Army changed lives with POW duty

(About 50 former Italian prisoners of war will be in Hereford this Saturday to visit the Hereford Prisoner of War Camp site south of the city. In the second part of this series, Managing Editor John Brooks looks at some of the people whose lives were changed by the camp.)

By JOHN BROOKS Managing Editor

"In 1943, Hereford was a booming, popular town," Grant Hanna recalls. "That's not the reason I came here. I was forced to come here by the U.S. Army.'

Hanna hasn't regretted the Army's choice. The retired farmer and restaurant operator liked Hereford so much he decided to make it his permanent home.

Life for Hereford, Hanna, and 144 Italians began to change on April 30, 1943, when the Italians marched off a train at Summerfield and marched eight miles to the POW Camp. Accompanying the Italians were highly-trained U.S. soldiers, ready to spring to action at a moment's notice.

Springing, and maybe a little wrestling, was all the soliders could have done had the soldiers tried to escape. "We didn't have any ammunition then, and we didn't have any ammunition for another 18 months," Hanna said. "The prisoners didn't give us any problems. They just sang 'Roll Out the Barrel' in Italian and freedom.

marched to the camp." Once the prisoners got to the camp, they stripped and were deloused. They were to turn over all valuables to the U.S. Army for safekeeping. "One guy didn't trust us, I guess-I saw him swallow a diamond ring," Hanna

"The Italian prisoners really had a gravy train, especially compared to the American soliders. We had some problems from time to time." Most of those problems were among the prisoners-some supported Benito Mussolini, other supported the king. "We had to get the billy clubs out and break it up," Hanna said. "One guy went to the hospital for two weeks."

Another time, 1,000 German prisoners were accidentally shipped to Hereford. "That was a big mistake," Hanna said. "There was a huge riot. The Germans were gone in 24 hours. Things were not all roses-the Italians tried to escape, and the escapade turned into something straight from Hogan's Heroes.

"The prisoners were playing soccer out in the yard, and the ball went under one of the barracks," Hanna said. "No one would go under the barracks to get it, so the guards went in." They discovered a 500-foot tunnel that was only 15 feet short of reaching the outside fence and Because Hanna was a mess sergeant, leading a group of KP's and 10 cooks, he had to keep an eye on supplies. "That's how I noticed the sugar and raisins were disappearing. We only had to do a little investigating before we found out where they were go-

"They were making wine. We found them out, and they said, Wine! Two more weeks! Two more weeks!' We waited two more weeks and drank their wine.

"Most of them were pretty good guys. They worked hard, in the fields, doing painting and art work. Those murals at the Catholic church in Umbarger are beautiful."

When Hanna first came to Hereford, "I looked and decided I wouldn't live here for Hell. I've been here for 40 years, so I had to eat those words.

"Every Thanksgiving and Christmas we had a special dinner with menus for every plate. I wento to the USO-it was where Anthony's used to be on Main Street-and told them I needed someone to run them off. That's how I met my wife, and I've been hooked on Hereford ever since."

Bill Phipps was from Lynn, Mass., when the Army gave him his duty in Hereford. He recalled in a 1981 interview that

The general public will have an opportunity to respond to findings from a county-wide survey, a forecast of economic trends, and goals and strategies being developed by the Economic Development Strategy Council at a meeting Thursday at 7 Library in Hereford.

Dr. Steve Murdock of Texas A&M University will be present at the meeting to discuss the survey and a trend analysis of the county's economy developed by Murdock and others at TAMU

Bush, Dukakis likely to butt heads this autumn in election

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — George Bush and Michael Dukakis were on track to an autumn showdown today after impressive victories in the Pennsylvania primary clinched the GOP presidential nomination for Bush and enabled Dukakis to claim "a very big boost" toward the top spot on the Democratic ticket.

Dukakis shied away from claiming the nomination after Tuesday's vote, but he and Bush were already testing themes for the fall campaign, attacking each other on taxes and foreign policy.

Jesse Jackson, despite being overwhelmed by a 2-1 margin in the first one-on-one primary of the 1988 Democratic campaign, said, "We're inspired to run on.'

With the nomination in hand for Bush, President Reagan, free at last drop his neutrality, was meeting with his vice president today.

"I am sure the president will offer his congratulations and discuss how he can help in the campaign," said White House House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Ohio, Indiana and the District of Columbia were the next battlegrounds, each holding primaries next Tuesday.

"He's coming in with a head of steam," Ohio Democratic Party chairman James Ruvolo said of Dukakis. But he also cautioned against "Washington insiders trying to end the race before it's over."

Pennsylvania gave Dukakis his most impressive victory to date and prompted I. A. Lewis, pollster for the Los Angeles Times to say, "He's emerging as the consensus candidate.'

Jackson vowed to "remain positive" and continue running through the final primaries on June

Solid as his lead appeared, Dukakis insisted his race against Jackson was "by no means over."

He repeated his assertion that he didn't want to think about a running mate until after the primary season, although he indicated he would consider Jackson or Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia.

But other party officials had no such inhibitions.

Nunn was the overwhelming choice of Democratic Party officials asked by CBS to name the vice presidential candidate they thought would be the most help to Dukakis in the fall. Five named Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, who dropped out of the race after the New York primary. Rep. Pat Schroeder of Colorado and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas got two votes each. No one else

Network interviews with voters at polling places found signs of growing strength for the Massachusetts governor. For the first time, more than half his supporters said they backed him strongly. In a reverse of the results in earlier primaries, Dukakis outpolled Jackson among voters who cited the poor and elderly as their chief concerns as well as among who cited strong leadership and ability to make a change.

"We're almost getting down to the main event," declared Bush, who got 79 perent of the Pennsylvania popularity vote and also won more than enough delegates to lock in the 1,139 he needed for a GOP convention majority.

With 94 percent of the Pennsylvania vote in, the Democratic vote was:

Dukakis, 944,461, or 67 percent. Jackson, 395,790, 28 percent.

On the Republican side, with 94 percent of the vote in, it was:

Bush, 631,274, 79 percent. Dole, 96,346, 12 percent.

Robertson, 73,692, 9 percent. The GOP delegate count was far slower than the popular vote. By the Associated Press delegate count, Bush needed to win at least 58 of the 78 delegates at stake to clinch the 1,139 needed to nominate, and he did early today.

Dukakis won a separate landslide in the election of Democratic delegates, taking 163 to Jackson's 13. Two were uncommitted. That brought Dukakis' national delegate total to 1,264, compared to 851 for Jackson. It takes 2,081 to clinch nomination.

As they needled each other with an eye on the fall campaign, Bush said Dukakis "doesn't know much about foreign affairs" and declared "that will be a major issue in the fall."

The Massachusetts governor ridiculed Bush on taxes, comparing the vice president to Gilbert and Sullivan's captain of the H.M.S. Pinafore, who, after saying, "I'm never, never sick at sea," finally concedes, "Hardly ever."

When Bush announced for president last year he said, "I'm never going to raise your taxes. Period." But two days later, in an interview on Cable News Network, the vice president said he might raise taxes as a Guard towers, like the one pictured here, were placed strategically around the Hereford POW Camp to help prevent escapes through the fence.

"everybody in the camp was used to process that first group of prisoners." The prisoners were issued blue denim uniforms that were stamped "P.W." in large orange letters across the seat of the pants, and on the backs and sleeves of the shirts.

Phipps said the soccer-tunnel incident was "the granddaddy of them all. You had to hunch down in the tunnel, but you didn't have to crawl on your hands and knees."

The tunnel was non-apparent because the loose dirt was dumped in gardens around the camp. The gardens had risen slightly every day-a rise that was unapparent to those at the camp every day, but a rise which, over the course of time, caused the gardens to be elevated about a foot above the rest of the camp's flat terrain.

Another tunnel was discovered behind the organ at the camp's church. Prisoners were cleaning the church and were told by

Very little of the prisoners' time was spent on tunnel-building. The prisoners used scrap lumber to build violins, guitars, drums, chairs, beds and chests. From scrap metal they crated airplanes, ringes, necklacs, and ashtravs.

Clements says courts should leave public education to others

AUSTIN (AP) — State legislators their schools if they choose to do so. - not judges - are the people to determine how to best finance public education in Texas, Gov. Bill Clements says.

"We do not want our public school system to get into the hands of our state courts. That's just unacceptable," Clements said.

"The only way we can cure that is to go through the legislative process with a constitutional amendment and keep the responsibility for our public school system in the Legislature where it belongs," he said Tuesday.

State District Judge Harley Clark ruled earlier that the system unconstitutionally shortchanges districts with lower property wealth. The state is appealing.

Clements' comments came as legislative leaders, including Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, were being briefed on a proposal by Comptroller Bob Bullock to help bail the state out of its school financing dilemma.

While Bullock hasn't publically released details, sources say the plan includes a proposal to use some $600 million in bond proceeds to finance new facilities in school districts with low property wealth. The proposal also calls for guaranteeing a minimum level of state funding for school districts that tax homeowners and businesses at the state average, an idea sources said still would allow wealthier districts to pump more money into

The plan also suggests using money from the state Permanent School Fund to purchase construction bonds issued by local school districts, reducing financing costs other uses. Hobby called Bullock's proposals a good starting place for lawmakers and a plan that should meet reand making money available for quirements of Judge Clark's ruling. "I think he's made an enormous contribution," Hobby said. "I think it's very good thinking ... He's done his usual very fine piece of work."

Clements said Tuesday he hasn't seen Bullock's plan and wouldn't comment on it. The governor's staff was briefed on Monday by Bullock.

During a brief question-andanswer session with news reporters, Clements said he believes the Legislature has sought to continually improve public education and would keep doing so if free of court control.

He said federal court intervention on the state prison system and state mental health system shows the need to keep public school financing under legislative control.

"The Legislature will take those actions, as they have always done, to constantly improve the quality of our school system. But we cannot do that through the judicial process, by keeping our public school system hostage to the court," Clements said.

Hernandez pitched hitless ball for 51/3 innings

Whitefaces continue winning ways,

By GARY CHRISTENSEN Sports Editor

Six timely extra-base hits, coupled with no-hit pitching by James Hernandez for 5 and one third innings, powered the Hereford Whiteface varsity baseball team to a 10-1 victory over Borger Tuesday in Hereford. Hereford is now 11-1 in District

1-4A and 18-1 overall. The Whitefaces hold a 3-game lead over Canyon and a 3 and one half game lead over Lubbock Dunbar and Lubbock Estacado. In other district games Tuesday, Canyon beat Dumas 4-1, Estacado defeated Dunbar 7-3, and Levelland won over Frenship 24-16. Hereford Whiteface head Coach

Hansen wins tennis regional singles title

Kevin Hansen qualified for the state class 4A tournament by winning the regional boys' singles championship Tuesday in Brownwood.

Hansen defeated Shawn Cobb of Crowley, 7-6, 6-3 in the title match. Earlier on Tuesday, Hansen scored a 6-1, 6-3 match victory over B.J. Smith of Brownwood.

Kevin played some of the best tennis of his high school career. He felt read good about how he was playing," Hereford Coach Ruben Vargas said.

He was SO tough in the finals. He got a little revenge by beating Cobb in the finals. Cobb was the one who beat him last year in the semifinals. doubles.

Hereford High School tennis player Kevin's excited and ready to go to state," Vargas adds.

The state tournament is scheduled May 13-14 in Austin. Hansen, the District 1-4A champion, beat Winter of Snyder, 6-2, 6-0, in the first round on Monday. Hereford's other District 1-4A champions, the girls' doubles team of Bridget Baker and Wendy Connally, lost 6-2, 6-4 to a Brownwood team in the first round on Monday.

Other regional champions were: Michelle King of Canyon, girls' singles; James Young and Chuyen Nguyen of San Angelo Lake View, boys' doubles; and Manda Lopez and Janda Lopez of Lake View, girls'

T.R. Sartor, summarizing the play of Hereford's first run. his team Tuesday, said, "Excellent game-no errors, perfect defense. We hit the ball well again and we ran the bases well again. It was a pretty complete ball game.' Although Hereford is still one victory away from clinching a tie for the district championship, Sartor said the Whitefaces approached the game with the playoffs in mind.

"We went into the game to prepare for the playoffs, to improve a little each game. There was an increase in confidence, concentration and intensity," he said.

"It was a good pitching effort by James Hernandez. He needed to have a good game. This was the sein to pitch, and I was pleased with him again," Coach Sartor added.

Hernandez, in keeping Borger hitless for 5 and one third innings, struck out five batters. Borger had only two baserunners in the first five innings, one of them reaching base on a passed ball after striking out.

Borger had two straight hits, a single and a double, in the sixth inning, to score its only run of the game. Hernandez, who walked two batters in that inning, worked out of a basesloaded situation without allowing any more runs to be scored by the Bulldogs.

McCracken struck out two batters in pitching the seventh inning, walking one batter and giving up a single.

The Whitefaces had eight hits in the game - six of them for extra bases. Bill Ruckman hit an RBI double in the second inning for

The Whitefaces put together a four-run fifth inning, with it all starting when Keith Brown walked after a pop fly was dropped in foul territory for an error.

Brown stole second base, Phibbs was safe at first on an error, and Phibbs stole second base. The Bulldogs decided not to pitch to Robcond game I put Rodney McCracken by Collier, and intentionally walked him to pitch to Hernandez.

What Borger did was walk the leading hitter of the Whitefaces to pitch to Hereford's leading RBI man.

BALTIMORE (AP) - The chauffeur arrived right on schedule in the ninth inning, ready to take WIYY disc jockey Bob Rivers home. And in the 186th hour of Rivers' vigil waiting for a Baltimore Orioles' victory, the limousine left empty. Again.

"OK," Rivers sighed, drawing it out as Fred Lynn popped up Tuesday night to end the 4-2 loss to Minnesota. "It's business as usual." Which means at least 24 more hours at the 98 Rock microphones for him, waiting for a win.

Rivers will pass the 200-hour mark today which will be Day Nine. He is 0-8 in his wait. That is not nearly as bad as the Orioles, bending under the burden of an 0-19 record, one loss short of the American league mark, four away from the modern major league record and seven away from the all-time record.

The only records that interest Rivers are the ones he plays. He is not in the marathon broadcasting business.

"I thought this would go one or two days," he said. "I wondered if we should even bother with it because I thought it would be over so quickly. Do you know I haven't driven in a week? I haven't been out of this building in a week."

"I stuck my neck out," he said, "and here I am."

This exercise in endurance began rather casually after the 11th straight Oriole defeat. Rivers and another WIYY DJ, Chris Emry, were at the game - a 1-0 extra-inning loss to Cleveland which ended with the bases loaded for Baltimore - when the idea was hatched.

Once it began stretching beyond a day or two, Rivers became something of a cult hero. His dentist offered to bring his equipment to the studio. A nurse visits daily to take Rivers' blood pressure. He's had massages from chiropractors and calls of support from among others, Baltimore's mayor, Maryland's governor and Orioles' General Manager Roland Hemond, who confided that he wasn't sleeping either.

"The element of chance makes it scary," Rivers said. "I don't know when I can leave."

For a while, it seemed like Rivers would escape Tuesday night. The Orioles led 2-0 going into the bottom of the sixth and Rivers allowed that he was "cautiously optimistic."

WIYY was playing hopeful selections like "Tonight's the Night," by Genesis. But when Kent Hrbek and Randy Bush hit home runs for Minnesota to put the Twins ahead 3-2, Rivers went to "Ain't Too Proud to Beg," by the Rolling Stones.

"We're in serious trouble," he said

And when Hrbek's second homer of the game made it 4-2, he said, "It looks like we may have to hang out one more night."

At least. The cramped studio from which he works is festooned with orange and black balloons, pennants and pictures of happier Oriole times. The station's staff wears "Free Bob Rivers" T-shirts, in Oriole orange and black, of course.

Rivers is waiting this thing out in a traditional WIYY, 98 Rock shirt that happens to be black. He swears it is not because he is mourning over the woes of the O's.

"We will stay here until the Orioles win," Rivers said resolutely.

Each night, his family visits the studio. When Lynn hit a leadoff home run Tuesday night, fueling the early Oriole hopes, Rivers missed it. He was busy reading a bedtime story to his two sons, 5-year-old Keith, and Andrew, who is 3.

Dallas Cowboys franchise said to be for sale

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Globe today said it learned from reliable National Football League sources that the Dallas Cowboys franchise is for sale.

A brief report by staff reporter Will McDonough said H.R. "Bum" Bright, who headed a group that bought the team in 1984, has come upon hard times financially in the last two years and is trying to sell his controlling interest in the team, and in Texas Stadium.

The Cowboys had their worst year in attendance at Texas Stadium last year, when fans soured on the team after the 24-day players strike, and the team reportedly lost several millions dollars, the newspaper said.

NBA playoffs begin Thursday, Friday

By The Associated Press

Utah Jazz Coach Frank Layden says his team's first-round playoff series with the Portland Trail Blazers will determine who becomes the sacrificial lamb in the second against the defending NBA-champion Los Angeles Lakers.

"We don't have a chance," Layden said Tuesday of the Blazers and the Jazz, who open their best-of-five Western Conference series Thursday night at Portland.

The Lakers are going to have momentum by the time they play the winner of our series - y'know, they're going to have their little tuneup the first week with San Antonio - and then they'll come into the next series loaded for bear," he said. "And let's not forget, they'll have the home-court advantage."

Los Angeles, trying to become the first repeat champion in the league since the Boston Celtics in 1969-70, opens defense of its crown Friday night. In other series openers Thursday night, it will '? Washington at Detroit and Chicago at Cleveland in the Eastern Conference and Houston at Dallas in the West.

Elsewhere on Friday night, it will be New York at Boston and Milwaukee at Atlanta in the East and Seattle at Denver in the West.

Layden's approach is completely the opposite of that being used by Portland's Mike Schuler, who recently told his players they can't afford any distractions because they're trying to win a championship.

Layden and Schuler also charted different courses for their teams at practice. Portland is working hard while the atmosphere in Utah is much more relaxed.

Rockets-Mavericks

Houston's Robert Reid sees the opening game with Dallas as crucial.

"It all comes down to Game One," the Rockets' guard said. "If you can win that one, you've got the other team on the run."

The two teams have met six times during the regular season with the Mavericks holding a 4-2 advantage. Dallas even broke a seven-game losing streak at Houston's Summit, where it now has won two consecutive games.

The Mavericks have a distinct advantage in the series because they hold the home-court advantage, meaning if the series is extended to five games, three of them will be at Reunion Arena, where they were 33-8 for the season. One of those, losses, however, was a 108-92 loss to Houston back on Jan. 30.

Houston's Reid is quick to point out that this series is special since it matches two Texas teams.

"It's going to be heated because now you're playing for (Texas) bragging rights," Reid said.

The series is only the third ever between Texas teams in the NBA. In 1981, Houston defeated the San Antonio Spurs, 3-1, and in 1980, the Rockets won the mini-series from San Antonio, 2-1.

And, Reid says, the team that wins the series will meet the Los Angeles Lakers for the Western Division championship. "That's automatic," he said.

Despite their quick exit from the playoffs last year when they lost to Seattle in the first round; the Mavericks are beginning to establish themselves as regulars in the playoffs. They are among only eight teams in the NBA who have qualified for the playoffs in each of the past five seasons. The others are the Los Angeles Lakers, Boston, Milwaukee, Denver, Portland, Detroit and Washington.

Cavaliers-Bulls

If Cleveland guard Ron Harper is unable to play, much of the task of guarding Chicago's Michael Jordan will fall on the shoulders of unherald-

Coach Lenny Wilkens said Tuesday that the 6-foot-6 Harper, who sprained his right ankle late in the first half of Cleveland's 107-103 victory at Chicago last Friday night, is questionable for the opener.

The Cavaliers are hopeful that Harper will be ready to play Sunday in the second game.

Bullets-Pistons Detroit forward Rick Mahorn, who sat out the final week of the season with a lower back strain, wasn't well enough to resume practicing Tuesday and is questionable for the opener against Washington.

'Well, he's back," Coach Chuck Daly said. "That's the first time I've seen him in a while. He wasn't able to practice today, so we'll have to see what happens tomorrow. I would say right now he'll get limited minutes." Mahorn, who is needed to help guard high-scoring Washington not ready to play much. "I don't have any kind of conditioning," he said.

center Moses Malone, admitted he is

If Mahorn can't go, he'll be replaced by either John Salley or James Edwards. Neither has had much luck guarding Malone or staying out of foul trouble.
