Columbia blasts off on medical mission
Payload includes rats, jellyfish

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - The shuttle Columbia roared into orbit today with seven astronauts and 2,507 jellyfish and rats on an unprecedented quest for answers to the medical mysteries of space travel.

The 100-ton spaceship blasted off with the four men, three women, 2,478 tiny jellyfish and 29 rats at 9:25 a.m. EDT. It rose from the pad on a pillar of flame into a overcast sky, then headed out over the Atlantic Ocean.

The twin solid rocket boosters burned for two minutes before falling empty into the Atlantic, where ships waited to pick them up. Then, 8 1/2 minutes into the flight, Columbia reached a 184-mile-high orbit on the thrust of three main engines.

It was the third launch attempt for the biomedical research mission, postponed twice during the past two weeks by faulty shuttle parts. Low, dense clouds delayed today's liftoff nearly 1 1/2 hours before lightening enough to permit a safe launch.

A new equipment concern arose Tuesday. Workers noticed a small patch of insulation on Columbia's external-fuel tank had loosened, and technicians repaired the section. Tests were conducted through the evening to see whether the glue would be dry in time for liftoff.

Mission managers decided Tuesday night that the bonding would not pose a problem.

The nine-day voyage, commanded by Bryan O'Connor, is the 41st shuttle mission and the first dedicated entirely to medical research. Columbia, NASA's oldest shuttle, has been flying for 10 years.

It also is the first space flight with three women and the first to have such a medically skilled crew - three are physicians and one is a cell biologist. One of the doctors is the first person to fly in space with a catheter.

Cardiologist F. Andrew Gaffney had the catheter inserted into his arm and threaded to a vein near his heart the night before Saturday's launch attempt. The plastic tube will be removed about eight hours into the flight.

As Columbia circles the world, Gaffney, Dr. James Bagian, Dr. M. Rhea Seddon and cell biologist Millie Hughes-Fulford will draw blood from one another and monitor each other's blood pressure, heart, lungs and kidney function. They will conduct all the tests in Spacelab, a pressurized laboratory module in Columbia's cargo bay that is reached by a tunnel. O'Connor, pilot Sidney Gutierrez and Tamara Jernigan will take part in less rigorous tests.

The last in-depth medical testing of Americans in space occurred during the Skylab flights of 1973 and 1974. The exams conducted during Columbia's journey will be more comprehensive and sophisticated, scientists said.

NASA wants to know more about bodily changes in space so it can plan longer missions. A trip to Mars, for example, probably would last several years.

The jellyfish and rats will be studied to learn more about the effects of weightlessness.

The four medical specialists have been training for the mission since 1984. The flight has slipped from the mid-1980s to 1990, then to May and now June. The 1986 Challenger disaster caused the delay to 1990, and last year's shuttle fuel leaks pushed the mission into May.

NASA halted the first countdown May 21, a day before scheduled liftoff, because of faulty computer components and fuel temperature sensors. A bad navigational unit ended the second countdown less than an hour before Saturday's planned launch.

The faulty components were replaced.

AP poll: Bush a '92 shoo-in

NEW YORK (AP) - Almost two-thirds of Americans questioned in an Associated Press poll believe it is very likely President Bush will be re-elected in 1992, a reflection of the political strength the president drew from the Persian Gulf War.

An additional 29 percent said a Bush victory was somewhat likely, making an overwhelming total of 93 percent who expect the Republicans to keep the White House. Only 4 percent doubted Bush would win.

The telephone survey showed the immense challenge Democrats face in the 17 months remaining before the election. And it pointed to the importance of domestic issues in the campaign still to come.

Those interviewed said the economy, education and health care costs were the issues most important in deciding how they would vote in 1992.

The poll of 1,005 adults was conducted May 29-June 2 by ICR Survey Research Group of Media, Pa.

Most respondents said it wouldn't make much difference to them whether a Democrat or Republican occupied the White House.

Only one in four said they would be better off in future years if the Republicans won the 1992 presidential election. One in five said they would be better off with the Democrats. Most of the rest, 55 percent, said it wouldn't matter much.

Even among people who said they were Democrats, only two-fifths said they would be better off with a Democratic president. Three-fifths of Republicans said they would be better off with a GOP victory.

Respondents were asked to choose from among eight issues that could be presidential campaign material.

About one in four, or 26 percent, said the economy was the most important issue. Education ranked second at 17 percent, followed by health care costs, 13 percent; drug abuse, 11 percent; crime, 10 percent; and the environment, 7 percent.

Foreign policy, Bush's generally acknowledged strong suit, ranked second to last at 5 percent. Civil rights, the issue Bush and the Democrats were pummeling each other with when the poll was taken, ranked last at 4 percent.

The rankings among registered voters were no different, but some variations occurred among those who identified themselves with a political party. Democrats ranked health care costs second, at 20 percent. Republi-

- Only 4% feel Bush won't win
- Our top concerns:
 - Economy (26%)

 - Health (13%)

cans put crime third, at 11 percent.

A majority, 53 percent, said they agreed with the statement: "George Bush has shown he really cares about people like me," and 39 percent disagreed. The percentages were almost identical among registered voters.

Contrary to past signs that Republicans suffered a "gender gap" on compassion, 56 percent of the women and 50 percent of the men agreed with the statement that Bush "really cares."

The margin of error was plus or minus three percentage points for the full sample.

People who gave Bush thumbs down on the "really cares" question made up four-fifths of the 26 percent who didn't want him to run for re-election. A 64 percent majority said they wanted Bush to run in 1992.

Bush has not discussed a campaign for re-election, but he already dominates the race to the extent that 89 percent of the Democrats polled said it was likely he'd win.

Twelve summers ago, as few as 31 percent said they wanted Jimmy Carter to run for re-election. But by December 1979, 56 percent wanted Carter to run and 31 percent didn't. Carter lost the election to Ronald Reagan the next November.

In August 1983, only 40 percent of respondents to an AP poll agreed that "Ronald Reagan has shown he really cares about people like me."

Demo bill headed for passage

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Democratic civil rights bill is headed for House passage despite a veto threat from President Bush, following a biting debate that centered on the politics of race as much as on the measure itself.

"This is a shame and a disgrace that in 1991 we're still debating whether we should protect our fellow American citizens from discrimination," said Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., an organizer of sit-ins and freedom rides in the civil rights movement of the 1960s.

But Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., led the Republican contention that the Democrats' legislation would force employers to use hiring quotas to avoid lawsuits. "This bill codifies racial preferences... a quantum leap back from Martin Luther King's dream," he said.

After a Bush alternative and a liberal plan were defeated Tuesday, the Democratic proposal was cleared for House passage today. Both sides watched for how close it would get to 288 votes, the two-thirds majority that would be needed to override a veto.

The Senate has not acted on its version of the legislation. If a House-Senate compromise eventually emerges - and congressional leaders expect it will this year - the veto showdown would not come until that final version cleared both houses and was sent to the White House.

The House bill is designed primarily to overcome a series of 1989 Supreme Court rulings that have made it more difficult for minorities to win job discrimination suits.

It also would change job discrimination laws to expand the rights of women, religious minorities and the disabled to collect monetary damages if they are victims.

Although the Democratic bill specifically prohibits the use of quotas, Bush and his aides say the sum total of the bill's provisions would lead to de facto quotas being used by employers as a defense against potentially costly law suits.

"This is presidential politics 1992, the opening salvo by the White House to exploit those... issues like Willie Horton," the black rapist featured in Bush campaign ads in 1988, said Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M. "Even if this was the Quota Abolition Act, the White House would still call it a quota bill."

But Republicans said they and the president were looking at the practical effect of the bill, that besides encouraging the use of at least tacit quotas it would promote racial court confrontation instead of racial conciliation.

"Long, drawn-out court battles... (are) not a good solution," said Rep. Susan Molinari, R-N.Y.

House Republicans were overwhelmingly with Bush. But his alternative, which civil rights advocates said was too limited a response to the court decisions, was beaten, 266-162.

The House also rejected, 277-152, the most sweeping of three proposals before the House. It was backed by the Congressional Black Caucus and by women's groups, in part because it would allow unlimited damage awards in discrimination cases.

Even before the final House vote, some in the Senate were seeking to avoid continuing the rancor. A group of moderate Republicans announced their plan to offer a compromise.

"It's important to extricate the racial question from partisan politics," said Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., the chief sponsor.

While his party deputies pushed hard to reach the veto-override threshold, House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., cautioned against reading too much into today's vote.

Democrats spent two months tinkering with the legislation, making changes to shore up support.

Man stung by killer bees

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) - A gardener at a Brownsville mobile home park became the first reported sting victim of Africanized "killer" bees in the United States.

Jesus Cenobio "Sonny" Diaz, 35, was stung 18 times on May 20, he said, when his riding lawnmower disturbed a hive in a narrow culvert pipe under a driveway.

Officials with the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service on Tuesday confirmed that Diaz was stung by the "killer" bees, so-called because of their tendency to launch mass attacks on perceived threats to their colonies.

"This is the first recorded case of multiple Africanized bee stings in the U.S.," said Alton N. "Stormy" Sparks Jr., an entomologist with the TAES.

Diaz drove himself to a Brownsville hospital, where he was given a shot for the pain and sent home. City health officials were called in after the attack.

Food makers fathom fat fight

DALLAS (AP) - There's a lot more to fat than calories and cholesterol.

"Mouthfeel" for one thing. "Fat has a structure to it... when you take that out you've got to replace it with something that gives back that structure," said Linda Myrick of FMC Corp., one of dozens of companies racing to develop fat substitutes to satisfy public demand for a healthier diet.

Ingredient makers touted their fake fats to the 14,000 scientists and food companies at the Institute of Food Technologists annual convention.

The show, which ended today, is the nation's largest gathering of the ingredient suppliers to name-brand food makers.

Pressed by consumers, food makers are eager to raise the quality of low-fat foods, which often are less tasty. They are turning to ingredient makers for solutions.

"The market is fairly saturated with low-fat products," said Wyatt Elder of Cargill Inc. "I think the trend for the next 10 years is for those products to get better."

"It's a healthier meal that you're really seeing come around," said Sue Furesik of American Maize-Products Co.

To satisfy the demand, food scientists not only worry about caloric and cholesterol levels of fake fats but density and "mouthfeel," how much the ingredient still makes the product seem like regular food when chewed.

And then there's price. "One of the problems is fat is pretty cheap," Ms. Myrick said.

"When a food manufacturer replaces that with food additives, the additives probably cost more than the fat."

The drive for the perfect fat substitute has given a boost to the multibillion-dollar ingredient industry.

"It's very exciting for the food additive industry to go after something like fat replacement," said FMC's Kevin Buck.

The Philadelphia conglomerate, which forecasts double-digit growth in fat replacement products, is working on a cellulose-based gel to replace fat in salad dressings. FMC also makes the seaweed concoction called carrageenan that gained fame as an ingredient in the low-fat burger of McDonalds Corp.

There are about a dozen types of fat replacers now used or being developed by several dozen companies.

But Cargill's Elder said, "There is no magic wand yet."

The fat substitute products of FMC and American Maize-Products, for instance, are derived from carbohydrates and can't be used for frying foods.

Protein-based substitutes can sometimes be used in frying but are really best for frozen foods. Monsanto's ballyhooed Simplex dairy product is the best known of this group but cannot be used as a frying agent.

And some fat-based replacers, usually compounds scientists have altered to prevent absorption by the body, tend to pass through too quickly. Procter & Gamble Co. has a fat-based substitute called Olestra awaiting government approval.

Mammogram testing available

Claudia Smith, at Deaf Smith General Hospital, is ready and willing to assist patients with the "CGR Senographe 500TS." Mammography testing is offered Monday through Friday from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. A doctor's referral is not necessary, but the name of an attending physician is requested. For an appointment, call 364-2141 ext. 248.

DSGH mammographies offered

The letters on the machine read "CGR Senographe 500TS."

They should add "lifesaving device."

The machine is a dedicated mammography unit at Deaf Smith General Hospital. For two years the unit has been housed in a pleasantly decorated room done in pastels and mauve. A private dressing area is provided, as is a feeling of quiet relaxation. Staff members Claudia Smith, RT, department manager, and Carrie Shirley, RT, are trained in technical and person-to-person skills.

"Current mammography procedures are very simple," said Smith. "The test takes only 15 minutes and the X-ray dosage is less than that used to X-ray a chest. Our equipment is dedicated solely to breast imaging."

With all of the attention that the danger of breast cancer has received in the past decade, the most recent studies indicate that women who most need to be checked for breast cancer has not declined in the past 30 years. The most recent statistics indicate that one out of 10 women will contract breast cancer. Even men can develop breast cancer, although less frequently: one out of 100.

According to a National Cancer Institute report recently published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, many women over 50 don't seek mammograms because their doctors don't recommend them, and they feel they are not necessary.

New procedures have resulted in more effective diagnoses and treatments, but many of these depend upon early diagnoses. Breast cancer can exist for sometime without noticeable symptoms. The National Cancer Institute suggests that women have a baseline mammogram between the ages of 30 and 35, have one every two years between 40 and 50, and one every year after 50.

"We have been pleased with the response to our service," Smith said, "but we should be seeing many more women. The procedure is very simple: the patient stands while the screening takes place. Every year, 45,000 women die of breast cancer and that high number just isn't necessary with the capabilities the medical community has of detecting and curing cancer."

Mammography testing is offered Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. A doctor's referral is not necessary, but the name of an attending physician is requested. For an appointment, call 364-2141, Ext. 248.

"The hospital's mission in the community is to provide services that contribute to ongoing good health," said Gary Moore, DSGH administrator. "Our real need now is for more women to understand the need for, and take advantage of, the service that is so simple and convenient."

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My marriage ended in September of 1990 after 17 years and two children. It was a good marriage but, like most marriages, I'm sure it could have used some work. The end came when my husband attended his high school reunion in a state a thousand miles from home.

"Stan" had not been in touch with any of his classmates since graduation 20 years before. He went to the reunion alone. I stayed home with the children.

At the "Get Reacquainted Mixer" he ran into a woman he had known only casually in high school and, according to Stan, "something clicked." They left the party together, took a long walk and decided in less than an hour that their lives were horrible and they were in love. Two months later, she walked out on a 20-year marriage and three children. Stan walked out on me and out two kids. Our families and friends were in a state of shock and still can't believe it.

Stan and his "miraculous discovery" seem to be living their teen years over again. He is proud of himself for having taken her away from her family and she is proud of herself for busting up, his life. If this sounds crazy, let me assure you that it is the God's honest truth.

It has been months since Stan left us and I have tried to find some rational reason for what happened. I come up with nothing. I somehow believe that if there were a sensible explanation, I could recover from this blow and pull myself together. Is it possible that I will be whole again? It would help to hear from others who have lived through a similar situation. Thanks, Ann. -- A Florida Wreck

DEAR FLORIDA: You are going through a terrible time, but do not give up hope. You can rebuild your life. I'm sure there are others who have survived what you are now going through, and that they would be willing to share their experiences and give you some moral support. How about it, readers?

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I am having a problem with a neighbor who has become extremely unpleasant or more to the point -- stubborn.

"Mr. L." has a number of large trees that overhang my property. Approximately 75 percent of those tree branches extend over my house, yard and swimming pool. These trees, eucalyptus and pine, shed debris into the swimming pool and make it almost impossible to keep my pool clean. Furthermore, the branches that overhang my house pose a serious threat. If a high wind should break off any of the limbs they could come crashing onto my home.

I have told this neighbor that I would be happy to pay for trimming the branches but he flatly refuses to allow the tree surgeon to have access to his property. I need to know if I have a legal right to force this man to trim his trees or to allow my tree surgeon to go into his yard so that he can take off the branches that overhang my property. Sign me -- Fed Up and Furious in Northern California

DEAR FED UP: According to Gary Lawson, assistant professor of law at Northwestern University, almost every state would allow you to go ahead and trim the branches if it can be done without trespassing on your neighbor's land. Forcing the tree owner to trim the branches himself is another matter. In California, courts have sometimes ruled in favor of forcing the tree owner to trim the branches of the trees that threaten a neighbor's property. I suggest that you see a lawyer and ask for his assistance.

Bulls tired of standing around

CHICAGO (AP) - The standing around is over. The Chicago Bulls are ready to run.

They spent the last two days in the shadow of a 1-0 deficit in the NBA Finals, two days of preparing to even the score and considering the dire consequences if they don't.

Los Angeles' James Worthy, recovering from an ankle injury, may be the only player who welcomed the long break between Sunday's 93-91 victory and tonight's second game.

"These guys had too long to think about" the loss, Bulls coach Phil Jackson said. "We've had too much time to coach."

"I'd much rather have played today," Chicago's Michael Jordan said Tuesday.

His Laker rival in this superstar series, Magic Johnson, also was eager to return to the enemy's court where he directed his team to victory with poise and precision.

"You'd always rather be playing than sitting around," he said Tuesday. "We'll be happy because we're playing and you (reporters) will be happy because you'll have something to write about and you won't have to keep asking us the same questions over and over."

Questions like: Where did the Bulls' running game go?

- And, can they win the series if they lose the first two games at home with the next three on the road?

With outstanding open court players like Jordan and Scottie Pippen and strong spot-up shooters like John Paxson, the Bulls are best when the pace is quick. The Lakers, a fastbreak team in the 1980s when they won five titles, have switched to a slower pace. They controlled the tempo in the opener of the best-of-7 series, using a deliberate post-up attack.

"We want them to take long outside shots," Chicago's Horace Grant said. "Hopefully, we'll get the rebound and get the ball to Michael, John or Scottie to push it up against their transition defense."

"If Magic has the ball in his hands, he's great at doing what he wants and getting it to people who can score," Paxson said. "Maybe we'll press a little bit more and try to make other (Lakers) make decisions on the run and get it more of a frenetic pace."

"That (fastbreak) game suits them, so we'd rather not get into it," Johnson said. "But we can still play that way, too, if we have to."

Chicago lost the opener by just two points. Had Sam Perkins' 3-pointer not gone in with 14 seconds left, the Bulls would have been ahead by two.

Had Jordan's open jumper with 4.9 seconds to go dropped through, they would have been up by one.

It was a back-and-forth battle that neither team dominated for long. "I don't think there was anything wrong with our game Sunday except they stopped the clock a little bit too early," Jackson said.

The Bulls said they can run better if they improve on the defensive boards, creating turnovers and playing tighter defense that forces the Lakers to put up low percentage outside shots.

Chicago players said they must improve their low-post defense against Worthy and Perkins. They drew single coverage there for most of the first game and led Los Angeles with 22 points each.

"We will definitely double-team some," Grant said, "make them give the ball up more."

When they can't run, the Bulls plan to rely more on their own low-post game. Grant and Cartwright, the players who would fill those spots on the floor, each scored just six points on 3-of-8 shooting in the opener.

"We've got to go down low to guys like Bill (Cartwright) and Horace," Pippen said. "We never established our inside game."

Doctor moonlights as bullpen catcher

By ROBERT MOORE

EL PASO, Texas (AP) - A couple of days later, Dr. Julio Ortiz would be trying to repair a soldier's shattered forearm by grafting part of the young man's leg bone to the damaged area.

He also would be sending a planeload of doctors, nurses and technicians to Honduras to reconstruct the dreams of children born with disabling deformities.

But on this warm evening, Ortiz was tending to his own dream - playing catch in the El Paso Diablos' bullpen.

"Medicine's not a bad hobby when you need to get away from baseball," Ortiz says after taking several dozen warm-up throws from Mark Ambrose, a pitcher for the Class AA Texas League club.

As a colonel and chief of plastic surgery training at Beaumont Army Medical Center in El Paso, Ortiz spends his days practicing a gentle and delicate healing art. At night he settles into the sweaty grunt work of a minor league bullpen catcher.

Ortiz's primary task with the Diablos is to catch for pitchers who are warming up in the bullpen. He's the team's cheerleader on the bench and plays catch with the left fielder between innings.

He also acts as security guard when the need arises.

"Son, get down from there. You might get hurt," he tells a youngster sitting atop the railing above the Cohen Center bullpen. The boy quickly hops down and asks for an autograph.

Ortiz, 43, is not paid to be a bullpen catcher. The Diablos supply his cap and uniform, but he must buy the rest of his equipment.

Diablos owner Jim Paul says Ortiz is "living every little boy's dream. He gets to be part of a professional baseball team, wear the uniform, sign autographs and everything."

Ortiz gets to live his dream only when the Diablos play at home - he doesn't travel with the team.

"I think the Army might have something to say if he went on road trips," Paul says.

Ortiz won an Army scholarship for both his undergraduate studies and medical school at the University of Puerto Rico. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in 1969 and went on active duty in 1971.

He began his medical career as a general surgeon but switched to plastic surgery two years later.

"I enjoyed creative surgery, and I needed something that would elaborate on artistic capabilities. That's plastic surgery," Ortiz says.

A wide-eyed boy once looked at the mangled hands of New York Yankee catcher Yogi Berra and asked: "Mr. Berra, did your hands get that way from catching baseballs?"

"No, son," Berra replied. "They got that way from not catching baseballs."

Solid, steady hands are the key in the painstaking process of plastic surgery, but Ortiz says he doesn't worry that a bouncing 90 mph fastball might someday take away his livelihood.

"I haven't been hurt doing this yet. I hurt myself more skiing," he says.

Growing up in San Juan, Puerto Rico, Ortiz's great love was baseball.

As a teen-ager, he once played in a game with Roberto Clemente, Orlando Cepeda and other Puerto Rican major leaguers. He was a catcher in the commonwealth's top amateur league and at the University of Puerto Rico.

2 German men in French semis

PARIS (AP) - Michael Stich joined fellow German Boris Becker in the semifinals of the French Open today by defeating Franco Davin of Argentina 6-4, 6-4, 6-4.

Stich, the No. 12 seed, played aggressive serve-and-volley tennis and overpowered Davin's baseline game.

Stich's advance gave German two French Open semifinals for the first time in the tournament's history. Stich will play the winner of today's remaining quarterfinal between top-seeded Stefan Edberg and American Jim Courier, the ninth seed.

The other men's semifinal was set Tuesday, when Becker and Andre Agassi demolished their quarterfinal opponents. Agassi routed Jakob Hlasek 6-3, 6-1, 6-1 in 75 minutes, while Becker said he played "almost perfect" in a 6-4, 6-4, 6-2 victory over 1989 champion Michael Chang.

Stich, an occasional practice partner of Becker but not a close friend, said he would rather play Becker than Agassi if he makes the final.

"His game is a bit easier for me to play than Agassi," Stich said. "An all-German final would be great for German tennis."

Stich's route in the draw was made easier when Ivan Lendl withdrew on the eve of the tournament after hand surgery. Lendl's spot was given to a low-ranked "lucky loser" from the qualification round.

HWBA tourney set Saturday

The Hereford Women's Bowling Association's Star of the Year Tournament, featuring each week's Star of the Week, will be bowled Saturday.

The tournament will start at 3 p.m. Check-in starts at 2:30.

That opened up Stich's section of the draw, and he has reached the semifinals without playing a single seeded opponent. His highest-ranked foe was 18-year-old Fabrice Santoro of France, No. 50 in the world, who was stricken with stomach problems the night before their fourth-round match.

For both Stich and Becker, a victory at Roland Garros Stadium would be their first title ever on clay.

The women's semifinals, scheduled for Thursday, involve perhaps the four best clay-court players in the world, and all four are eager for the show-downs after many easy matches in the early rounds.

"When I get to the semis, it's a relief," said Monica Seles, the top seed and defending champion. "I know from here on in I have to play great tennis."

First in line for Seles is one of the two women aiming for her No. 1 ranking, third-seeded Gabriela Sabatini. Each has lost only one set in the first five rounds.

Steffi Graf, also in the hunt for No. 1, plays Arantxa Sanchez Vicario in Thursday's other semifinal. It's a battle of two former French Open champions, neither of whom has lost a set thus far.

Soviets need to prepare for deal-maker

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Soviets are edging toward democracy, flirting with capitalism. But are they ready for Big D Democratic politics, for the embodiment of dealmaking capitalism? Are they ready for Bob Strauss?

This former Democratic Party chairman and $8-million-a-year Texas lawyer hardly fits the pattern of colorless career diplomats who generally go to Moscow as United States ambassadors.

Jack M. Matlock, the man Strauss would succeed, is a linguist. But jokes in any language are not his style; his hand has never slapped a back.

The intensely political Strauss speaks Texan and is at home swapping one-liners at such Washington rituals as Gridiron Club dinners, sharing the dais with such Texas friends as George Bush and Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

"The Democratic nomination is wide open," Baker told the spring Gridiron dinner. "Even if Strauss here has a chance to get it." Then, after a slight pause, he added, "Of course, he'd have to become a Democrat."

It was a neat jibe at Strauss' legendary moderation that to some Democrats looks downright conservative but to the black-tie dinner set looks very comfortable.

The fact that Strauss did his best in years past to stifle the political ambitions of Republicans Bush and Baker matters little when they get together on social occasions.

It mattered even less when the president and his secretary of state centered on Strauss to go to Moscow at a uniquely sensitive time in the relations between the two countries.

Announcing the appointment Tuesday, Bush said he wanted "to guarantee that two ships ... won't pass in the night for lack of understanding."

He called Strauss "the right man to represent the United States in this fantastic period of change in the Soviet Union."

No one ever accused Strauss of lacking "understanding."

He understood the needs of entertainment giant MCA Inc. and Matsushita, understood how they meshed and engineered a $6.6 billion buyout by the Japanese conglomerate.

Which company did Strauss represent? Both, as it turned out. "The transaction was my client," he said.

His fee from MCA was $8 million. If you figure he charged the high-priced Washington lawyer rate of $350 an hour, that total would cover 22,857 hours.

"I don't work by the hour anymore," said Strauss. "I don't do windows."

A 72-year-old native of Lockhart, Texas, Strauss got started in politics while a student at the University of Texas when he worked on Lyndon B. Johnson's first congressional campaign.

He and a law school classmate opened their own firm in Dallas in 1945. He was good at raising political money and backing winners, talents that made him an influential member of the Democratic National Committee.

He opened a Washington office of his law firm in 1969. His ability to raise big money from business interests earned him the post of treasurer of the Democratic Party. It also earned him the enmity of reform elements in the George McGovern wing of the party.

After McGovern lost a presidential challenge to Richard M. Nixon in 1972, Strauss became party chairman.

When outsider Jimmy Carter was elected president in 1976, he turned increasingly to Strauss for help. The Texan served Carter as inflation fighter, trade representative and Middle East negotiator, then chaired the president's unsuccessful re-election campaign in 1980.

The Democrats were out of power in January 1981. Not only was Ronald Reagan the new president, but the GOP also controlled the Senate for the first time in a quarter-century.

Strauss' influence hardly diminished despite the outwardly hostile political environment.

After all, his old Texas friend Jim Baker was White House chief of staff and only a phone call away.

Others will pursue station

WASHINGTON (AP) - European and Japanese space officials say they will go ahead with space exploration projects even if Congress scraps the multibillion-dollar space station.

Executives of the European and Japanese space agencies told Congress on Tuesday that they were dismayed that the House Appropriations Committee slashed all of the proposed $2 billion for Space Station Freedom from the 1992 fiscal budget.

The officials joined Bush administration witnesses in pleading for the station before the House Science, Space and Technology Committee. The 12-nation, $40 billion program would put a manned space station in orbit by the end of the century.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration Administrator Richard Truly warned the committee that killing the space station would jeopardize the agency's entire manned space effort.

"Our civil space program is the best in the world, and this issue is about turning away from that," he said.

The space station has strong bipartisan support on the space committee, but the appropriations panel on Monday voted to transfer the money to housing, veterans care and other domestic programs.

The space station project could be revived by the full House in a vote set for Thursday or later when the Senate takes up the appropriations measure. President Bush is expected to try to rescue it with his veto if necessary.

Space station supporters said they would seek to persuade the House to restore $1.9 billion to the program and make up the rest when the Senate takes it up. The money would come from reducing other NASA programs in the new House bill by $1.6 billion and by cutting proposed public housing subsidies by $250 million.

If the space station is grounded, said Jean-Marie Luton, director general of the European Space Agency, European participants would go ahead with their own space station program.

Luton said European countries which already have spent a billion dollars on the project have taken steps that "effectively bind the fate of their nations' long-term space programs to that of the project."

Saying he wouldn't bother to mask Europe's concerns in diplomatic niceties, Luton told the committee: "After three years of joint development work and seven years after first inviting the other nations to participate in this 'genuine partnership,' the United States suddenly now feels able to stop the project in its tracks to solve an internal budget problem."

Kenji Funakawa, executive vice president of the National Space Development Agency of Japan, said his country would also continue space exploration but would have to alter programs designed for the manned space station.

Produce prices expected to fall

Texas consumers will find a larger supply of produce available in June, sending market prices lower for many fruits and vegetables.

"Produce hitting supermarket shelves in greater supply this month will be Texas-grown peaches, blueberries and blackberries," said Dr. Dick Edwards, a food marketing expert with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"Supplies of cantaloupes, honeydew melons and watermelons also will leap forward in June, after several weeks of limited offerings," he said. "This will lower prices on these items."

Edwards said the Texas peach crop should be excellent and much larger than last year.

"The crop has not been seriously damaged by hail or a late freeze this season, and it should be one of the best on record, barring late hail damage," Edwards said.

Marty Baker of Overton, Extension Service horticulturist serving East Texas, said many new peach orchards have been added in about a dozen counties, and many will be coming into full production this season, greatly adding to peach supplies.

"We should have one of the best peach yields in history, with different varieties maturing for consumers throughout the late spring and summer months," Baker said. "Consumers generally want a large peach with good color, free from insect and disease damage and with a tree-ripe flavor. Our peaches fill that bill."

In the Hill Country, the peach crop is expected to be 50 to 60 percent greater than production last year, which was considered a good year. Dr. John Lipe, Extension Service horticulturist in Fredericksburg, said the 1991 crop could top those of the past 10 years.

Besides peaches, the blueberry and blackberry crops produced in Texas should be above average this season, Extension Service horticulturists report, adding to the good news for consumers.

Other produce items in greater supply in June, Edwards said, will be apricots, nectarines, plums, raspberries and cherries.

Also increasing in supply and dropping in price near the end of the month will be sweet corn, yellow squash, tomatoes, green beans and peas, cucumbers, mangos and okra.

Phasing out in the next few weeks, however, will be rhubarb, artichokes, asparagus, greens and strawberries.

A few of these items will be on sale during the first week of June, he said.

Warmer days mean more interest in outdoor grilling, and meat prices trend upward as consumers but more of the expensive cuts for cookouts.

"This upward pull, plus the apparent low supply of beef for the summer months, could cause prices to increase even more than normal," Edwards said. "There will be specials, but your favorite cuts may not be discounted as often or as low as you would like."

Beef specials, Edwards said, will include round, sirloin, ribeye and T-bone steaks, with the best prices on family packs.

"Special supply situations may occur if beef is too high and consumers switch to other cuts," Edwards noted. "Should this happen, discounts of 25 percent to 35 percent may be seen. But expect this only in the first half of June; meat packers will stockpile cuts late in the month for the July holidays."

June specials on pork will include chops, ribs, pork products," Edwards said.

He predicted that poultry consumption will increase this summer, a change from its general decrease during warmer weather.

"This is because of the price difference between chicken and red meat," he said. "Poultry is not as easy to prepare as its red meat competitor, but boneless cuts have helped cause this shift.

The leg-thigh cuts at 39 cents remain an excellent buy. Also discounted in June will be bone-in breast cuts, as well as boneless versions."

Supermarkets also will feature special June promotions around Father's Day and end-of-school activities.

For the day honoring dads, specials will focus on men's toiletries, decorated cakes and floral departments that feature boutonnieres.

Product promotions for kids, who will spend more hours at home as schools close, will range from snack items to milk, lunch meats, cold cereal, ice cream products and drinks—both carbonated and non-carbonated.

"Store brands and regional drink brands will be on sale, usually selling from 15 percent to 25 percent lower than national brands," Edwards said.

Social Security

Does your child have a Social Security number? If not, you should be aware that Federal law now requires that most children have a Social Security number, according to Jih Talbot, Social Security manager in Amarillo.

"One of the provisions of the new law," Talbot noted, "is that 1991 tax returns, to be filed by April 15, 1992, show the Social Security number of any child claimed as a dependent who reaches age one by the end of this year." Previously, Federal law required a Social Security number for any dependent age two or older.

It is easy for a parent to obtain a Social Security number for a child if he or she has not already done so, Talbot said. All the parent has to do is contact the local Social Security office to request a Form SS-5, (Application for a Social Security Card.) It's a simple, one-page form that can be completed in a few minutes.

"A person applying for a number for a child will need to submit evidence of the child's age, identity, and U.S. citizenship or lawful alien status," Talbot stated. "The person also must provide evidence of his or her own identity."

A public birth record may be used as evidence of age and U.S. citizenship for a person born in the United States. Another document to establish identity—such as a medical record or day care record—may be required. If the child was born outside the U.S., a birth certificate or passport and a U.S. immigration document can be used as evidence of age, identity, and lawful alien status. The application lists examples of documents that can be used.

"Once we have examined the documents, we will give them back to the applicant and issue a Social Security card for the child, usually within two weeks," said Talbot.

"If you are expecting a baby in the near future, chances are you'll be able to apply for a Social Security card when you're in the hospital," Talbot said.

You can apply for a card for a newborn right in the hospital in all States except Alaska, California, Connecticut, Oklahoma, Arizona, and Rhode Island. This service will be available in Arizona later this year and in California and Connecticut next year.

"We urge all parents to get Social Security numbers for their children before the end of 1991 so that they do not have to worry about this matter when they get ready to file their tax returns in 1991," Talbot added.

An English highway boasts the smallest underpass in the world—a tunnel one foot wide which was constructed to permit badgers to get to the other side of the road.

Home health care coverage can make recovery more comfortable.

Full recovery from a serious illness can take much longer than a stay in the hospital... especially if the patient is elderly. Recuperation at home can be more comfortable and secure. It can also cost your parents or your family a lot of money for which Medicare does not reimburse you.

That's why the CNA Insurance Companies, one of several major companies our independent agency represents, created a new Home Health Care Plan. It provides coverage your parents and your own family may need to help pay the costs of professional health services performed at home.

Contact our agency for a discussion that can make your whole family more comfortable about the future.

How to help homeless animals

While Summer offers people and pets more time outdoors, it's also a time when more animals stray away from their homes, or are abandoned by their owners.

The sight of a stray animal can trigger the desire to feed and care for the animal. However, because a stray dog may be very frightened, it is important to warn children not to approach the unfamiliar animal.

The American Humane Association and Homeless Homer, who represents homeless dogs everywhere, suggest the following steps be taken to help a stray:

1. See if the dog has identification tags with the owner's phone number.
2. If the dog has a license tag, call the city or county where the tag was issued for the owner's number.
3. Call your local animal control office immediately.
4. Call the local humane association or animal shelter to see if anyone has reported a lost animal.
5. Ask your mailman and neighbors if the animal is familiar.
6. Check the ads under lost pets or place your own in local newspapers. Put up signs on community bulletin boards.
7. To reduce the number of stray animals, adopt a pet from an animal shelter. They have many homeless animals who are seeking happy, loving homes.

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Entertainer Wayne Newton has checked into a local hospital with walking pneumonia, his spokesman reported. Newton, 49, checked in Monday, a day after finishing a four-week run of nine shows a week at the Las Vegas Hilton. He had been on tour for three months before that.

Don't let weight lifting get to be a heavy problem

If you're not careful, barbells can weigh you down.

Weight lifting tones or builds your muscles, makes you stronger and improves your physical appearance. Static training, where you lift at maximum intensity and do fewer repetitions, usually involves using few muscles and little oxygen, and moving only a few body joints.

But you can improve your lung capacity and circulation and lower your blood pressure and pulse rate if you structure your weight-training program aerobically: lighter weights and more repetitions. This and other dynamic, or aerobic, exercises such as bicycling, running and swimming can also help you reduce your risk of having coronary artery disease. That means you could better fight cardiovascular diseases. Not only that, aerobic weight lifting can be used to increase joint support and mobility and improve your overall health and activity. That's why the American Heart Association suggests you do dynamic exercises, which promote cardiovascular fitness by raising blood flow to the working muscle for an extended time.

The American Heart Association advises regular exercise of moderate intensity (50-75 percent of capacity) performed for 30-60 minutes at least three to four times a week. If you're at high risk for heart disease, over 40 and haven't exercised previously, or you plan to greatly increase the intensity of your workout, you should see your doctor first and exercise with caution. Your doctor may use graded exercise tolerance tests to help prescribe a program for you.

Weight lifting and other static exercise may have damaging effects on your cardiovascular system. For example, studies show that static exercises can produce a sharp, sudden rise in blood pressure, even if your pressure is usually within the normal range. You're also at risk if your pressure is only slightly high, especially if you have undetected coronary artery disease.

Still want to lift weights? Fine but make sure you "max out" on your health, too. Here are a few "how-to" tips from the AHA:

-Get a complete physical checkup, including a treadmill stress test, before starting a weight-training program.

-Whether you're lifting to tone or build, start slowly and gradually work to your desired level.

-Balance your static weight-training program with dynamic exercise.

-Abide by other health factors: don't smoke; eat a low-fat, low-cholesterol diet; and control your weight and blood pressure.

Follow these suggestions, and you'll help lighten the load of lifting. Weight lifting doesn't have to be a heavy problem.

Penguins cannot fly but are excellent swimmers.

Take care of your pets

Summer vacation is the most fun, carefree time of the year. You're probably excited about the family vacation. But will your pet be excited about being left at home? Almost certainly not!

Most animals fret if their owners are away. The more devoted the attention an animal normally receives, the more likely the distress if it is left behind at vacation time.

In some cases animals can be left at home with a responsible neighbor if he or she comes in each day with fresh food and water. He or she must be willing to walk a dog or change a cat's litter box. The neighbor should be prepared to spend sometime with the animal.

A family pet is likely to suffer from loneliness and boredom almost as much as it would from lack of food and water.

In addition, make sure your dog or cat is wearing a collar with your name and address listed on it, not only when traveling but at all times.

Survey reveals surprises of fatherhood

In a 1991 survey of fathers across the country, Liz Claiborne discovered some surprising facts about the realities and fantasies of American parenthood. Here are the results of interviews with over 100 fathers.

How did parenthood change your life? Ninety percent of men in the Northeastern United States said their lives changed drastically with parenthood. This is in sharp contrast to the rest of the country, where fathers said their lives changed only a little. Fathers across the board said that they were prepared for devoting more time and money to their children, but 87 percent said they never imagined the intensity of the emotional commitment. As one father put it, "You grow up a lot with them."

An overwhelming 97 percent said the realities of fatherhood were much better than the fantasies, although the differences between reality and fantasy were quite apparent to most. As one man said, "I remember sitting with my wife, sipping mocha java and talking about little lives bubbling out of the woodwork. We got so excited about having help around the house and fresh new minds to add perspective to our lives. But the reality is that my kids don't bubble, they don't help around the house, and they're just like me!"

What would you do differently? While mothers said they would be more liberal, fathers everywhere said they would be more strict, particularly in the Southwest. Sixty-seven percent said they would own their own home, 89 percent said they would plan better for their children's education, and 46 percent said they would be better role models. Virtually all said they would plan ahead better so more time and more money would be available. While mothers responded to this question mostly in terms of emotional support, fathers viewed the situation in more practical terms. And, just like their wives, fathers who had children late in life would have had them earlier, but fathers who had children early in life would have had them later.

What are your most memorable experiences? Being told "I love you, Daddy" topped the list of the most wonderful fatherhood experience. First words, first steps and winning a game ball followed closely behind. One father said that the best present he ever got from his children was "respect and interest in what I was doing." Another father will never forget the four calves his son gave him on Father's Day.

Homemade gifts topped the list of most frequent and most loved gifts, followed by fragrance, which is often exchanged between parents and children for birthdays, Christmas and Father's Day. Sporting goods and new clothes were the third and fourth most popular gifts.

Claiborne acknowledges that men are not so simple after all, and they are definitely not the one-dimensional characters the media would have us believe. The men in the survey certainly prove this point. As one father in Michigan said, "My life was pretty involved before I became a father but afterwards, it became more complex--and more fun--than I ever thought it would be."

Family reunion held

Forty-five descendants of pioneer Roberson families gathered recently at the American Legion Hall in Hereford for a family reunion.

T.W. Roberson, his five sons, Jesse P., John B., Charlie, Buck C. and Dick, and daughter Molly Witherspoon, and their families arrived at Summerfield in the winter of 1901, coming from Cleburne.

Family members reviewed the family history books compiled by Wilma Clark that she and other family members have been working on for several years, updating them with new information. There was also lots of visiting, picture-taking, and a covered dish luncheon.

Out of town guests included Louise Roberson, Dick and Marie Rogers and Nikki and Mitzi McQueary, of Summerfield; Bruce, Ruth and Amanda Roberson of Perryton; Deward and Ruth Roberson of Truth or Consequences, N.M.; Dale and Faye Roberson of Oceanside, Calif.; John and Shirley Higley of Tucson, Ariz.; Horace, Christine and Roger Roberson of Lubbock; Clarence, Beverly and Deborah Roberson, and Jerry, Terry, John and Justin Bymaster, all of Enid, Okla.; Charles and Josie Mae Wilson of Carlsbad, N.M.; Mark, Carol, Benjamin, Rebecca and Jonathan Roberson and Lillian Smith, all of Amarillo.

Those from Hereford were Bernard and Opal Roberson; Don, Vikki, Tamera and D.L. Betts; James and Donna Smith; Eldon and Bobbie Roberson; Madge Roberson; and L.J. and Wilma Clark.

The next reunion will be in May 1993.

NEW YORK (AP) - Kevin Costner, who starred in the baseball movies "Field of Dreams" and "Bull Durham," speaks up for the national pastime in a 60-second spot promoting ESPN's coverage of the College World Series.

Costner completed the spot Tuesday, during a break in the filming of director Oliver Stone's movie about the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

"At some time in our life, we all wish we could return to a time when life was simpler; when all we wore was the wonderful mantle of childlike innocence; when springtime and life itself seemed eternal," Costner says in the spot recorded in New Orleans.

The promotion will first air Friday, when ESPN begins its College World Series coverage.

Costner recently won the best director Oscar for "Dances With Wolves," in which he also starred.

Hints from Heloise

Q. I've lost the formula for homemade prewash clothes spray that was in your column. Could you reprint it? It is great! — Helen Marrs, Venice, Fla.

A. Be glad to. Combine equal parts of dishwashing liquid (be sure it doesn't contain bleach), ammonia and water. Put it in a spray bottle with a label identifying it as prewash spray.

Wash the clothing immediately after applying the prewash spray. If you wait, it could cause staining. — Heloise

COTTON BALLS

Dear Heloise: Cotton balls no longer spill from a ripped-open plastic bag at my house.

I fill an empty square tissue box with them. I find it holds a package of 300, keeps them neat and clean and they pop up when needed. — Sandra Miller, Rochester, N.Y.

And you are recycling too! Good for you. — Heloise

SUMMER CAMP

Dear Heloise: To make it easier for my children to get dressed when they were at camp, I used a separate plastic bag for each day's clothes.

Each morning they pulled out a bag and dressed. No worries about losing a sock or not being able to find a shirt. It also kept the clean clothes from getting mixed in with the dirty ones. — B. Shuman, Savannah, Ga.

THE ROADS OF TEXAS is the culmination of a mammoth project that has involved many individuals for over two years. When you get your copy of THE ROADS OF TEXAS you'll wonder how you ever traveled the state without it.

This 172 page atlas contains maps that show the complete Texas road system (all 284,000 miles) plus just about every city and community! Texas A&M University Cartographics Laboratory staff members produced the maps, based on county maps from the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation. The details shown are amazing—county and local roads, lakes, reservoirs, streams, dams, historic sites, pumping stations, golf courses, cemeteries, mines and many other features too numerous to list.
