Kester keeps cranking out new, classic, cars

By JOHN BROOKS
Managing Editor

Bill Kester and I go zooming down the road in a Shelby Cobra roadster. Since there's no top the wind is ripping through our hair.

We go faster. I feel my glasses start to slip up, ready to blow off the back of my head and off to who knows where.

I look at Bill and smile. "You all right?" he asks.

"You bet," I said. "Where was this 15 years ago, when I would have really loved it?"

Bill goes faster. We reach a small curve. I hope that the seat belt anchors and door latches are firmly in place.

Bill is a mind reader. "This car handles really well. It weighs about 3,000 lbs., so you have a lot of weight on the road. If you don't do something the car is not designed to do, it is very, very difficult to get into trouble."

Bill says he won't take the car anywhere near its top speed because the pavement might be a little wet.

What's the top speed? "Oh, about 140 mph."

Bill's been working on building and rebuilding cars full time since 1978, and as a hobby for most of his life. In his shop last week, he and his small crew were working on a Lamborghini, a space-age looking sports car. In height, it doesn't come up to Bill's belt buckle. It's a long car, and its angles and dips and dives exude speed.

So does the Corvette engine under the hood. "It'll do about 155 mph," Bill said. "And it doesn't make any difference what gear it's in, first or fifth, it's still putting out the RPMs at the end."

Bill has been specializing in "kit cars." He and his two employees have been getting the Lamborghinis in put-it-together pieces for the past several years from a supplier in England, but Bill has been adding so many of his own special touches on the cars that, along with a little dissatisfaction with the supplier, he's going to start making his own kits.

The putting-it-together can be tedious work at times.

"For some of these cars, it takes about 400 cars to put them together, and they'll sell for $15,000-$17,000," Kester said. For a Lamborghini, he and his staff put in "about 1,200 hours."

If you want to take the Lamborghini out for a test drive, you need to have a certified check with you for $55,000.

Kester and his wife, Sue, field from five to 15 calls a day from persons asking about the cars. When most hear the price, their interest drops. But he has 70 of his cars spread out over 30 states.

He expects the interest to pick up with people hearing about his recent award: Best Handcrafted Car at a huge show at Knott's Berry Farm in California.

Interest is already higher than before after Kester's cars appeared in two movies, including It Takes Two, which featured five of his cars. "I was told by the producers that my name would be placed in the archives, so if anyone else likes what they see, they can call me," Kester said. "From Kester's Fourth Street shop, we took a ride to a rural barn that Kester is using for storage. There, we see a 1937

Mercedes that he is going to re-restore. "The guy who did this (the original restoration) was proba-

Several ingredients make a twister twist

By KAY PECK
Staff Writer

Looking up at a tornado is something like staring into the mouth of God's vacuum cleaner. One can only pray that he is not an unwanted speck of dust. For all their mystical power and force, tornadoes are simply another phenomenon of nature. Understanding the characteristics of this phenomenon can help in protecting people and property from the destruction of tornadoes.

It is for good reason that tornadoes are a product of springtime. The drastic change in temperature when a cold front moves into a warm environment is necessary for the conditions to be favorable for a tornado.

"It really needs to be about 80 degrees (before the front moves in) to develop the big ones (severe storms)," said Hereford Fire Marshal Jay Spain. Spain is part of the crew which mans the Emergency Operation Center (EOC) and the weather watch team for the Hereford area. The EOC is used in any general emergency but is most commonly utilized during severe weather.

Tornadoes normally form on the leading southeast edge of an incoming cloud bank. The turbulence caused as hot air meets cool air creates the breeding ground for tornadoes. That is why tornadoes occur most frequently as a weather front first strikes.

The hot air which is caught underneath the approaching clouds rises, as hot air tends to do, and the cold air around these columns of hot air drops. This can cause areas of circular turbulence which are potential tornadoes.

The vast majority of these circular whirlpools in the clouds simply dissipate without developing into a deadly tornado or an awesome funnel cloud. When the turbulence matures into a full-grown funnel, a down-draft of cold air develops in the center of the hot air column. This creates the suction which gives a tornado its force and power.

Air flow eddies are not unique to tornadoes. The cute and playful "dust devils" which are frequently spotted on dry, hot days, are benign cousins to the tornado.

Although there is usually a lack of dust and debris which would make them visible, a similar phenomenon develops around the corners of tall buildings. These eddies are not caused by the interplay between hot and cold air but by air flow around solid structures.

Understanding of the cause and effects of tornadoes has increased immensely in recent years. KVII-TV meteorologist Steve McCauley is a recent graduate of Texas Tech University where extensive tornado studies are underway.

One aspect of this research is the development of architectural techniques which may make homes and structures more "tornado proof."

At one time, it was believed that the explosive effect that tornadoes appeared to have on structures was caused by a near vacuum created when the tornado hit. It is now believed that it is caused by powerful updrafts lifting the roofs from structures. When the roof is removed, the structure just falls apart.

When tornadoes cause structures to fall apart, they fall apart in a big way. A tornado which struck Hereford in 1971, caused damage estimated at $2.5 million.

The worst period of tornado history in the United States came on April 3 and 4, 1974. During that two-day period, 80 different tornadoes struck throughout the Midwest from the Gulf of Mexico on north to Chicago. A total of 380 people were killed with 6,000 injured and $9.6 billion in estimated damage.

Reps want to breathe new life into rural areas

WASHINGTON (AP) - Spurred by worries the nation's heartland communities could become ghost towns, lawmakers are considering new missions for agencies that succeeded once in bringing progress to rural America.

"Unless action is taken, virtually every citizen of the country will be forced to live in a metropolitan area," says Rep. Glenn English, a western Oklahoma Democrat who is studying ways to reverse the trend there, in Texas and in other states with large rural areas.

Hospitals are collapsing, banks are failing and family farmers are foreclosing across rural America - signs that rural congressmen point to when they say life is slipping from once vibrant communities.

English says 1 million people left rural America in 1986 and 1987.

He is convinced urban decay and rural decline are two sides of the same problem - and unless rural areas can be revived, pollution, poverty, congestion and crime will only worsen in metropolitan areas as more people are forced to seek jobs in the cities. English, chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on conservation, credit and rural development, is attempting to draft a package of reforms.

He has scheduled eight hearings in Washington, beginning June 6, and then will conduct field hearings in rural areas around the country, with possibly one in Texas.

Possible solutions, he said, include using the farm credit system to make venture capital available to cottage industries and businesses that relocate, and using the Rural Electrification Administration to install technology in rural schools that will allow them to offer more classes.

U.S. Rep Larry Combest (R-Lubbock) is a co-sponsor on the bill. "This legislation will help create an economic environment in rural America in which jobs will be created and rural areas will be revived," Combest said.

Combest feels a key provision would affect rural health care facilities

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest says the bill will give rural communities "a fighting chance."

"You go into some of these small towns and the main street is dead. It's turned almost into a ghost town. We don't want that to happen. We want to bring life back into it, somehow."

--Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, chairman, House Ag Committee by reducing the interest rates charged by the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA), basing the rates on local income figures, and offering hospitals financial help.

"This provision could significantly reduce the cost of health care services in rural area," Combest said. Rural hospitals, many of which are facing possible closure or cutbacks, are in critical need of financial help. This provision will help these vital facilities remain open. Combest said it was important that the bill pass.

"The odds against rural areas are so high at this time that we are seeing many businesses and hospitals stagnate or close their doors because of financial problems," Combest said. "The important provisions in this legislation would reduce the odds against rural areas and give our communities a fighting chance."

The budget deficit makes funding any new initiative tricky, English said. "But there's a possibility of providing the encouragement and the authority for many government programs to redirect their attention - to essentially modernize the programs to meet the needs the American family farmer and rural communities are facing today."

Rep. Kika de la Garza, a Texas Democrat and chairman of the Agriculture Committee, said English's initiative marks the first time the panel has looked beyond its jurisdiction and into such issues as education and health care.

Mailbox improvements are urged

The United States Postal Service is urging everyone to look at their mail receptacles during "Mailbox Improvement Week."

Hereford Postmaster Charles Britten said a week is set aside each May to remind customers on rural, city motorized and contract delivery routes to improve the appearance of their mailboxes.

"The purpose is to call attention to the need to provide mail receptacles that are conveniently located, safe to use, neat in appearance and designed to protect the mail from the weather," said Britten.

Britten said that while neat, attractive mailboxes improve the appearance of country roads and suburban streets, Mailbox Improvement Week means more than eye appeal.

"An old dented box may have sharp, cutting edges, or the receptacle is too small, too hard to reach or inaccessible by obstructions," Britten said. "The mail could be stamped 'undeliverable' and the customer would have to come to the post office to pick it up. We need the cooperation of our customers to maintain service at its highest level."

Postal regulations require that rural and contract route carriers must have access to mailboxes without having to leave their vehicles. The boxes must be located on the right-hand side of the road in the carrier's direction of travel where traffic conditions would endanger a carrier driving to the left to reach the boxes. The boxes must also conform to state laws and highway regulations.

Suburban curblines and rural roadside boxes should be 3 1/2 to 4 feet from the bottom of the box to ground level. Britten said the address should be clearly printed on the receptacle to assure more efficient delivery.

There are approved traditional and contemporary mailbox designs. A customer-designed rural box needs the prior approval of the postmaster before it can be installed.

Britten said that some mailbox supports, like heavy metal posts, concrete or farm equipment filled with concrete are so massive that they damage vehicles and cause serious injuries to people who accidentally strike them. The Federal Highway Administration has suggested mailbox mounting and support designs that post offices will share with their customers.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Sunday, May 21, the 141st day of 1989. There are 224 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 21, 1927, Charles A. Lindbergh landed his "Spirit of St. Louis" near Paris, completing the first solo airplane flight across the Atlantic Ocean. Lindbergh covered a distance of more than 3,600 miles in 33 1/2 hours.

On this date:

In 1542, Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto died while searching for gold along the Mississippi River.

In 1832, the first Democratic National Convention got under way in Baltimore. The delegates would nominate President Andrew Jackson for a second term.

In 1840, New Zealand was declared a British colony.

In 1881, Clara Barton founded the American Red Cross.

In 1904, jazz musician Fats Waller was born.

In 1919, a proposed federal amendment to give women the right to vote passed the U.S. House of Representatives by a vote of 304 to 89.

In 1924, 14-year-old Bobby Franks was murdered in a "thrill killing" by Nathan Leopold Jr. and Richard Loeb, two students at the University of Chicago.

In 1941, a German U-boat sank the American freighter SS Robin Moore in the South Atlantic.

In 1948, in a message to Congress, President Harry Truman urged statehood for Alaska.

In 1956, the United States exploded the first airborne hydrogen bomb over Bikini Atoll in the Pacific.

In 1959, the musical "Gypsy," inspired by the life of stripper Gypsy Rose Lee, opened on Broadway with Ethel Merman in the role of Gypsy's mother, Rose.

In 1968, the nuclear-powered submarine Scorpion, with 99 men aboard, was last heard from. (The remains of the sub were later found on the ocean floor 400 miles southwest of the Azores.)

In 1981, Socialist Francois Mitterrand assumed office as president of France.

In 1983, Deputed Testamony, a 14-to-one shot, won the Preakness Stakes in Baltimore, while Kentucky Derby winner Sunny's Halo finished sixth.

Today's birthdays: Novelist Harold Robbins is 73. Actor Raymond Burr is 72. Soviet human rights activist Andrei Sakharov is 68.

Thought for today: "Poverty is the great reality. That is why the artist seeks it." - Anais Nin.

KESTER

bly 'a painter," he said, lifting the plastic drop cloth off of the car to reveal a more-maroon-than-purple paint job. "Look at this. The door is misaligned, there are holes everywhere, it's just not a good job."

We walked to the front of the car. There's a Mercedes hood ornament, but the front fender has the script Ford on it. I started laughing and pointing.

"You noticed, huh?" Kester said.

Kester's eyes glow a little brighter when he walks over to another covered car: It's a 1978 Corvette that was banged up in an accident.

"There were some people that cried when we cut the body off, but we had to," he said, showing where the front and back fiberglass shells were lying against a nearby wall.

"We're going to take this and make it a 'Miami Vice' car. It's gonna be nice."

Kester is hoping that interest will pick up enough to let him expand from his rather cramped quarters, where he can only work on two cars at a time, to a bigger area where he can have the cars he's working on, and the ones to be worked on, together.

"People come in here and they see only a couple of cars, and think we don't do much. We do a lot, we just don't have room to put them all in at once. Maybe we can get a bigger place, hire some more people, and go to town."

Motion while standing still

Bill Kester stands beside a Lamborghini he and his crew have built from a "kit." The car is one of the most-inquired-about he has, but the $55,000 pricetag discourages many.

County to meet Monday

The Deaf Smith County Commissioners' Court will meet Monday at 9 a.m. at the courthouse in Hereford.

The agenda includes leasing a Telets system for the sheriff's office; permission to cross a county road in Precinct 2 with a water line; accept the resignation of County Agent Davy Vestal, who is moving to Baylor County, and permission to hire a replacement; air conditioning in the computer room; appointment of members to the county historical commission; and a budget workshop

"Certain diseases and debilitation occur in large cities where people live vertically, that you can't measure in the cost of a teacher, doctor or little hospital. All are environmental - mental health, social health, quality of life," Durenberger said.

In addition to the increasing pressure on cities from a more centralized population, more family farmers could face foreclosure if they lose the jobs in their communities that provide the extra income allowing them to remain in farming, Knutson said.

"That could accelerate the movement to large-scale agriculture," Knutson said.

Bringing vitality to rural America, he said, will involve investments "to improve the human capital base in rural areas ... to help rural residents be competitive in a rapidly advancing technological society and economy."

Like Durenberger, he cites the need for education, hospitals and emergency medical services if rural communities are to attract businesses that will create jobs.

English said people with an interest in rural communities recognize they've reached a critical point.

"We must address it today," English said, "before it's too late."

Ask Dr. Lamb

DEAR DR. LAMB: A year or so ago you answered a person's inquiry regarding itching in your column. You said it could be the liver. My buttocks have been itching for the past two years. Can you tell me who I can see about this?

DEAR READER: Your family doctor. I would think that your itch is not caused by your liver though. The itch from liver disease is usually caused from the retention of bile salts and is usually associated with some degree of jaundice. And since your itch is more localized, that would be against it being caused by the liver. If you had enough liver disease to cause an itch, you would probably have been much sicker within two years.

A more likely cause is a localized effect, which could even be as simple as the kind of detergent used in washing your underwear or the type of underwear you use. There are many causes for itching — not just one.

Dr. Lamb welcomes letters from readers with health questions. You can write to him at P.O. Box 19622, Irvine, CA 92713. Although Dr. Lamb cannot reply to all letters personally, he will respond to selected questions in future columns.

Make good nutrition a lifetime decision

CHICAGO--Today's busy schedules and changing lifestyles often tempt Americans of all ages to eat meals and snacks on the run--without considering the nutritious value of the foods they select.

Because we make so many food choices each day, it is important to make ones that will contribute to your good health. According to ADA President Darlene Dougherty, RD (registered dietitian), "Eating well not only will help you feel better today, but will improve your chances of maintaining your health the rest of your life. In fact, with so many nutritious foods available today, men, women and kids can be more in control and have an easier time of making food decisions."

Dougherty says, "It's never too late to take some small steps. For instance, when you wake up late, don't skip breakfast at home because you are behind schedule. This one meal can set you in the right nutritional direction for the rest of the day."

ADA offers some ideas for quick "easy-to-prepare" breakfasts: spread peanut butter on toasted whole-grain bread for extra protein, add fruit--bananas, strawberries, raisins--to cereal, or make a breakfast shake with milk and fresh fruit or juices.

At lunchtime, order dishes low in fat and cholesterol, such as fish or chicken, or select moderate portions of lean beef. Often "appetizer-sized" portions are just enough to fill you up. Broiled or baked entrees, salads and fresh, lightly-steamed, or raw vegetables are also good choices. To keep the calories low, order salad dressing on the side so you can control how much actually ends up on the salad.

When a "snack attack" hits in the afternoon, don't feel guilty--just make healthy choices. Snacks can give you a real nutrition boost. For example, fresh fruit, unsalted pretzels, unbuttered popcorn, cereal with fruit, or crunchy, raw vegetables can satisfy your hunger until dinnertime. If you enjoy eating between meals, but are afraid you're getting too many calories, eat a little less at meals to compensate for the extra calories.

Developing a few simple tricks will help to ensure a successful trip to the grocery store every time. Make a grocery list that includes all the foods necessary to prepare menus for one to two weeks. Stick to it and try to resist the temptation of special food displays. Eat something small, such as a piece of fruit or some plain crackers, before you leave for the store. Otherwise, if you are hungry, you will be likely to purchase items not on your list.

For kids, teens and adults, saying "yes" to good nutrition is easier than you might think. Because today's good nutrition is so important to tomorrow's good health, registered dietitians (RDs) remind you that good nutrition should be a lifetime decision. It's never too late to start!

Tort reform

Tort reform has passed the Texas House, now the Senate is left. Unless the "folks back home" let their senator know that they urge passage of SB-708, then the product liability laws will continue to hamper the Texas business economy.

Laws to protect injured consumers from unsafe or unsound products come under the heading of "product liability." In Texas, product liability law is largely the result of a common law built of individual court cases, not legislation. The result has been an unreasonable overreaching that has significantly eroded the Texas business climate--causing lost jobs and lost economic opportunities.

The real fight for reform appears to be a battle between trial lawyers, who reap large fees from these cases, and those who feel that fairness, common sense and economic necessity require a new product liability law.

Parties injured through the negligence or malice of a product's manufacturer deserve recompense, but the law should also recognize irresponsible behavior on the part of the user of the product. A person who ignores obvious risks or misuses a product should be required to bear the consequences of his/her own actions.

The reform will not only help business, it will benefit the consumer. Texas businesses are often forced to raise consumer prices in order to pay the cost of protecting themselves against the ever-increasing number of unfair lawsuits. It has been shown that some businesses are leaving the state and some are not choosing Texas because of the threat of unfair lawsuits. This reform legislation would discourage attorneys and parties from bringing frivolous lawsuits before our courts.

A healthy business climate needs many things working together: quality education, fair taxes, good transportation, competitive workers compensation, and sensible liability rules. The real cause in tort reform is a common-sense balance between protecting consumers, compensating truly wronged and injured parties, and ensuring a healthy growing economy.

If you agree that Texas is out of balance on product liability laws, write or contact your state senator. State Sen. Teel Bivins' address is P.O. Box 12068, Austin, TX. 78711. His Austin telephone number is 512-463-0131.

Justice--sure, swift

Our bile quickly reached a boiling point Sunday listening to a learned professor spoutin' his political statement about that horrible crime in New York's Central Park.

You're read about the crime: the brutal gang-rape of a 28-year-old woman jogging around the park's reservoir, a favorite location of U.S. film makers. A wolfpack composed of seven youngsters, ages 14 to 17, hit the woman over the head, gang-raped her, stabbed her a number of times, and left her for dead in her own blood. She's currently in a coma in a New York hospital.

What staggered the nation is the whimsy of those being held for the crime. Within minutes of their arrest, these hardened youths were heard "rapping" and laughing about what had happened. "They responded to this bloodcurdling assault on an innocent stranger as if they had just taken a five-ticket ride at Disney World," cited one reporter.

Our fuzzy-minded professor was claiming that "society" was to blame. Hogwash! This was not a crime by kids out-of-the-ghetto, kids that were hungry, poor, discriminated against. Four of the seven lived in apartments that featured doormen.

T'aint society that's to blame for such a heinous crime. The blame lies with the youngsters and their parents who failed to teach any semblance of the difference between right and wrong. This is one our puddle-headed, pontificatin' do-gooders can't blame on the downtrodden, the poor, the needy, the homeless, the unfortunates, the unemployed, or our poor welfare rules. The blame rests squarely on seven kids and their parents.

We agree with Rudolph Giuliani, the rackets-busting former U.S. attorney, who is running for mayor of New York City. He wants the death penalty not just for adult murderers but also for young teenagers who commit capital crimes.

"It's time to change the rules," the Manhattan lawyer says. Given the reality of today's urban violence, the famed prosecutor says those convicted in open-and-shut cases of aggravated homicide should be put to death. He thinks murderers as young as 14 should be eligible for the electric chair.

We agree. As slow as the criminal justice system works in this country nowadays, a 14-year-old sentenced to die in the execution chamber would be middle age by the time the sentence is carried out.

Justice that is not swift and sure is no justice at all!

The Penultimate Word

I FORGET

I have always wanted to be the best at something. I never was good in sports so that area is out. I never was a good student. In my college career, I crammed four years into six. They kept calling it a career and I thought that meant a lifetime.

I have finally found an area where I can excel. I am a good forgetter. No, I am a great forgetter. I am so good I can't remember ever forgetting anything.

Now some folks would laugh at my thinking being a good forgetter is something to brag about. With some though, I think it will become clear how valuable forgetting can be. Forgetting has its down side of course, but there is an upside.

I forget peoples' names and that is bad. I also forget all of the juicy stuff folks tell me in counseling. I forget it before I get a chance to gossip about it, and that is good. I forget it so completely that the next time I see them I am not thinking, "Oh, that is the guy who likes kinky sex." Forgetting ain't all bad.

Matter of fact, I think I will go on the road teaching the art of forgetting. There are seminars all the time trying to teach how to have a super memory. How about one trying to help us develop a super forgetter. If we could learn how to forget the right things, it would be more valuable than any memory course ever taught.

If we could learn to forget the slights and hurts people inflict upon us, life would be a much sweeter trip.

If couples could forget the little things, we could save a bunch of marriages. There are folks in this world who can remember burnt toast for 20 years.

If we could forget the things we forgot to confront when they happened, it would help. I tell my wife there are a thousand things I will never hear the last of that I never heard the first of. When they happened nothing was said. Ten years later the incident is remembered in great detail and, of course, I have forgotten.

For years I have worried about my lack of memory. Lately I have tried to worry about it, but could not remember what it was I was going to worry about. I had a great line to close this article, but I forgot it.

An AP News Analysis The word for today: Gorbachev

An AP News Analysis
By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) - Strains, stress and headaches over disagreements among allies are nothing new in the Atlantic alliance. But this time there's a difference - no more Mr. Bad Guy across the table.

For 40 years, internal discord in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization always has yielded to common concern about the perceived menace from Moscow.

Now that perception has changed. Two generations of Soviet cold warriors have given way to a masterful political salesman. And Mikhail S. Gorbachev's wares are making it more difficult for the Bush administration to sell its argument for modernizing NATO's short-range nuclear missiles.

As President Bush prepares for NATO's 40th anniversary summit at the end of May, the missile dispute looms as a dominant issue. So far, it defies compromise, with the United States and Great Britain opposed to immediate negotiations and determined to modernize the missiles, while the West German government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl insists on talks now.

Bush says he thinks the missile differences can be settled, that a lot of it is just smoke, and that "we'll have a smooth summit."

"This alliance is not going to fall apart," the president said. "It is going to stay together and be strong, and we'll work it out." Bush has tried personally, by telephone. Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney and Secretary of State James A. Baker III have, too.

As Cheney observed, "It's not the first time we've had differences ... You've got 16 sovereign nations with different viewpoints, different political situations at home."

But Gorbachev knows an opening when he sees one. When Baker met him in Moscow last Thursday, the Soviet president upped his ante a bit, saying he plans to cut about 500 weapons from the Warsaw Pact arsenal. It's a token - the Soviets are believed to have about 10,000 nuclear weapons, from bombs down to shells, in the European balance. NATO has about 4,000 that can be used at short range.

Baker called the surprise move a small step but a good one. He also said that NATO has scrapped five times that many nuclear weapons over the past decade.

Nevertheless, the timing of Gorbachev's ante can only add to the European pressure the administration is trying to withstand. By definition, short-range missiles are the ones that go off in the neighborhood, and to the Germans that means Germany, East or West. There is wide public support for negotiations to get rid of the missiles in West Germany, and that leaves Kohl little room to maneuver on the issue.

Bush will be in Brussels May 28-30 for a NATO summit followed immediately by a visit to Bonn for separate conferences with Kohl. The two men spent a half hour on the telephone on May 5, but neither budged. Gorbachev is to visit Bonn June 12-15.

By the numbers, the administration has a solid case, because the Soviet Union has a lot more to give or barter away. "We believe the vast Soviet superiority and Warsaw pact conventional forces must be reduced before we can discuss reductions in short range nuclear missiles," White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater said in summation of the administration stand.

But numbers aren't everything, and the net result is to cast the United States as the intransigent party, the side that won't even negotiate. That's an unfamiliar and uncomfortable posture.

Twenty years ago, President Richard M. Nixon traveled to Europe on much the same route Bush will take at the end of this month, and with a similar mission. NATO was in crisis then, too. President Charles De Gaulle had pulled France out of the military structure of NATO.

Nixon told the allies that he would be entering negotiations with the Soviet Union on a wide array of issues, and he promised "full and genuine consultation before and during those negotiations."

That's almost the opposite of the problem facing Bush as he heads for Rome, Brussels, Bonn and London.

In an appraisal of U.S. foreign policy this year, Nixon said he'd once been told that fear, not love, holds alliances together. He said fear of the Soviet Union has waned, "and what love may exist between economic competitors in the West is a very weak glue to hold an alliance together."

A top administration official summed up the difference another way, in one word: Gorbachev.

U.S. Chamber Voice of Business Safety in the skies

By Dr. Richard L. Leshner,
President

WASHINGTON -- The sabotage of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, last December has revived concerns about the safety of air travel, and prompted some critics to question the security efforts of U.S. carriers.

In truth, U.S. airlines are doing just about all that is humanly possible to prevent such atrocities and, given the situation they must operate in, they are remarkably successful.

Keep in mind that airports are public places and are, of necessity, accessible to large numbers of people every day. There is no possible way to make them as secure as a bank vault without effectively shutting down our air travel system.

In 1988, U.S. air carriers screened more than a billion people - which is more than four times the total U.S. population. In the process, they detected more than 3,000 weapons leading to the arrests of some 1,500 people. Since passenger screening became mandatory in the early 1970s, the airlines have thwarted 118 hijackings that we know of, and doubtlessly deterred many other attempts.

Some critics compare U.S. airline security unfavorably against that of El Al, the national airline of Israel. But El Al is a small operation, serving a small number of cities, and relatively homogeneous population. Also, the Israeli government invests substantial resources to assist El Al's security precautions. There can be no logical comparison of El Al to U.S. carriers, even though our airlines employ most of the same security precautions used by El Al.

Nor is it fair to criticize Pan Am or another airline for failing to disclose anonymous threats to passengers. The overwhelming majority of such threats are too vague to permit reaction, and 99.9 percent of them turn out to be hoaxes. To respond automatically to such threats would confer upon every terrorist group the power to disrupt civilian aviation. The airlines work closely with appropriate government agencies to sort out real terrorist threats from fake, and react accordingly.

There are some things our government could do to help U.S. carriers improve security. The Federal Aviation Agency should deploy more of its security resources to areas where the threat is greatest, such as Europe and the Middle East. Our government could speed up the development of technology to detect hidden explosives. We could do more to strengthen international agreements concerning airlines and airport security. And the U.S. government should impose upon foreign carriers now using U.S. airports the same security requirements that apply to U.S. carriers.

Beyond that, American citizens should know that U.S. air carriers have a remarkable degree of success in providing security coverage. U.S. airlines are as safe or safer than any in the world, even though we are more often the target of terrorists than other nations. We dare not and will not permit a handful of murderous thugs to dictate to Americans where they can and cannot go, and how they will get there.

Herd ends Panthers' playoff dream

By SAM W. WALLER
Sports Editor

SNYDER - The Fort Stockton Panthers played their first game ever in the state baseball playoffs Friday night at Moffett Field. The Hereford Whitefaces made sure it will be another year before the District 4-4A runner-up play in their second by taking the area round matchup 8-4.

The Herd was led by center fielder Clint Cotten, who went three for three at the plate with a double, a home run and four RBI as well as scoring the winning run. Jason Scott went the distance on the mound for the win, upping his season record to 13-0.

The Panthers' playoff inexperience showed early as the Herd sent eight men to the plate in the top of the first inning.

After Scott reached on an error by Fort Stockton shortstop Pete Martinez to lead off the game, Panther pitcher Aaron Ramirez walked Glenn Parker and Keith Brown back-to-back to load the bases with no outs. Roger McCracken then blasted a double off the right-center field fence to drive in two runs. After a ground out, Cotten sent another two-bagger of the fence to plate another pair of runs.

Fort Stockton coach Fernando Hernandez agreed that nerves may have affected the Panthers' performance in the early going.

"Aaron was nervous out there in the first," Hernandez said. "His curveball was bad, he wasn't getting it over at first and when he did get it in there, they hit it."

"The first inning was key," said Whiteface coach T.R. Sartor. "I was hoping it would happen for us. And a little playoff experience helps."

The Panthers settled down enough to come back with a pair of runs of their own in the bottom half of the opening stanza. After a one out single by Dave Borrego, Ramirez hit a roller to short. Borrego prevented an inning-ending double play by taking out second baseman Jared Victor on the slide. Craig Borrego followed that with a double to left which Parker got turned around on. Josue Villa picked up two of his three RBI with a single that would have been the third out if it had not taken a bad hop off Victor's face.

The game turned in to a pitchers duel after the first inning, with neither Scott or Ramirez allowing more than two base runners in an inning until the bottom of the fifth.

Scott got into and out of potentially disastrous jams in the third and fourth innings. Two straight singles by Martinez and Dave Borrego, the second of which Parker lost in the setting sun, and a passed ball on catcher Kyle Andrews put men on second and third with no outs, but a fly ball to right and two infield pop ups from the next three Panther batters allowed the Herd to escape.

In the fourth, a walk, a fielder's choice and a single put runners on the corners with two outs and the top of the Fort Stockton order coming to the plate, but a ground out ended the threat.

Hernandez felt it was more a case of the Panthers not taking advantage of the opportunities Hereford presented rather than Scott bearing down when the heat was on, "We knew he was good," Hernandez said, "but nobody's been able to strike us out all year. We knew he kept the ball down and that's what we worked on."

"Our whole mental approach has been to make contact with the ball and go with it. There (in the third inning) we swung up on the ball and got three straight pop ups."

Hereford threatened briefly in the third after singles from Russell Backus and Cotten. With one out, Andrews hit a chopper down the third base line. Third baseman Joaquin Banda fielded the ball standing on the bag for a force out on Backus and gunned Andrews down at first to snuff the rally.

Brown sliced a hit to right field in the Herd half of the fifth which Dave Borrego failed to make a backhand shoestrung catch on. The ball rolled to the fence for a triple.

McCracken almost brought Brown home with a smash back to the mound. Ramirez was able to knock the ball down and hold the runner before throwing to first for the second out and then struck out the next batter to retire the side.

Things got tight for the Herd in the bottom of the inning when Fort Stockton tied the score and threatened to blow the game open. Scott walked Dave Borrego on four pitches to open the inning then

With men on second and third and none out, Craig Borrego tapped a slow roller to short, allowing brother Dave to score. Backus overthrew McCracken and Borrego took off for second. McCracken tracked the errant throw down and fired to Backus covering at second to nail Borrego while Ramirez held at third.

Ramirez then scored on Villa's single to center. Another single by Peter Valenzuela and a balk call against Scott put runners on second and third with one out and a tie score.

Scott came back to strike out Felix Hernandez and Matt Sadler to preserve the deadlock.

Then the Herd came out in the sixth and manufactured what proved to be the winning run.

Cotten led off by working Ramirez for a full-count walk, the first given up by the Panther hurler since the third batter of the game, and then stole second. Then Andrews popped up down the third base line. Banda wandered into foul ground to make the play, but the wind took the ball, which landed less than two feet fair between Banda and two other infielders.

A single to left by Stuart Mitts brought Cotten home before the Panthers retired the next three batters for the inning.

"He's (Mitts) is a clutch kid," Sartor said. "He hasn't hit for a big average this year, but he's not a bad one to have up there at that time."

Scott came out intent on keeping the new lead, allowing only a base on balls in the sixth.

The Herd finally took control of the game in the top of the seventh.

Brown led things off by depositing his eighth homer of the year over the left-center field fence.

After a walk to McCracken and a strikeout, Cotten capped off his perfect night at the plate by jerking his second round trip of the year to the same part of the park.

After giving up a single to Craig Borrego and wild pitching him to second, Scott got a strikeout, a ground ball to shortstop and fly out to left field to end the contest.

"The first inning was definitely the difference in the game," coach Hernandez said. "That and the last one. We just don't have power hitters like they do."

Scott finished having allowed four runs, all earned, on 11 hits and three walks while recording 6 strikeouts.

For the Panthers, Ramirez went the distance allowing eight runs on 10 hits and four walks with nine strikeouts.

"He pitched real well after the first," Hernandez said. "Then in the seventh he hurt himself. He pulled something. I was about to pull him, but then he threw a couple of strikes and seemed fine."

The Whitefaces advanced to the regional round, where they will play the winner of the Everman-Brownwood series at a site and time to be determined.

In other area round playoff action, the Lubbock Estacado Matadors won their series against the Andrews Mustangs two games to one, in Midland. Andrews won the second game of the series Friday afternoon 4-0, forcing a third game, which Estacado took 5-2, Friday night. The Matadors will face the winner of the Crowley-Leander series.

Who's the top dog?

Hereford players show who is No. 1 in their minds during the first inning of their area playoff game against Fort Stockton at Snyder. The Herd took a 4-0 lead in the first inning, watched the Panthers come back and tie the game in the fifth, then struck for a run in the sixth and three more in the seventh to take an 8-4 win. The Herd will play the winner of the Everman-Brownwood series in regional play next week.

Ranger scouts still beat bushes

ARLINGTON (AP) - The Texas Rangers' most important game of the season could very well be played tonight, but it likely won't be in the same stadium the Rangers are playing in.

It might be in Frankston, Texas, or Pocatello, Idaho, or Yee Haw Junction, Fla. It might be in Little Rock, Ark., or Ardmore, Okla., or Rockford, Ill. The game might involve the next Nolan Ryan, or the next Wade Boggs, or maybe just the next Steve Buechele.

And, wherever it's played, whether it's a well-lighted field in a well-to-do suburb, a swampy cow pasture in southern Montana or a cornfield in the middle of Iowa, you can be sure a major-league scout will see it played.

Ryan and Boggs and Dwight Gooden and Don Mattingly put people in the seats, but scouts are the lifeblood of any solid major-league organization. They are the men who find the Ryans and the Goodens and the Mike Schmidts, whether they're starring in the College World Series or holding their own on a rock-strewn high school infield in West Virginia.

The scouts of the world - the Hugh Alexanders and the Doug Gassaways and the Tony Robellos - are the bottom-line reason fans are going to be entertained at the ballpark.

"The scouts are always the unsung heroes," Rangers general manager Tom Grieve said. "The most important group in our chain of command is the scouts, because if they don't find the players, we can't develop them."

That's why Grieve was quick to move once the Rangers' sale to the George W. Bush-Rusty Rose conglomerate became official recently. Grieve almost immediately asked for a contract extension for assistant general manager Sandy Johnson, who is in charge of the club's scouting and player personnel departments. The new owners just as quickly approved the motion, signing Johnson through 1992.

Johnson's extension translates into security for the scouts in his command and sends the message that the new owners intend to maintain the club's commitment to finding, drafting and developing the best young talent available.

"There was no real feeling of concern (about the new owners) here in our offices," Grieve said.

"But I know how those guys (scouts) think. They're out there on their own, and their only contact with the organization usually comes through phone calls with Sandy or the few times during the year when he comes through to cross-check one of their players. When there's a change like we had, no matter how well they feel they're doing, there's a lot of questions and a lot of uncertainty."

Johnson is seldom available this time of year. That's not surprising, with the amateur free-agent draft coming up June 5-7. One day recently, Johnson was in Baton Rouge, La., along with farm director Marty Scott, to help conduct a tryout camp.

Gassaway was expected to join them later. The road is a scout's life. Sagging hotel mattresses, coffee shop breakfasts and another hot prospect, waiting to show his stuff at the next one-Dairy-Queen hamlet down the highway.

"Scouts don't get rich," Grieve said. "It's not a glamorous life. But it's a life that the good ones love. They love the travel, the camaraderie on the road, the lifestyle, living in hotels, going to two, three, four games a day, battling the weather, talking to their bird dogs, digging up prospects. They don't get stale. Every year there's a new group of players and a new challenge. It's a fresh new start every spring."

The Rangers spend about $1.5 million annually on scouting players, and that doesn't include another $700,000 or so that will go toward signing their eventual draft choices. They are banking on the judgments of scouts like Gassaway and Brian Lamb and Omar Minaya. They, in turn, are banking on the Rangers.

"I never worked for a club that didn't have any money, or I couldn't have signed any players," Alexander, who has been scouting for more than 50 years, told Sports Illustrated in a recent article. "It wouldn't have been any fun."

The garrulous Alexander, a promising player himself until he lost his left hand in a West Texas oilfield accident when he was 20, is the prototype major-league scout. If a youngster can play, Alexander will know it when he sees him.

"They're all very proud and independent guys, who aren't wishy-washy, who speak their minds, stick up for their players and will fight to the finish for their organization,"

Grieve said. "They couldn't last that long if they didn't have an undying love for baseball. If they didn't have that love, they'd go crazy."

"It takes a certain breed of guy to really succeed and enjoy scouting. A lot of people couldn't do it. They wouldn't like the travel or the pressure or the frustration. It's a tough job. The good ones work from dawn to sundown and then catch a night game."

The key is to get the players. The first player Alexander ever signed for Cleveland was pitcher Allie Reynolds.

"An eye for talent has to be developed," Grieve said. "You're not born with it. But the feel that the veteran guy has is so important. They have so many type players cataloged in their minds, and they compare the player they're watching to that mental catalog. Calculated guesses - that's all they are. But guys who can't do that weed themselves out. It's an interesting art. It's not always what they see now, but what they see for that player in the future."

The scout's greatest satisfaction doesn't come in the weekly paycheck (the top ones will make $35,000-$55,000 a year). It comes in picking up the newspaper and checking the box scores to see if that young, raw talent they signed four years earlier has helped the big club win a game in Kansas City or Los Angeles or New York.

Of course, they might have to drive 20 miles or more to a country grocery store to find a newspaper big enough to carry box scores. But that just goes with the territory.

NCAA hits KU with probation

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) - There won't be a sixth national championship for Kentucky in the near future. But there will be a basketball program this fall.

Kentucky's basketball program, which has produced five national titles and more wins than any other college, was penalized Friday for the third time by the NCAA.

The NCAA said it could have justified shutting down the basketball program entirely, but instead put the Wildcats on probation for three years and banned them from postseason competition the next two years for recruiting and academic rules violations.

"Make no mistake, the penalties are serious and they are damaging," university president David Roselle said.

However, the school avoided a repeat of 1952, when the basketball program was shut down for a year because of eligibility violations and payments to players. In 1976, the program was placed on probation for two years because of improper benefits to players.

Still, the penalties announced Friday could have long-lasting effects. "It will take years for them to recover from that, even with the emphasis and resources that they have," Mississippi coach Ed Murphy said.

Two players, Chris Mills and Eric Manuel, were declared ineligible for their part in the violations. Mills, last season's second-leading scorer, was barred from playing again at Kentucky. Manuel, who sat out this past season because of questions about his college-entrance exam, was declared ineligible at any NCAA school.

In addition, Kentucky was banned from television appearances next season, limited to three scholarships for each of the next two years and ordered to forfeit all money it received from the 1988 NCAA tournament.

Eddie Sutton, who resigned as coach in March, said he was surprised by the severity of the penalties.

"I realize the statement by the NCAA says the sanctions could have been more severe without the cooperation of the university. Somehow, I wonder how," he said.

NCAA executive Steve Morgan said the infractions committee seriously considered a ban on regular-season play next year and perhaps the year after, as well as a ban on television for a second year. Other possible penalties that weren't imposed included a ban on all scholarships and a ban on off-campus recruiting.

The NCAA report said the penalties were softened because the university cooperated with investigators and took steps to correct some of the problems. The NCAA also took into consideration the resignations of Sutton and athletic director Cliff Hagan.

Although he wasn't mentioned in the report, Sutton said he accepted some of the blame.

"Even though I have been proven innocent of any wrongdoing, I still have to take part of the responsibility because I was the head basketball coach," he said.

Roselle said the university has no plans to appeal the sanctions.

"The integrity of the university remains intact," he said. "We will have a basketball program that's in compliance with NCAA regulations. In other words, we'll play fair on and off the court."

Roselle said the school hasn't decided whether to appeal the eligibility rulings on Mills and Manuel. Mills' father said Friday that his son is considering transferring to UCLA.

In addition to the infractions involving Mills and Manuel, the NCAA also cited a host of other, more minor violations such as providing improper trips, housing and inducements like free T-shirts to recruits.

The NCAA took no action against Sutton, but placed Casey on conditional probation for five years.

"I'll proclaim my innocence until the day I die," Casey said. "I never intentionally broke any NCAA rules or violations."

Morgan said it will be up to the Southeastern Conference to determine if Kentucky should forfeit any regular-season games. It's already been a costly affair for Kentucky, though.

The university spent more than $350,000 conducting its own investigation, and the university's Athletics Association will lose more than $1.6 million as a result of the penalties.

Leadoff by Cotten

Hereford center fielder Clint Cotten takes a lead off second base in front of Fort Stockton shortstop Pete Martinez during Friday's area playoff game at Snyder. Cotten had just stroked a two-run, first-inning double to give the Herd a 4-0 lead. Cotten hit a two-run homer in the seventh that insured the Herd's 8-4 win.

AGRICULTURAL MILESTONES

IT SEEMS INCREDIBLE to some of us but there are actually livestock producers today who have never seen a screwworm. These insects plagued the livestock industry until relatively recent years, causing untold misery and death to livestock and losses of hundreds of millions of dollars to the industry.

A screwworm is the larva of the screwworm fly which lays its eggs in wounds of animals. The eggs hatch and the worm feeds on the tissue in the wound until it matures, when it drops out and develops into a fly. As more and more eggs are laid in the wound, the worms feed on the living tissue and the wound grows ever larger. Ultimately, unless discovered and treated by the livestock producer, the animal dies.

The screwworm was the subject of Texas Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin No. 12, published in September, 1890. The station veterinarian, after two years of almost daily observation of the pest during the summer months, described the fly and most troublesome sites of infestation in various animals, discussed some preventive measures that could be taken, and suggested various treatments.

Elimination of the insect pest — screwworm fly — was the most dramatic pest control effort ever developed for the benefit of the livestock industry in Texas. It was accomplished through use of atomic energy and a peculiarity in the sex life of this pest.

An Aggie-trained entomologist working with the USDA observed that the screwworm fly only mated once. He and another scientist determined that low-level radiation of the screwworm larva caused sterility. So, they reasoned, why not overwhelm native wild flies with sterile males, and breed the flies out of existence?

The method worked, when tried on the island of Curacao in 1956. Then the Florida Peninsula was rid of screwworm flies, starting in 1958. In September 1961, the Southwest Animal Health Research Foundation, (SWAHRF) was formed to raise producer funds to test this procedure in Texas.

With livestock producers voluntarily contributing 50 cents per animal unit, the $3 million they raised was leveraged into enough money to launch the program. It took years of determined effort on the part of many people, but the last screwworm fly case in Texas was reported on Aug. 31, 1982.

A joint effort with Mexico has pushed the screwworm fly south of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. Guatemala and Belize have joined the effort. Plans are being studied to push the quarantine line all the way through Central America.

The success of the program is a tribute to research — developed modern technology and the very best cooperative effort of livestock producers.

Haying, grazing okayed here

Deaf Smith County has been approved for emergency haying and grazing of Acreage Conservation Reserve (ACR) and conserving Use Acreage (CU), from June 1-Oct. 31.

The approval does not cover acreage that is under a Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) contract.

The approval was granted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture based on below-normal moisture and above-normal temperatures from Jan. 1-April 30. Consideration was also given for losses caused by the same conditions that affected the county from Oct. 1-Dec. 31, 1988.

Producers planning to graze or hay ACR and/or CU during the summer need to stop by the county ASCS office to designate the acreage that will be hayed and/or grazed. The request must be filed prior to haying and grazing.

The acreage may be grazed by the producer's livestock or by another producer's livestock with the permission of the enrolled producer.

The acreage may be hayed, green-chopped or made into ensilage for feeding to the producer's livestock, feeding another producer's livestock, or stored for future use.

Producers will be able to recover the cost of installing temporary fences, pumping water, cutting, raking, baling or other processing. These costs should not exceed the normal and reasonable cost of removal.

Cover crops established on these acreages shall not be harvested for grain or seed. Acreages that are hayed or grazed must be protected from wind and water erosion throughout the calendar year.

Wheat field day Tuesday

Persons interested in wheat research can meet Thursday at the Texas A&M University Center at 6500 Amarillo Boulevard West in Amarillo and the USDA Conservation and Production Research Laboratory located three-fourths of a mile west of Bushland.

Registration for the morning program starts at 8 a.m. and presentations will begin at 8:30. During the day, commercial and noncommercial Certified Pesticide Applicators can get four continuing education units (CEUs) required for license renewal, as well as learn the latest information about the 1989 wheat crop, wheat varieties, conservation tillage, wheat diseases, insects attacking wheat, weed control in wheat, and fat and sodium in the diet.

According to Dr. G.B. Thompson, director of research and Paul Gross, district agent at the A&M Center, a morning session conducted by the Texas Department of Agriculture and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service will qualify licensed commercial and noncommercial applicators for three CEUs. Five CEUs are required by Dec. 31, 1989.

The afternoon tour program at Bushland will have talks on integrated pest management that will qualify for an additional CEU. In order to qualify for any CEUs both morning and afternoon sessions must be attended.

One hour of credit will be presented by Levon Harman and Winn Cox with the Texas Department of Agriculture on "Laws and Regulations" and the "Right to Know Act." The other two hours of credit will be for discussions on proper nozzle selection, sprayer calibration, and control of drift. The topics will be discussed by Texas Agricultural Extension Service and Experiment Station staff as well as qualified industry representatives. The sessions will conclude at 11:30 a.m.

Dr. B.A. Stewart, research director at Bushland, says pretour activities will start at 1 p.m. and tours will start at 1:30. There will be two air conditioned buses operating continuously to transport people on two separate tours.

The first tour will have stops at the irrigated wheat nursery where Drs. Kenneth Porter and David Worrall will discuss wheat breeding research.

Other stops on that tour will be a discussion of using wheat for hay by Dr. Steve Winter and talks on integrated management of insects and diseases by Drs. Jerry Michels and Charlie Rush. People taking the second tour will hear Gary Peterson describe the 1989 dryland wheat nursery and problems affecting dryland wheat.

Dr. Paul Unger will show plots of no-tillage in a wheat-sorghum-fallow crop rotation. Dr. Allen Wiese will discuss how recent herbicide label changes are affecting integrated weed management in no- and conservation tillage systems.

Dr. Judy Flynn, district extension director and Wynon Mayes, Alby Peters, Donna Brauchi, and Beverly Harder, county extension agents-home economics, will be on hand to discuss dietary guidelines at the headquarters building. They will be giving information on sodium and fat in the diet. Lemonade will be served. The Texas Wheat Producers Association will sponsor the event.

Yeutter urged to open CRP lands

WASHINGTON (AP) - Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter is being urged to think hard about opening up millions of acres of long-term conservation land to haying and grazing in drought-stricken areas.

Yeutter is under pressure from Capitol Hill and other quarters to approve haying, grazing or both on highly erodible land taken from crop production under the Conservation Reserve Program.

But Kenneth A. Cook, vice president for policy at the Center for Resource Economics, and Justin R. Ward, senior project associate of the Natural Resources Defense Council, said Wednesday it is premature to open up the CRP as a source of livestock feed.

In the 1988 drought, the Agriculture Department approved haying on millions of acres of CRP land in dozens of states. But none has been approved for haying or grazing in 1989.

Cook and Ward said in a letter to Yeutter that several major farming areas face the possibility of a second consecutive year of severe drought.

"It is early in the growing season and the threat will not materialize if moisture-deficient areas in Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and other states receive the amount of rainfall the National Weather Service has recently forecast," the letter said.

It is understandable, Cook and Ward said, that many farmers, particularly livestock producers, are extremely anxious at this time.

But they told Yeutter: "We urge you to proceed with deliberation and caution in any decision to open the CRP. The public has already invested billions of dollars in the CRP and will invest billions more in the years ahead."

Such investment, Yeutter was told, could be compromised if USDA does not establish "clear, consistent criteria and procedures" for deciding on the emergency use of CRP lands.

More than 28 million acres have been set aside under the CRP and is supposed to remain out of production for 10 years. The contracts specify that protective grass and trees must be planted to project the fragile soil from wind and water erosion.

In return, farmers get initial financial help from USDA to plant the grass and trees. Each year they get federal rental payments, averaging around $50 per acre. These currently cost about $1.5 billion a year.

"Any decision to open the CRP in selected counties will result in requests and increased pressure for similar treatment of additional counties," Cook and Ward said. "And since drought afflicts some part of the country every year, it is safe to assume that you will face similar decisions about the CRP year in and year out."

Here's a tax tip: donations and medical expenses paid by credit card are deductible the year they are charged, not necessarily when they are incurred or paid off.

- Beef is ideal for modern, low-calorie diets, because today's leaner cattle provide beef that is, on the average, 10% lower in calories than it was in years past!
- Beef is more digestible than vegetables!
- A 3 oz. serving of lean beef supplies only 8% of an adult's daily calorie requirements - but 45% of the daily protein requirements!
- Beef provides iron - and also serves as a catalyst to help you get the most iron out of other foods!

Saudis import more food

WASHINGTON (AP) - If you're a North Dakota barley farmer, a Texas sheep producer or a North Carolina tobacco grower, the Agriculture Department has some reasons for keeping an eye on Saudi Arabia.

Scores of other agricultural and food processing operations also are involved in the growing Saudi Arabian market, says John A. Williams, U.S. agricultural trade officer in Jeddah.

Over the last five years, Saudi food imports averaged nearly $5 billion annually, up from $1.5 billion in 1977. Williams says the growth has been fueled by "the presence of thousands of European and U.S. expatriates and elaborate consumer food subsidies" financed by Saudi Arabia's oil wealth.

"An influx of immigrant workers in the mid-1970s dramatically changed Saudi consumer spending patterns," Williams writes in the April issue of AgExporter magazine.

In 1987, Saudi Arabia, which has a population of about 11 million, imported about 70 percent of its food. Tops in value were: barley, live sheep, tobacco, milk, poultry, meat, rice, spices, canned vegetables, fruit juices, fresh vegetables, sugar and corn.

More than 10 percent of the agricultural imports are from the United States, making Saudi Arabia the top cash customer in the Middle East for U.S. farm products.

Consumer subsidies are used to distribute national income, derived almost entirely from petroleum, Williams said.

In 1987, oil accounted for 92 percent of Saudi Arabia's total exports of $25 billion. Total imports were put at $19 billion, including $4.5 billion worth of agricultural products. The U.S. share was about $486 million.

Williams said the foreign influence has been felt deeply and has helped change Saudi food-buying customs and diets.

"The Saudi population rarely eats out," he said. "The usual practice is to have parties at home. Even so, with a population of 4 million foreigners, the number and variety of restaurants have increased over the past few years."

Besides many European, Lebanese, Chinese and other ethnic cuisines, fast-food places serving hamburgers, fruit juice, chicken, pizza and sandwiches are becoming more widespread.

Competition for the thriving Saudi food business is also growing, with U.S. interests vying with European, Asian and South American suppliers.

The European Economic Community, in particular, places a high priority on expanding sales of farm products to Saudi Arabia," Williams said. "It has used aggressive market development activities and a regular flow of trade delegations to widen its lead over the United States in this market."

Saudi Arabia, the world's leading barley importer, has been the target of fierce competition among the EEC, Australia, Canada and the United States. In 1987, the United States captured a third of the Saudi barley market with the help of subsidized sales under the department's Export Enhancement Program.

7-state numbers are higher

WASHINGTON (AP) - Cattle being fed for the slaughter market as of May 1 in the seven major beef states totaled 7.85 million head, up 4 percent from a year ago and 8 percent more than inventories of two years ago, says the Agriculture Department.

The placement of new cattle and calves in fattening pens last month was reported at 1.53 million head, up 1 percent from a year ago but down 9 percent from two years ago, the department said Wednesday.

Marketing of "fed" cattle in April totaled 1.57 million head, down 2 percent from a year ago but up 2 percent from two years ago.

As of May 1, feedlot inventories were larger than a year earlier in Colorado, Kansas and Texas, but were less in Arizona, California, Iowa and Nebraska. The seven states produce about three-fourths of the nation's beef.

Hints from Heloise

GIFT IDEA

Dear Heloise: This year I decided to give birthday gifts with a personal touch. I melted small bars of soap and poured the melted soap into little plastic molds. The soap shapes popped right out.

When someone's birthday is around Easter, I make rabbits or flowers or if the birthday falls in February, I make little hearts. So far, everyone really enjoys receiving them. — Sarah M., Westbrook, Maine

REPLACING LIGHT BULBS

Dear Heloise: It seems that whenever I am doing an important task, the light bulb burns out. Usually I am in a hurry to change it but the bulb is still hot.

I take the new bulb out of the corrugated cardboard and place the cardboard over the old light bulb and unscrew it. This way I don't get burned and the bulb can be disposed of immediately. — Ralph Potts, Rochester, N.Y.

HELPFUL NOTEBOOK

Dear Heloise: I keep a notebook filled with all the information on my home. I wrote down all the floor and window dimensions, which makes purchasing new curtains and flooring a snap. I added the different paint colors and brands that were used in each room and where they were purchased.

When I originally bought the paint, the paint-store salesman gave me a booklet with all the different colors so I cut out the ones we used and glued them in my notebook. I also kept a swatch of the wallpaper that we used in the kitchen. — Meg Brown, Casper, Wyo.

Having all of this information handy will save you time and frustration in years to come. You are one smart cookie! — Heloise

Cook presents program

Nicolynn Cook presented a program entitled "Money Saving Tips" when members of Nouvelle Ami Study Club met recently in the home of Charlotte Collier. Serving as co-hostess was Mary Ann O'Rear.

Wearing their favorite hat, members answered roll call by telling about their favorite movie.

During the business meeting with President Missy Wilcox presiding, minutes of the previous meeting were read by Laurie Paetzold, secretary. Plans were made for the club to attend the production of "TEXAS" and for members to host the annual Rhinestone Roundup June 17 at the Cowgirl Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Center.

Also, a fundraising committee was organized.

New members were introduced and told the club about their families.

Those present included Micki Baulch, Collier, Cook, Alison Esqueda, Emily Knight, Elizabeth Lookingbill, Jodi Meyer, Lauri Paetzold, Laurie Paetzold, Karon Pettiet, Sandra Roberts, Mary Rose, Wilcox and Kim Sliney.

Memorial poppies to be offered

Mayor Wes Fisher signed a proclamation stating that Wednesday will be Poppy Day. Local American Legion Auxiliary members will canvass the town that day offering the poppies for donations, which will be used for rehabilitation and child welfare by the Auxiliary. Alice Gilleland, poppy chairman, seated with Mayor Fisher, watches him sign the proclamation as does her grandson, Aron, and Auxiliary members Clara Trowbridge and Ethel Logan.

Pancake supper set Friday

The public is invited to an all-you-can-eat pancake supper from 5-8 p.m. Friday, May 26, at the Hereford Senior Citizens Center, 426 Ranger.

Tickets are priced at $3 per person. Children under six years of age will be admitted free of charge.

Special poppies help veterans

Poppy Day will be held Wednesday from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. locally as American Legion Auxiliary members accept donations for poppies.

The women will canvass the city in search of donations and their headquarters will be Hereford State Bank. Proceeds will help support veterans and their families and the VA Medical Center.

Hundreds of disabled veterans are busily fashioning red crepe paper poppies, the memorial flower worn each year during Memorial Day and Veterans Day in honor of America's war dead.

The American Legion Auxiliary pays these hospital-confined men for making little red blooms by hand—money they would not have were it not for this program.

Only a small percent of the public really knows how and where the poppies they see are made. All poppies for the Department of Texas are made at the Temple VA Medical Center.

The disabled men look forward to making the flowers as a relief from hospital boredom. They are also well aware that the funds derived from the poppies each year can only be used for rehabilitation and child welfare by the Auxiliary.

"The large sums contributed by a sympathetic public have done untold good in alleviating suffering and hardship of the veteran and his or her family," said Alice Gilleland, local poppy chairman.

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — The world's oldest flag design belongs to Denmark.

The flag, which shows a large white cross on a red field, has been in continual existence as a national emblem since the 13th century.

According to legend, the Danish flag dates back to the time of King Valdemar II, who used a red banner with a white cross as his battle flag during crusades against pagan invaders.

The flag was called Dannebrog, literally meaning Danes' Cloth, and has remained unchanged for more than 700 years.

Dear Friends:

We live in the greatest part of the United States, the Texas Panhandle. And, regardless of where we went to college - or if we went - each of us can claim West Texas State University as 'our University' because it is the University of this region.

You are aware the Texas Senate passed a resolution authorizing a study of whether West Texas State University should merge with either the University of Texas or Texas A&M systems. Also, there is a House resolution that includes studying a merger with Texas Tech University.

Now 'our University' is undertaking that study, and it is destined to have a dramatic impact on the Texas Panhandle - whatever the findings. An important part of the West Texas State University Regents study is to investigate the pros and cons - reacquaint ourselves with all the wonderful things about West Texas State University, and define what we would like to see happen in the future.

We want to know what you think! Take time to study the enclosed questionnaire, and then check your answers. We welcome your comments. Please return the completed questionnaire to me no later than June 5, 1989.

Thank you so much.
Sincerely yours,
Winfred Moore, chairman
External Constituencies Committee

Northwest PTA installs officers

The closing meeting of the year of Northwest School PTA was held recently with awards presented and new officers were installed.

A special award went to Yolanda Valdez, manager of McDonald's Restaurant, for her participation in the Adopt-a-School program with the school. The plaque cited the local eatery for its "outstanding encouragement and support of PTA and parental involvement in the public school."

Gearn, membership chairman; Lupe Balderaz, assistant vice president; Cheryl Davison, secretary; Eva Villegas, treasurer; Cara Dearing, historian; Mary Garcia, teacher advisor; Dianna Carlise, room mother chairman; and Rosemary Davila, hospitality.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I hope you will alert your readers to a scam that is sure to entrap some newly widowed women. I didn't fall for it because a few things didn't add up, but I'm sure other grief-stricken widows will be taken in if they aren't warned. This is the way it happened:

I received a phone call from a man who identified himself as James Mitchell. He said my husband, who had died a month before, had ordered a diamond ring for me from a jeweler in Dallas. He said my husband had put down a $500 deposit and asked if I'd like to send the balance, $2,473. He offered to have Federal Express pick up my postal money order the next day. I said, "That will be fine."

After giving it some thought, I was sure that my husband would not purchase a ring in Dallas and that I was being conned. I phoned Mr. Mitchell a few hours later and told him that I would have the check ready, but I needed proof that my husband had indeed ordered the ring. When he saw that I was backing out, he tried to pressure me by saying I must take the ring because my name had been engraved on the inside. When I told him I didn't want it, he tried to sell me something else. When that didn't work, he became annoyed and said, "I'll get back to you tomorrow." Of course, I never heard from him again.

The detectives in Dallas are now trying to track down this world-class, state-of-the-art crook. So beware, folks, he is out there someplace, combing the obituaries, looking for widows. If you should receive a phone call, notify the district attorney and the Better Business Bureau at once.--Boston

DEAR BOSTON: Thanks for the alert. If anyone out there has been contacted by this man, please let me know, too.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I'm writing about the Wyoming woman who said her husband complained because she was too hot in bed.

Lest you get the wrong idea, she hastened to make it clear that it was her body temperature that he was complaining about. He said she was like a "small furnace" and the heat from her body kept him up at night.

Generally you consult an authority when you don't know the answer. You should have done so this time, Ann, instead of suggesting year-round air conditioning or a body pillow. A physician would have told you to advise the woman to see her doctor and get her metabolism checked. An overactive thyroid can produce the symptoms she complained about.

I have been reading and enjoying your column for years and it is a pleasure to second-guess a lady as smart as you. Carry on!--J.M., M.D. (Boston)

DEAR J.M.: The "smart lady" didn't exactly cover herself with glory when she came up with that answer. At least 500 physicians let me know I goofed. My thanks to all who wrote. I'll sign this--Tomato Face in Chicago

DEAR ANN LANDERS: We all know that coffee can keep some people up at night, but how many of your readers are aware that chocolate can do it, too?

Tolerance varies according to the individual, but for me a small bonbon at bedtime and I will have counted all the sheep in New Zealand by dawn. Pass it on, Annie.--Kurt S., Boulder, Colo.

DEAR KURT: Thanks for the tip. Happy ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~.

Keep food frozen when power fails

A well-stocked freezer is an efficient and economical way to plan and manage meals. However, when your power fails, this same well-stocked freezer can result in a

If the food is completely thawed but still cold to the touch, use it immediately or dispose of it. costly loss of time and money.

The Home economists at Con-Agra Consumer Frozen Food company (Armour, Banquet, Morton, Patio and Chun King) offer the following tips to protect your food in this emergency:

-Do not open the freezer door unless absolutely necessary, and then only for the shortest time possible. A full or nearly full freezer will preserve food with very little thawing for 12 to 20 hours, provided the door is not opened.

Even if you are confident the power will be restored within 24 hours, bear in mind that the freezer may not be able to bring a full load of food back down to zero or below before spoilage begins.

-Fifty pounds of dry ice, placed in the freezer soon after the power failure, will prevent thawing for two to three days if the door is closed immediately and not reopened until two or three hours after the power is restored.

Dry ice has a temperature of 110 degrees below zero Fahrenheit and must be handled with heavy gloves. Because of its vapors, dry ice also must be handled in a well ventilated room. Do not attempt to chip or cut the ice, because a stray chip might cause a freezer-burn on your skin. When placing the dry ice in the freezer, be certain heavy cardboard lies between it and the food, preventing direct contact.

-The fuller your freezer, the less chance your food will rapidly thaw. Fewer food products means faster thawing time.

-After your power is restored, check the contents for damage.

If the food is partially thawed, but still has some ice crystals, it usually can be refrozen. In the case of meat and poultry, it is best to cook them before refreezing. However, frozen dinners, seafood, cream-sauced foods, cream-filled cakes and cream pies must be used immediately or discarded even if they contain many ice crystals.

A snake has no ears. However its tongue is extremely sensitive to sound vibrations.

Evergreens are considered best when planting trees to block wind and cold from a house.

YOUR EYES

PLAY BALL:

In all competitive sports such as tennis, baseball or golf, the eyes are constantly in motion, shifting their gaze from near to more distant positions as the ball is in play. The good athlete needs the ability to change focus and follow the moving ball with great speed.

The ability to change focus is an innate function of the normal eye, but the speed at which you can do it is a learned function. Many professional athletes are able to increase their focusing speed through professional vision training, speeding their reaction time "to the ball".

Many weekend athletes also want a quicker response as the pace of their favorite game accelerates. Through a series of carefully programmed eye exercises, your focusing speed can be increased, too, and your game improved.

Of course, your optometrist will first examine your eyes completely so that any other visual malfunctions can be corrected before training is begun.

Extension News

BY BEVERLY HARDER

The Deaf Smith County Extension Homemakers are working with the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation to conduct a survey of the local use of child safety seats in vehicles. You may have seen several extension homemakers, senior 4-H'ers and Camp Fire volunteers in orange safety vests positioned in high-traffic locations this past month, counting the number of children in cars that were actually buckled into safety seats.

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation has conducted urban studies that show that only half of children under the age of four actually ride in child safety seats. The survey conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service providing data on the percentage of Deaf Smith County children who use child safety restraints is in. There are 12 percent using safety seats correctly. In real numbers that means that of the 1,894 children in Deaf Smith County, ages birth to four years old, 227 of them are correctly buckled into child safety seats at the time of the survey.

That is good news for those 227 children. The bad news is that the 1,667 children who rode unrestrained or incorrectly restrained are at high risk.

In addition to taking the survey, extension homemakers volunteers will be presenting programs and information that will promote the correct use of child passenger safety restraints.

This program is part of a national goal to have 70 percent of vehicle passengers properly restrained by safety belts or child passenger safety seats by the year 1990. The national goal is called "70 to 90."

Woman's Health

By Robert C. Park, M.D.
College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists

What your baby really looks like is a mystery solved at birth. But your doctor may want to take a look at the baby during pregnancy to check on its progress and position. A modern tool called ultrasound lets you and the doctor check the well-being of your baby without risking your health or your baby's.

By using sound waves to pick up an image, ultrasound resembles radar. Your doctor moves a small, microphone-like device over your abdomen. The sound waves it sends through your body bounce off organs inside your body like echoes and are converted into an image on a television-like screen.

What ultrasound tells your doctor and you is your baby's approximate age, size, and position of the placenta (afterbirth). It can also show if you are carrying twins. Such knowledge is helpful in normal pregnancies but is invaluable for high-risk pregnancies when there is a history of problems. In a way, ultrasound serves as a form of physical exam of a fetus.

To prepare for an ultrasound exam, wear clothes that allow you to uncover your stomach easily such as a top and skirt or slacks.

Early in pregnancy, you will be asked to drink several glasses of water one hour before your exam so that you will have a full bladder. This helps the doctor locate the pelvic organs and allows closer and more accurate pictures.

Ultrasound is painless, harmless, and requires no drugs or dyes. It has a 30 year-long safety record. However, ultrasound should be used for a medical reason, and not just to satisfy your curiosity about what your baby looks like in your womb or its sex.

Despite modern technology, mystery still surrounds the growth and birth of a baby. But ultrasound can dispel some of that mystery so that your doctor can help you have a healthy pregnancy and baby.

Heeere's Jessica!

First movie airs Sunday

NEW YORK (AP) - Did anybody who wasn't down a well miss the mass-publicized rescue of little Jessica McClure, the Texas toddler?

For those who missed it or just want to relive it, ABC offers a dramatized replay Sunday in "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure."

Roxana Zal, who won an Emmy Award two years ago for "Something About Amelia," plays Cissy McClure, the young mother who realizes that her 18-month-old baby has disappeared into an 8-inch opening in the ground. Will Oldham plays her husband, Chip.

Veteran film actor Pat Hingle is nonsense, good-ol'-boy Fire Chief James Roberts. Beau Bridges plays Richard Czech, the overly optimistic chief of police. Patty Duke plays Carolyn Henry, a victim's assistance volunteer who stayed with the McClures through the ordeal.

The movie is a well-acted, well-directed, straightforward retelling of the drama. In fact, during the first hour, we may wonder why we must engage in this seemingly pointless recreation exercise.

But the rescue of the tot who, in October 1987, fell down an abandoned water well in her aunt's Midland, Texas, backyard, catches hold in the second hour, when the drama escalates and the filmmakers' purpose begins to emerge. As we begin to suspect, and are assured in a tag-line message at the conclusion, the movie is a tribute to volunteerism.

Scriptwriter David Eyre Jr. and director Mel Damski capture moments of humor, as well as the horror of the situation, and such subtleties as Cissy's fear of informing her house-painter husband that she lost the baby down a well. Eyre's dialogue is pretty credible West Texas-ese.

There was some bickering in Midland last year over who should get the rights to the story. Eventually those involved settled on Interscope Productions in association with the Campbell Soup Co. The real-life folks in Midland-Odessa depicted in the film ought to be pretty happy with the results, since they're portrayed as good-hearted, right-thinking people ready to do absolutely anything to save somebody else's baby.

The Chamber of Commerce might not be overly delighted with the opening establishing shots of rusting oil-field equipment, but the scenes effectively depict the state of the oil economy at the time - down a dry hole itself. That underlines the generosity of the oil industry that brought in experts and equipment to help save Jessica, at no small cost.

Most touching is the portrayal of emergency medical technician Robert O'Donnell (Whip Hubley), who must confront his fear of the gravelike shaft, then can't quite reach the child on the first try and has to come up empty-handed. A doctor on the scene warns him before his second attempt that the child's time is running out and if he has to break her bones to get her out, he should.

At the conclusion, when Cissy is sitting in the waiting ambulance and hears the cheers go up from the crowd in the backyard, it's almost like watching the real scenes that the networks interrupted prime-time for in 1987. It's not a bad moment to recreate.

Cindy Pickett relishes mother's role in 'Steven'

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Cindy Pickett, who portrays the mother of a California boy who was abducted at age 7, says the boy's real mother never abandoned hope during the seven years her son was held by his abductor.

A new NBC miniseries tells the story of Steven Stayner, who was kidnapped from his home in Merced, Calif., in 1972 and held captive until he was able to escape in 1979. During those seven years he lived an apparently normal life as the son of his abductor, Kenneth Parnell, a convicted child molester.

But Steven's parents never gave up hope of finding him alive.

"She said she knew Steven wasn't dead because a mother would know," says Pickett, who portrays Kay Stayner, the mother, in

"I Know My First Name is Steven."

The two-part miniseries, which will be televised on Monday and Tuesday, also stars John Ashton as the father, Del Stayner, Arliss Howard as Parnell, Corin "Corky" Nemec as the teen-age Steven and Luke Edwards as the 7-year-old Steven.

Larry Ellikan directed. J.P. Miller and Cynthia Whitcomb adapted the screenplay from a story by J.P. Miller.

Parnell told Steven that his parents didn't want him any more.

"The boy thought he had been signed away by his parents," Pickett says. "Parnell told him if he tried to escape he would have to be put in an institution. I think once he went to a telephone booth and tried to call his parents but he didn't know how to use the telephone. He had never been allowed to use the phone because it was feared he would run up the bill."

When Steven was 14, Parnell kidnapped another boy, Timmy White, and told him the same story. Steven then escaped, taking Timmy with him.

Parnell was sentenced to eight years and eight months in prison in February 1982 after an 18-day trial in Hayward, Calif., on two counts of kidnapping. He served five years at Soledad State Prison, then was on parole for another two years.

"He's one of 65,000 convicted child molesters running free in California," Pickett says.

The trauma for Steven and his parents did not end with his return home. After a separation of seven years they no longer knew each other.

"They had to go through some healing," Pickett says. "They were connected to a 7-year-old boy. They told him after his return that he had a curfew, but he said he was grown. And he called the man who abducted him Dad."

Pickett is probably best known for her role as Dr. Carol Novino in the NBC series "St. Elsewhere." She was the resident who had formerly been a nurse at St. Eligius Hospital.

Her first series was "Call to Glory," which ran only one season on ABC in 1984-85. She was the wife of an Air Force colonel (Craig T. Nelson) in this story of a military family during the Cold War and the early part of the Vietnam War in the 1960s.

"But we only did 22 shows," she says. "Until 'Platoon,' no one was interested in seeing anything about the Vietnam War."

Pickett has also starred in two other miniseries, "Amerika" and "Echoes in the Darkness." She made her feature film debut in "Night Games" and was the mother of Matthew Broderick in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off."

She also starred in "Hot To Trot" and most recently in "Deepstar Six," which she called "an underwater 'Alien.'"

Her husband in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" was Lyman Ward, who has since become her husband in real life.

Pickett claims descent from two famous military leaders, Gen. Thomas Gage, the commander of British forces at the beginning of the Revolutionary War, and Maj. Gen. George Pickett, the Confederate leader famous for "Pickett's Charge" at Gettysburg during the Civil War.

She was born in Oklahoma, but grew up in Houston, where her father, Cecil Pickett, taught a generation of actors at the University of Houston. His students included Randy and Dennis Quaid, Trey Wilson, Brent Spiner, Susan Tolsky and JoBeth Williams.

Her 20-year-old son, Clay, is now studying acting with his grandfather.

New 'Indiana' is enjoyable

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

What can you say about a movie that is as fine-tuned as an Indianapolis 500 race car and travels at the same speed? You could play the cynic and say it is an outrageous piece of audience manipulation. Or, you could say that it is a thrilling exercise in pure cinema. Why not the latter?

"Indiana Jones and the Last

LOOK CLOSELY

NEW YORK (AP) - Read food labels carefully or you could go home with something you don't want.

There are no hard and fast rules when it comes to "product labeling," which is different than "ingredient labeling." One side of the package is designed to catch the consumers' eye with catchy claims. The other side contains nutritional and health information.

For example, do not think that "no salt added" means no salt. The product may be naturally salty and no salt was added to the already salty product.

WRITING TEAM

NEW YORK (AP) - Charles B. Nordhoff and James N. Hall were a team of novelists who co-authored such books as "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Men Against the Sea," "Pitcairn's Island," and "The Hurricane."

Their books, "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "The Hurricane," were made into movies. Nordhoff died in 1947 and Hall in 1951.

Crusade" is a movie to be enjoyed, not critiqued. After botching "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom," George Lucas and Steven Spielberg have poured trains, horses, tanks, Nazis (including Hitler himself), a father-son relationship, the Holy Grail and their own limitless imaginations into the third of the Indiana Jones sagas.

There is even a bit of romance with a gorgeous spy, but Lucas and Spielberg have a low tolerance for icky love stuff.

"The Last Crusade" is a meaningful title, since the filmmakers insist it will be Indiana's final appearance. Too bad, because the new film contains a magnificent piece of casting: Sean Connery as Professor Henry Jones Sr. Connery and Harrison Ford as father and son elevate the film from a mindless Saturday-serial exercise to a sometimes touching study of human relationships. The two actors are simply terrific together.

"The Last Crusade" begins with a prologue showing the teen-age Indiana (River Phoenix) in an adventure in the American West. It's breathtaking, although it bears little relevance except to show the hero's early daring and the neglect by his father.

It's impossible to capsule the rest of the plot. The ceaseless action travels from the Midwest to Italy, Austria, Germany and the Middle East. The climax at the ancient city of Petra in Jordan is the only letdown. The cataclysm in a hidden cavern has been done before, and by Lucas and Spielberg.

"The Last Crusade" borders on the camp, with such lines as "Nazis! I hate these guys!"

The rest of the cast is highly supportive, especially Denholm Elliott as the professional companion of the Joneses, and John Rhys-Davies as the Arab fixer. Alison Doody is luscious as the blond spy, and all of the villains are properly nasty.

Lucas wrote the story with Menno Meyjes and served as executive producer with Frank Marshall. Jeffrey Boam did the screenplay and Robert Watts produced. The Paramount Picture is rated PG-13, with perhaps too much action for the very young (and snakes and rats for the squeamish). Running time: 127 minutes.

Motion Picture Association of America rating definitions:

G - General audiences. All ages admitted.

PG - Parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.

PG-13 - Special parental guidance strongly suggested for children under 13. Some material may be inappropriate for young children.

R - Restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

X - No one under 17 admitted. Some states may have higher age restrictions.

Here's the answer

By ANDY LANG

AP Newsfeatures

Q. - We want to caulk the outside of our house. Is spring a good time to do this?

A. - When caulking is required, any time is a good time to do it. When you have a choice, the fall is considered the proper time in areas where winter places a burden of some sort on the house. Proper caulking, for instance, can cut down on heating bills as well as permit air conditioning to work more efficiently. No matter when you do the caulking, it is best to avoid extremes of temperature.

Q. - I have to replace the panes in several windows of our house. I did this about 15 years ago and remember the difficulty I had in cutting the glass to size, although everything else seemed to work all right. This time I expect to have the glass cut at a hardware store or similar place, but I will do the rest of the work myself. Is there something special I should know about taking the measurements for the glass?

A. - Two things. One is that each window frame might not be identical, so measure all four sides of each frame separately. The second is 1/16th of an inch smaller than the actual size of the channels into which the glass will fit.

Q. - I am about to purchase an electric drill. My home center carries three sizes. Is there any special one I should buy?

A. - The 1/4-inch drill usually is the starting tool, but the 3/8-inch drill has become very popular in recent years because it handles heavier work a bit more easily, whereas a 1/2-inch drill is more in the commercial line or at least for serious, heavy-duty workers. Remember the size designates the size of the chuck into which the bit fits. A 1/4-inch drill, for instance, can handle bits that cut into wood and make 1/2-inch holes, providing the chuck of the bit is no larger than 3/8-inch. The same goes for the other sizes.

Q. - We have moved into an old house, and I will have to do some plumbing work. Is it necessary to get a permit to do this?

A. - Check with your town authorities. In most places, a permit is required to work on plumbing. Even when it is permitted and you can handle the job, the town will insist a plumbing inspector be

Appearance shows pride

For some, a house is an investment. For others, it's a roof over their heads. For most, their house is home... a source of pride of ownership.

How it looks to friends, neighbors, even passersby, means a great deal to them. So, a roof that's begun to show its age goes against their grain and must be replaced. One way to determine whether it's time to replace the roof is to look for cracked, curled or missing shingles. If the roof is of standard shingles and you know it is at least 15 years old, it's time to reroof.

One of the sources of pride of ownership comes from the ability to choose building products that offer good value as well as good looks. One product homeowners can count on to offer such value in addition to attractive appearance, longevity and low maintenance is today's asphalt shingles. No single element, says the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association, plays quite so important a role in the overall protection of a home as does the roof. After all, the roof works continually to protect everything underneath.

Standard asphalt shingles are available with one, two or three tabs and are made of a base mat of organic cellulose fibers or inorganic glass fibers. The organic mat is saturated with asphalt, the inorganic is not. Both are coated with asphalt for weatherproofing, then surfaced with ceramic-coated opaque mineral granules to protect the shingles from the drying effects of sunlight as well as to give the shingles color and added protection against fire.

Check Cost

To determine the kind of protection you're getting when choosing new roofing, remember that the cost of labor for application is usually the same regardless of the design life of the shingle being applied.

To estimate the probable annual cost of a new roof, add the cost of labor and materials and divide the total by the shingle's life expectancy. The longer the design life of the shingle, the more economical it is likely to be since the cost of materials and labor is amortized over a longer period of time.

Choosing a shingle with a longer design life is also a good way to express your pride of ownership. Three-dimensional asphalt shingles with a design life of 25 years or more create a roof with dramatically bold textures by giving a roof a distinctive appearance with eye-appealing shadow lines. Multi-layered asphalt shingles come in a wide range of colors, including popular earthtones to blend or contrast with other exterior color elements.

For additional information on the role of roofing in your home's appearance, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope for a copy of "A Homeowner's Guide to Quality Roofing" to ARMA, Box 3248, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163-3248.

Most people with homes see ownership as a source of pride. So, how it looks to others means a lot. For many, it means replacing the roof with asphalt shingles to take advantage of their attractive appearance, low maintenance and longevity.

On The House

Peeling paint provides problem

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Painting the outside of a house is a tedious but fairly simple chore if you do not have to contend with peeling.

When a previous coat of paint has peeled, even to a minor degree, the new painting job becomes far more difficult. Instead of a little sanding during the course of the all-important preparation of the surface, the task must be detailed and thorough. Sometimes, when the preparation has not been proper, the trouble will appear to have been cleared after the paint has been applied, but it is only a temporary solution. In a matter of days, weeks or months, peeling will recur. Actually, it hasn't recurred as much as it has resurfaced, since it was there all the time.

Peeling, as with nearly all paint failures, is caused by moisture. But many of the affiliated causes have to do with adhesion of some sort. If for instance, the peeling goes right down to the bare wood, it usually means the primer was applied over damp wood. In that event, the scraping to remove the peeling must go right down to the wood. Sometimes, the peeling is only in the top coat, which is a sign this coat did not adhere well to the primer. Or, it may be the prime coat was too dirty or glossy. Or, it could be a sign of incompatibility between the two coats.

When the entire surface of a house is in bad condition and requires complete removal of all the old paint, a professional job is needed. It's one tough job to get off the old paint, no matter what method is used. And, we have always maintained a blow torch should not be used on the outside of a house except by a professional or at least somebody who is experienced in its use.

Fortunately, there are many cases where peeling takes place only in what might be called localized areas. When a homeowner undertakes this task himself, the rough edges that show up when scraping has been done must be feathered or blended with sandpaper so as not to have an uneven appearance.

Peeling occasionally will take place when new paint has been applied over chalking paint. Chalking paint, used on surfaces where it is necessary to wash away the dirt during a rain, can be removed first by washing with a cleaner like trisodium phosphate. By the way, when there is excessive peeling under the eaves of the house it usually is because the areas are not cleaned by rain.

Many of the problems associated with moisture can be bypassed by the use of a special latex paint that can be applied even over damp surfaces. But the best way to take care of such trouble is by preventing it in the first place. You not only must be sure your house is well-caulked and otherwise protected from the elements, you must take steps to see that the excessive moisture created in modern houses has a way to escape.

Ventilating fans to get rid of this excess moisture are a help. So are vents installed in the house siding. These vents permit the moisture to leave the house rather than building up on the inside and pushing its way through the paint film, with the inevitable blistering and peeling. Special kinds of paint keep dampness from going through the walls and getting at the outside paint, but this must be done in conjunction with a moisture-escape method.

If your house has gutters and downspouts, keep them in working order. When they do not work, overflowing may add to your water difficulties. And be sure shrubbery planted close to the house isn't keeping the sun's rays from the siding and retaining moisture, a frequent cause of mildew.

Paint formulations change over the years. Even if you are using paint made by the same manufacturer or as the last time you painted, check the label on the container carefully and see whether your paint dealer has some kind of brochure on that particular brand. The addition or absence of certain ingredients may help you get a better result.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find detailed information on all aspects of painting in Andy Lang's booklet, "Paint Your House Inside and Out," which can be obtained by sending $1 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.)

Picking right adhesive important for any job

By READER'S DIGEST
For The Associated Press

The market is awash with specialized adhesives. To profit from them you must choose the ones suited to your materials and the bonds you want to form.

For example, PVA glues, which are excellent for most home use, are water soluble and should not be exposed to dampness. Some glues require the pieces being joined to be clamped together for up to six hours, a procedure that may be difficult or perhaps impossible.

PILLOW TALK

NEW YORK (AP) - An overnight plane ride or a long train trip often can cause lower back and neck discomfort.

Since most seats are designed for space needs, it is up to you to modify the chair for comfortable seating, says the Travel & Leisure Information Center.

Try placing a small pillow, a rolled up towel, or a blanket in the hollow of your back to keep it from flattening out. A modified pelvic tilt - putting your hands on your hips and pushing your pelvis forward - will also help.

Then, place a smaller pillow or towel behind your neck and recline your chair to help alleviate neck discomfort. Finally, get up at least once every hour and move around.

DIABETES ALERT

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) - An estimated 11 million people in the United States have diabetes and many of them don't know it, reports the American Diabetes Association.

ICI Pharmaceuticals Group says it has joined the association to help educate the public about the warning signs of diabetes - a disease that can be controlled or even prevented.

Diabetes leads to high blood sugar that can be damaging to body organs.

In such cases, a fast-setting glue would be a better choice. The manufacturer's information will tell you much of what you need to know. Read it carefully before you use any adhesive. Also observe safety warnings, which sometimes tell you to wear gloves and to work with adequate ventilation.

Surface preparation is vital for a good bond. Clean surfaces thoroughly. Wood should be stripped or sanded free of wax, paint and varnish. Rust, dirt, grease and loose paint should be removed from metal. When in doubt, strip it.

Following is a guide to some major types of adhesives. The label on commercial products should tell you which group they fall into:

- Acrylics are extra-strong adhesives used on wood, metal and glass. They come in two components which are mixed together just before application. Acrylics are waterproof. They set (harden) quickly and cure (reach maximum strength) overnight.

- Casein glues are traditional furniture glues. They are good on oily woods such as oak and maple, but will leave stain marks on redwood and other softwoods. They are not waterproof. They set in five to six hours and cure overnight.

- Epoxies are good on wood, metal, china, glass and most other materials. They are waterproof and they are especially useful for bonding two different materials together. Epoxies come in two components which are mixed just before application. They set and cure fairly quickly depending on the type.

- Hot-melt adhesives are good for everything but a few plastics. They are often used for quick repairs on leather and fabrics. They are applied with an electric glue gun. Hot-melt adhesives are waterproof and set and cure very quickly.

- Latex-based adhesives are used on fabrics, carpet, paper and cardboard. They are water-resistant.

They set almost immediately and cure in about an hour.

- Liquid solder bonds aluminum, tin and other metals and materials. Warning: Do not use it to solder electrical connections. Water resistant, it sets in eight hours and cures overnight.

- PVA (Polyvinyl acetate) glues are excellent for household and furniture repairs, interior woodwork, paper and ceramics. They are not waterproof. They set in about eight hours and cure in a day.

- PVC (Polyvinyl chloride) glues are used for craft work and quick repairs on china, marble, glass, wood, porcelain and metal. PVC glues are water resistant and set in minutes. Curing time varies by brand.

- Resorcinol adhesives are used for extra-strong wood repairs, such as outdoor furniture and boat building. They come in two components which are mixed just before use. They are waterproof and set in less than half a day.

- Superglue (cyanoacrylate) bonds most plastics, metals, vinyl, rubber and ceramics, but does not bond paper, cardboard, fabrics and wood. Superglues are very water resistant. They set in seconds, and take up to 12 hours to cure.

- Urea formaldehyde adhesives form extra-strong furniture and cabinet repairs. They come in powder form. They are highly water resistant, set in about half a day and cure half a day later.

- Contact cement is typically used to bond plastic laminate to wood. It is applied to both surfaces and allowed to dry for 30 minutes. The surfaces are then pressed together. Bonding is almost instantaneous.

PHOTOS
-Photos of club officers, donation presentations, etc., can be made at The Brand office, preferably after 2 p.m. Appointments for such photos must be made at least 24 hours in advance.

-Black and white film may be obtained from the staff if approved for publication.

ENGAGEMENTS, WEDDINGS, ANNIVERSARIES
-Engagements should be announced at least SIX WEEKS BEFORE the wedding to ensure publication. Couples submitting engagement announcements after the deadline must choose to have either the engagement or the wedding photo published. Photos should be in black and white but a color photo may be used if the contrast is suitable for reproduction. The engagement announcement must include the date of the wedding.
-Lifestyles reporters ask that all wedding and anniversary writeups be submitted the Monday before the next Sunday publication date. Wedding notices submitted late will be edited considerably.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATIONS

For those of you who are Mary Higgins Clark fans, the waiting is over. The best selling author of seven novels, including A Stranger Is Watching, Where Are The Children, and Weep No More, My Lady, will lift readers to new heights of terror and pleasure with her new, eagerly awaited novel.

While My Pretty One Sleeps is set against the glittering world of New York's fashion industry. Ethel Lambston is a famous gossip writer, whose forthcoming book threatens to expose secrets about some of the most powerful and glamorous figures in fashion. When Ethel is killed, the number of people who might have a reason for the killing is overwhelming; the wealthy dress manufacturer, whose mob connections and sweatshop factories have been exposed, her debt-ridden husband, her never-do-well nephew and sole heir are just a few of the suspects.

At the center is Neeve Kearney, owner of an expensive boutique where Ethel shopped. Neeve soon finds herself in the middle of this dangerous web, not realizing that her own life is threatened, haunted by the feeling that the clue to the murder is something she knows.

While My Pretty One Sleeps has all the pace, excitement, high-charged suspense, romance and glamorous background that have made Mary Higgins Clark one of America's most popular writers.

Another best-selling author, Catherine Cookson, has a new historical novel.

The Bailey Chronicles is set in the northern English countryside and this novel features an irresistible hero named Bill Bailey.

As a young widow left badly off, Fiona Nelson, bringing up three children, is trying to make ends meet. So Fiona advertises for a lodger. The result is Bill: somewhat rough around the edges, but he's nobody's fool and he is very successful with his own business.

Before long, Fiona cannot remember life before Bill. He possesses some extraordinary qualities that have a great and lasting effect on the lives of Fiona and her young children, who depend on "Mr. Bill" for everything.

This wonderful novel spans 10 years in the lives of Bill, Fiona and the lives of the people they meet. Catherine Cookson has written a family that triumphs over its sorrows and devastating losses with love and laughter with its thickly textured plot and marvelously human characters.

The Jolly Rogers by Tom Blackburn is the true story of one of the Navy's foremost fighter squadrons, VF-17 and its fighter ace Tom Blackburn in action against the Japanese in the Solomon and Bismarck Islands during WWII. Most of us has heard of Greg "Pappy" Boyington and his Black Sheep fighter pilots. But it is not well known that Navy Fighting Squadron VF-17, called the Jolly Rogers, and sporting the skull and crossbone insignia that is still aloft in today's Navy, exceeded the combat record of Boyington's men, shooting down 154 enemy planes in the 76 days they were in combat in the South Pacific. Their job was to protect American aircraft carriers and bombers in the struggle for the Solomon islands. Thirteen of Blackburn's men, including himself became aces, each destroying more than five enemy aircraft.

At only 31 years of age, Blackburn flew the F4U Corsair, one of the first fighter planes to challenge the Japanese would simply avoid contact with Blackburn's fighters unless there were bombers to stop. So the bombers flew with VF-17 to draw out Zeroes and they cleared the skies over the Solomons.

Of the 43 pilots manning the squadron prior to first combat, 10 were killed while serving with the VF-17. Here is the story of true American heroes, Tom Blackburn and Navy fighting squadron VF-17.

Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy Onassis needs no introduction. For more than 25 years she has been the focus of unparalleled fascination and uninterrupted curiosity, the most pursued, written about, photographed and famous woman of our time. Here is an intimate biography called A Woman Named Jackie by C. David Heymann.

She has been admired, argued about and scrutinized. She has been the subject of endless news reports, gossip columns, and memoirs. Through it all she has remained an enigma, a riddle shrouded in mystery and mystique.

Heymann unravels the riddle of Jacqueline Onassis's complex life and character. A Woman Named Jackie is based on hundreds of exclusive interviews with members of Jackie's family, friends and acquaintances. In addition, he was given unprecedented access to personal correspondence and other sources, including never before released FBI, Secret Service and White House files.

Here is the most comprehensive portrait of this complex woman ever published. The real Jackie, creative, intelligent, ambitious, and enjoys power, and it tells why and how she got that way. The weight of the story's detail gives this biography substance not found in previous accounts of her life.

Heymann, author of Poor Little Rich Girl, and NBC mini-series, has sold the film rights to A Woman Named Jackie

covers more

NEW YORK (AP)--Beachgoers can bare as much, or as little, as they dare this summer and still stay in the fashion swim.

Shapely and scantily-clad models notwithstanding, "the big news is more coverage, because the population in general is aging," says Catherine Hansen, merchandise manager for Jantzen swimwear.

But the trim and the bold can still show off in Gottex's trendy viewpoint line or in Darling Rio, a line that is "definitely more risque" than the mainstream, notes designer Barbara Henriquez.

Jantzen salutes the trend toward a feminine, dignified look: flared patterns with lower legs, soft shirring, draping and skirts to cover or stripes provide a "clean, athletic" feeling and textures liven up solid warm and engaging portrait of a colors.

"Blue-greens will always be our No. 1 seller, but we're also seeing a lot of reds and corals and pinks mixed together they're very flattering on a lot of skin tones," says Hansen.

Bikinis offer new variety: some of the Navy's foremost fighter squa-skirted, some with a high or rolled waistband for camouflage.

Man Caught With Classified Information

Claims information regularly published

Neighbors today were surprised to learn Melvin Kline, a seemingly quiet, well-mannered man was making extra money with classified information. When questioned earlier this morning, Kline professed surprise that everyone wasn't using the classified section to earn extra income and get rid of unwanted items.

"It's common," he said. Recent studies tend to bear Kline out. Consumer Data Service reported that over 85% of the public read the newspaper and over 80% of those read the classifieds. Kline claimed widespread use was being made of the classified information. "But you have to act quickly," he remarked. "If I have something to sell, I can be in the paper by tomorrow. I do that a lot now," he confessed. "With classified, whether I'm buying or selling, I can reach a large market instantly. And it's easy...just pick up the phone."

When asked if price mattered at all, Kline stated he was in possession of Consumer Data Service documents that indicated newspaper readership increases as income increases. "The more money they make, the more they read the paper," he said, "and I can prove it." Asked for a last comment, Kline replied, "No matter what you're looking for, a new job, a great car, merchandise, or even a home, take a long look at the classified section.

Local confesses he profited from classified information in newspaper

"Sure, I've made some money from classified information, but so can anyone who reads the paper."

The information's all there." Response Analysis Corp. studies indicate the public does exactly that, with 98% preferring the newspaper over radio and 68% preferring the newspaper instead of TV. Kline was last seen in the company of an unidentified man carrying two outboard motors.
