin does not usually require a doctor's treatment. However, reactions such as swelling or nausea and, of course, severe reactions like difficulty in breathing, hoarseness or confusion, shock or unconsciousness require a doctor's treatment.

Residents' son receives promotion

The chairman of the board of Meadowbrook National Bank in Fort Worth recently announced the promotion of Kevin Downing to leading officer from commercial loan representative. Downing began his career at the bank as credit department manager.

Downing is the son of Sandra and Roland Saul of Hereford and the grandson of the late Joe and Maude Story.

Downing graduated from Hereford High School in 1979 and received a BBA in management from West Texas State University in 1985. He received his master of business administration from the University of Dallas, specializing in corporate finance in April of this year.

He is a member of the National Association of Credit Managers and Tarrant County Credit Professionals. He is active in Lions Club International and Young Men's Christian Association.

Downing is married to the former Claire Montemayor who also graduated from Hereford High School. She is a candidate for graduation from the University of Texas at Arlington in December, 1988.

Many homeowners unwittingly damage trees when pruning their branches. The True Temper company has some suggestions to help make the right cut. When pruning, start at a spot just outside the bark ridge — a ridge of bark that forms in a branch's crotch. Finish the cut by the branch collar — a swollen area found underneath the branch. When cutting, be sure not to nick or damage any surrounding areas.

Good news for women

The number of deaths from cancer of the cervix has decreased 70 percent in the last 40 years as a result of women incorporating Pap smears in their annual gynecological examination. Those who have had abnormal or Class II Pap smear readings can now have a colposcopy performed which increases the rate of detection up to 95 percent of any abnormal cells. Dr. Tim Revell is shown with the ZoomScope, a piece of medical equipment he uses at his office to perform microscopic examinations of abnormal cervical cells. The exam helps him pinpoint the location of possible cancer. Dr. Revell recently spent a week at the L.S.U. Family Practice Conference and worked at the Ob-Gyn Clinic with Dr. Jose Torres, a professor who has been doing colposcopy for about 20 years. Dr. Torres is the editor of the Journal of Colposcopy.

Panhellenic planners

Preparing for the annual business meeting of Hereford Panhellenic Association are sorority alumnae, from left, Marsha Winget, Ange Lauderback, and Camille Williamson. The meeting is set for Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Barnhouse and all area alumnae are invited to attend. The local organization is comprised of women representing 14 national Greek letter sororities including Winget, an alum of Chi Omega at West Texas State University; Lauderback, Kappa Alpha Theta at Texas Tech University, and Williamson, Delta Delta Delta at TTU.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: A while back you printed a letter from a divorced woman in San Mateo who said she had put her 8-year-old on a plane to visit his father. Your correspondent stated that the airline took good care of the child and that they had darned well better, because they charge full fare for children who travel alone. You asked why the extra charge.

You can't be serious, Ann. That child takes up a seat, eats and drinks almost as much as an adult and demands extra attention. I can't believe you couldn't figure this out.—New Orleans

DEAR N.O.: I had never given it a thought, but a great many readers had plenty to say on the subject. The mail has been mind-boggling. Read on:

From Lake Forest, Ill.: Not only does a parent pay full fare for a child who travels alone, $20 is added if the child is between 8 and 11 and it's a connecting flight. This ensures that the child will be delivered to a person who must produce identification as proof that he or she is the one authorized to meet the youngster. The peace of mind is certainly worth the extra money. Wake up, Annie.

From San Francisco: Many readers will call me nasty names but I wish the airlines would inaugurate child-free flights. I'd be willing to pay an additional 25 percent for a trip with no crying babies, no mothers yelling, "You're going to catch it when we get home," and no kids throwing up all over my shoes.

From Dallas: I am a flight attendant who wishes the airlines would not allow children to travel alone. I've seen parents put kids on planes with nothing to do for four hours—no coloring books, no toys, no games. I had one of those youngsters last week. She rang my call button at least 15 times and went to the bathroom every 10 minutes. I'm rethinking motherhood.

From Columbus, Ohio: A kid who appeared to be about 7 years old kicked the back of my seat all the way from Cleveland to New York. When I asked the flight attendant to ask him to stop, she said, "Sorry I've got 57 meals to serve. You ask him."

From Vienna, Va.: As an airline agent at the hub of a regional jet carrier, I can tell you that unaccompanied minors are a frequent sight. While these little darlings are waiting for their connecting flights you need a radar screen to keep track of them. And you ask why they have to pay full fare? They should pay double.

From Detroit: We sent our 10-year-old daughter from Detroit to Fort Lauderdale last February. She and her two seatmates (who were younger) were virtually ignored by the airline personnel. When the cabin became cold my daughter asked for a blanket. She was told, "They are all taken." The two younger children slept huddled under my daughter's coat. So much for service people these days.

From Vancouver: Last year I was visiting my mother. My two children, 7 and 8, were with me. Mom became seriously ill and I had to stay and take care of her. I was worried sick about sending the kids back home to Los Angeles alone, but I had no choice. The flight attendants in Vancouver were angelic. Both my daughters were given "Junior Flight Attendant" pins and allowed to help pass peanuts. When they called me from Fresno, they said, "Mom, when we grow up we are going to work on airplanes."

HER FIGURE IS THE ENVY OF HER DRILL TEAM!

Often mistaken for a student ... Always at the head of her class as a teacher!

And here stands Huntsville's Susan Turner, vibrant and full of life and self esteem ... proud of her accomplishments as a teacher and leadership model for her students. Feeling good, too, about setting a beautiful example with her trim figure.

How does she do it? Let her tell you in her own words:

"I suppose that of 118 pounds I could hardly be considered fat. I know how those extra pounds made me feel. I had just about given up any thought of being skinny after trying several diets and exercise programs.

I tried running, aerobic dancing, jumping rope nothing seemed to take it off.

I decided to take advantage of a free treatment at Pat Walker's and my problem has been solved ever since.

After losing 28 1/2 inches I really am skinny and I look and feel better than I ever have before. My dress size went from a 9 to a 4! What makes it even better is that though Pat Walker's I have learned how to eat the things I enjoy eating without fear of gaining back any of my lost weight and inches."

Study club officers

A dinner meeting was held Thursday evening in the home of Pat Walsh for members of La Madre Mia Study Club. During the business session, 1988-89 officers for the new club year were installed. Members inducted included (from left) Betty Lady, secretary; Gladys Merritt, president; Nancy Paetzold, vice president; Lavon Nieman, reporter; Lucy Rogers, historian; and Pat Walsh, parliamentarian. Not pictured is Francyn Bromlow who will serve as treasurer.

Khuri serves as hostess during meeting

L'Allegra Study Club met recently in the home of Sylvia Khuri with Carmen Flood and Kay Lynn Caviness serving as co-hostesses.

President Jody Skiles presided over the business meeting. The results of the club's recent plant sale were discussed and it was announced that proceeds will be donated to the TSTI Satellite Learning Center in Hereford.

A lowfat-low-calorie diet for infants is NOT what the doctor ordered for babies. Infants have different nutritional requirements and need certain amounts of fat and calories for normal weight gain and complete brain development. They need whole milk and regular dairy products rather than those lower in fat.

L'Allegra volunteers to the "We Help Ourselves" anti-victimization Pilot project reported completion of the presentations in all designated area schools. They further reported that the program was well received by all parties involved.

Officers for the next club year were elected to hold the following responsibilities: Susan Perrin, president; Carmen Flood, recording secretary; Sylvia Khuri, corresponding secretary; Hilda Perales, treasurer; Dee Ann Trotter, assistant treasurer; Mary McWhorter, historian; and Jody Skiles, parliamentarian.

Khuri presented a program on the Arab Palestinian woman and how she compares to her counterparts in the rest of the world. She explained the cultural differences in the life of a Palestinian woman and the specific demands placed on her as a result of her people's determination to regain independence from occupation.

There were 24 members present.

Officers installed at meeting

La Madre Mia Study Club President Pat Walsh hosted a dinner meeting for club members in her home Thursday evening. For the event, tables were laid with white cloths and centered with crystal bud vases holding purple irises.

During the business session with Walsh presiding, minutes of the previous meeting were read and Joyce Allred presented the financial report. A letter from Rape Crises Center was read announcing that programs are available to the public on request and that volunteers are needed.

Walsh installed new officers for the 1988-89 club year using the theme

CLEVELAND (AP) - Every owner of a small business should have a succession plan, says Bert Zahn.

Zahn, a National City Corp. vice president, says this is needed to provide a smooth transition when he or she retires or dies unexpectedly.

He says the first step is to establish a schedule for passing control of the business into another person's hands. The next step is to select a successor, usually the second in command or a trusted manager. The third step is to prepare a successor report which is updated regularly and serves as a "how to" manual for the next leader.

"Most important," Zahn says, "is a document of transfer which is either a will, trust or agreement."

SHERRI ELLIS, MONTIE SOUTHERN

Couple to wed

Sherri Lynn Ellis and Montie Lynn Southern, both of San Angelo, plan to wed July 23 in First United Methodist Church of Hereford.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Richard and Joan Ellis of 540 Sycamore Lane and the prospective bridegroom is the son of Don and Patricia Southern of Coleman, Texas.

Miss Ellis, a 1983 graduate of Hereford High School, graduated in December of 1987 from Angelo State University where she received her bachelor of science degree in physical education with all-level certification.

Southern is a May candidate for graduation from Angelo State University where he plans to receive a bachelor of business administration degree in accounting.

WTSU to confer degrees on Hereford students

Degrees are scheduled to be conferred upon 562 West Texas State University students Saturday, May 21. Commencement exercises will begin at 4 p.m. at the Amarillo Civic Center Coliseum.

Those to receive degrees from Hereford include Rodney J. Caison, Cindy L. Garth, Jeanette A. Grotegut, Billy K. Lytal, Dora A. Medrano, Viola M. Moore, and David E. Rohrabach. Those from Dawn include Patricia D. Hickman, William C. Stribling and Rick L. Thompson.

Dr. Kenneth Ashworth, commissioner of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board since March 1976, will deliver the commencement address.

Ashworth earned his undergraduate degree in economics from the University of Texas in 1956, a master's degree in public administration from Syracuse University in 1959 and a doctor of philosophy degree in the history and philosophy of education from the University of Texas in 1969.

During his early working career, Ashworth was employed by the U.S. Treasury Department, the Urban Renewal Administration, the San Francisco Redevelopment Agency and the U.S. Office of Education in Washington. He returned to Austin in 1966 as assistant commissioner for federal programs and facilities planning for the Coordinating Board. In 1969 he joined the University of Texas System as assistant to the vice chancellor for academic programs, assuming the position of vice chancellor the following year.

Following Ashworth's commencement address, West Texas State University officials will confer degrees upon 106 master's and 447 baccalaureate candidates. The graduates represent 12 states and 79 Texas towns.

Every year some 100 people hike the entire 2,100 miles of the Appalachian Trail, taking from four to six months.

"Restoration" to be presented May 20

"Restoration" will be the theme of a concert of contemporary Christian music May 20 at 7:30 p.m. in the Church of the Nazarene, 1410 La Plata.

Open to the public, the concert will benefit the Nazarene Christian Academy as a love offering will be collected. A reception will follow the event in the fellowship hall.

Youngsters from the Academy will present a special choral number and a band complete with vocalists will be featured, as will the church choir. Susie Merrick and Jim Haile will sing, accompanied by a band of Lisa Hilton, Brian Stanaland, Roger Hodges, all of Hereford, Bruce Menefee of Canyon and Gary Mingus of Amarillo.

"This is not an event solely for Church of the Nazarene members; rather it is an event for the entire community," stressed Merrick. "We hope to bring the whole community together to receive comfort and love—we want to minister to the entire community through music that encourages and uplifts."

Tri-state literary contests scheduled for area writers

Writers will once again be featured in the Tri-State Fair contests and displays. Writers in all fields and at all levels from beginning to experienced are urged to compete.

In addition to the five categories in poetry and prose, a children's classification for young authors up to 16 years old will offer competition for young writers. The Writers Association of the Golden Spread will give further encouragement to young people by giving a $25 check to the first place winner in this contest.

Hi-Plains Poetry Chapter of the Poetry Society of Texas and the Panhandle Professional Writers (formerly Panhandle Pen Women) will again present $25 prizes to the Grand Prize winners chosen from the five 1st place winners in poetry and prose. Ribbons and small cash prizes will be awarded 1st, 2nd and 3rd place winners.

Categories in poetry are sonnet, nature, humorous or light verse, narrative (tells a story), and character study of a person. In prose, essays, short-short story, how-to articles, humor (stories or articles) and nostalgia are categories to be entered. Entry fees will be charged.

Rules include information on fee, lengths of entries, and general information on submission. Writers interested in entering the Tri-State Literary Contests can contact the Tri-State Fair, Literary Department, P.O. Box 31087, Amarillo, 79120-1087, or Marianne McNeil, 7003 Amarillo Blvd., E., Amarillo, 79107. Be sure to include a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Superintendent of the Literary Department is Marianne McNeil, assisted by Helen Luecke. They will serve as contest chairmen and will also display the winning poems, stories and articles in a booth during the Tri-State Fair. Visitors at the fair will be invited to stop by the booth to read the outstanding entries and receive information on writing. Entry deadline is August 8.

Accent on Health

EATING RAW SEAFOOD CAN BE DANGEROUS
The Texas Department of Health has warned that it can be dangerous for some people to eat raw seafoods, or even to expose injuries to the salt waters of the Gulf of Mexico, because of the possibility of serious infection and illness.

Richard Thompson, director of the TDH Division of Shellfish Sanitation Control, said that the source of danger to some people is a common microorganism found in Gulf waters, especially in the warmer months from April to October. The name of the culprit, is Vibrio, especially a subgroup of the bacteria, Vibrio vulnificus.

When consumed uncooked, usually in shellfish such as oysters, mussels, and clams, Vibrio can cause serious illness, even death.

The persons most at risk of such illness are those with existing health problems, such as liver disease and weakened immune systems, especially those recovering from stomach or intestinal surgery.

Since Vibrio vulnificus and some of the other Vibrio bacteria can also cause wound infections, people with open wounds or sores are warned against exposing them to seawater, and anyone who is cut or otherwise injured at the seashore is warned to wash wounds immediately, liberally apply an antiseptic, and call a physician if irritation or other signs of infection appear.

Thompson said, "Wound infections, while they can be very serious, are more obvious to the victim from the outset than are food-borne illnesses. A person who has a cut or puncture stays aware of the injury, while a person preoccupied with dining may be taken by surprise, possibly after ingesting dangerous amounts of Vibrio-contaminated seafood. Therefore, most of our warning is aimed at the unsuspecting person who might be tempted to try raw seafoods."

Thompson explained that Vibrio bacteria occur naturally and increase their concentrations in warm water. Even healthy, fresh seafood may contain the organisms, just as other meats or poultry contain other harmful bacteria if served raw, improperly cooked, or mishandled.

Normal cooking procedures easily kill Vibrio, and re-contamination of the seafood after cooking can be prevented with the same cleanliness precautions (hand and utensil washing) necessary to avoid other food-borne contaminants.

Thompson said that seafood species other than oysters, clams, and mussels are not yet popular unless traditionally cooked.

Bob's hoping you've liked fifty years

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The year is 1938: Hitler annexes Austria, the Munich Pact lets Germany partition Czechoslovakia, Wrong-Way Corrigan flies from New York to Dublin, and a brash young comedian gets his own radio show on NBC.

"Good evening, ladies and gentlemen, this is Bob Hope for Pepsodent...We're broadcasting from NBC's new building...They tell me it costs more than Mrs. Roosevelt's annual train fare."

Bob Hope hit the airwaves running, ski nose into the wind, poking fun at every sacred cow in sight.

As he turns 65 on May 29 and celebrates 50 years with NBC, first on radio and then on television, Hope hasn't slowed down one bit.

Over lunch in a sunny corner of his estate in the Toluca Lake section of Los Angeles (he has equally large digs in Palm Springs), Hope explains that with less than two weeks before he tapes an all-star birthday and anniversary salute, he was flying off to perform in Kansas City, Chicago and Columbus, Ohio.

After the two-hour special is taped, he will visit Korea for five days for pre-Olympic ceremonies. On the date of the telecast, Monday, May 16, he'll be performing in Anaheim, Calif.

The special, reflecting Hope's penchant for long titles, is called "Happy Birthday Bob — 50 Stars Salute Your 50 Years With NBC." Besides the 20 or more stars who will be at the taping, another 50 or so will appear in clips from past Hope shows.

Hope's radio show lasted until 1962. He started on television in 1950.

"I came to Hollywood in 1937," he says, "but before that I was on radio back East. I did a monologue on a show with Shep Fields and his Rippling Rhythm."

He also appeared with Dick Powell on "Hollywood Parade."

Hope was the toast of Broadway in such plays as "Roberta," "Say

When" and "Red Hot and Blue."

He might have come to Hollywood sooner than he did but he was a little miffed at the studios' lack of enthusiasm over his screen test and held out for three years.

Finally, he signed with Paramount and launched his film career with "The Big Broadcast of 1938." Another star in the movie was Dorothy Lamour, who was later to appear with Hope and Bing Crosby in all the "Road" pictures.

"There was a song in the picture they wanted me to sing," Hope says. "I showed it to Dolores (his wife, a former singer) and she didn't think too much of it. The song was 'Thanks for the Memory.'"

The song won the Oscar that year and it became Hope's theme song. He would later do a film called "Thanks for the Memory."

On radio, his band leader was Skinny Ennis, his comic sidekick was Jerry Colonna and at various times his singers included Frances Langford, Judy Garland and Doris Day.

"We got off to a slow start, but once we started we went to first in the ratings very fast," he says. "It was a combination of pictures and radio. Each helped the other. We followed 'Fibber McGee and Molly' on Tuesday nights and Red Skelton came after us."

Hope and Crosby were frequent guests on each other's radio shows, in addition to the "Road" movies.

Hope launched his television career on Easter Sunday 1950 with a live broadcast from the roof of the New Amsterdam Theater in New York. His guests were Dinah Shore, Douglas Fairbanks Jr. and Bea Lillie.

Hope, finishing lunch with ice cream and a cookie, sighs and asks, "Do you have any idea how many jokes I've done? Early in my career I did all kinds of jokes. I'd do Italian jokes. People laughed, but I was terrible with dialects."
